ANGLO-INDIAN PROTESTANT MISSION.—On Thursday last a meeting was held at the Protestant Alliance, 9, Strand, London, on behalf of this Mission. Mr. A. H. Guinness presided; referring to the unchecked advance of Romanism and Ritualism in India he regretted to find that the Jesuits were making unprecedented strides in that country lately, and that the "Concordat" was recently established between the Pope and the King of Portugal, without even asking the permission of Her Majesty the Queen. Rev. J. Nelson Foley, secretary, detailed the reasons which led to the formation of the Mission, and showed that the rapid strides of Romanism, Ritualism, and Infidelity among our own fellow subjects in India should be strenuously resisted. Others also spoke in favour of the movement.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.—2.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.

BESIDE THE DRYING BROOK.

We are studying the life of a man of like passions with ourselves; weak where we are weak, failing where we would fail; but who stood singlehanded against his people, and stemmed the tide of idolatry and sin, and turned a nation back to God. And he did it by the use of resources which are within reach of us all. This is the fascination of the story. Prove to us that he did as he did by the spell of some secret which is hidden from us meaner men; convince us that he was cast in a heroic mould to which we can lay no claim; then we must lay aside the story, disappointment has overcast our interest, it is a model we cannot copy, an ideal we cannot realise, a vision that mocks us as it fades into the azure of the past.

But this is not the case. This man, by whom God threshed the mountains, was only a worm at the best. This pillar in God's temple was, by nature, a reed, shaken by the breath of the slightest zephyr. This Prophet of Fire, who shone like a torch, was originally but a piece of smoking flax. Faith made him all he became, and faith will do as much for us, if only we can exercise it as he did, to appropriate the might of the eternal God. All power is in God, and it hath pleased Him to store it all in the risen Saviour, as in some vast reservoir; and those stores are brought into human hearts by the Holy Ghost; and the Holy Ghost is given according to the measure of our receptivity and faith. Oh for Elijah's receptiveness, that we might be as full of Divine power as he was, and as able, therefore, to do exploits for God and truth!

But, before this can happen, we must pass through the same education as he. You must go to Cherith and Zarephath before you can stand on Carmel. Even the faith you have must be pruned and educated and matured, that it may become strong enough to subdue kingdoms, work righteousness, and turn to flight armies of aliens.

Notice, then, the successive steps in God's education of his servants.

I. God's servants must learn to take one step at a time.—This is an elementary lesson, but it is hard to learn. No doubt Elijah found it so. Before he left Thisbe for Samaria, to deliver the message that burdened his soul, he would naturally inquire, what he should do when he had delivered it. How would he be received? What would be the outcome? Whither should he go to escape the vengeance of Jezebel, who had not shrunk from slaying with the sword prophets less dauntless than himself? If he had asked those questions of God, and waited for a reply before he left his highland home, he would never have gone at all. Our Father never treats his children so. He only shows us one step at a time; and that, the next; and He bids us take it in faith. If we look up into his face, and say; "but if I take this step, which is certain to involve me in difficulty, what shall I do next;" the heavens will be dumb, save with the one repeated message, "Take it and trust Me."

But directly God's servant took the step to which he was led, and delivered the message, then "the word of the Lord came to him, saying, Get thee hence, hide thyself by the brook Cherith." So it was afterwards; it was only when the brook had dried up, and the stream had dwindled to pools, and the pools to drops, and the drops had died away in the sand: only then did the word of the Lord come to him, saying, "Arise, get thee to Zarephath."

I like that phrase, "the word of the Lord came to him." He did not need to go to search for it; it came to him. And so it will come to you. It may come through the Word of God, or through a distinct impression made on your heart by the Holy Ghost, or through circumstances, but it will find you out, and tell you what you are to do. have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go unto the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do" (Acts ix. 6).

It may be that for long you have had upon your mind some strong impression of duty; but you have held back, because you could not see what the next step would be. Hesitate no longer. Step out upon what seems to be the impalpable mist, you will find a slab of adamant beneath your feet; and, every time you put your foot forward, you will find that God has prepared a stepping-stone, and the next, and the next; each as you come to it. The bread is by the day. The manna is every morning. The strength is according to the moment's need. God does not give all the directions at once, lest we should get confused; He tells us just as much as we can remember and do; then we must look to Him for more; and so we learn, by easy stages, the sublime habits of obedience and trust.

II. God's Servants must be taught the value of the Hidden Life. "Get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and hide thyself by the brook Cherith." The man who is to take a high place before his fellows, must take a low place before his God; and there is no better manner of bringing a man down, than by dropping him suddenly out of a sphere to which he was beginning to think himself essential, teaching him that he is not at all necessary to God's plan, and compelling him to consider in the sequestered vale of some Cherith how mixed are his motives, and how insignificant his strength.

So the Master dealt with his Apostles. When, on one occasion, they returned to Him, full of themselves, and flushed with success, He quietly said, "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place." We are too strong, too full of self, for God to use us. We vainly imagine that we are something, and that God cannot dispense with us. How urgently we need that God should bury our self-life in the darkness of a Cherith or a tomb, so as to hide it, and keep it in the place of death. We must not be surprised, then, if sometimes our Father says:—"There, child, thou hast had enough of this hurry, and publicity, and excitement; get thee hence, and hide thyself by the brook; hide thyself in the Cherith of the sick-chamber; or in the Cherith of disappointed hopes; or in the Cherith of bereavement; or in some solitude from which the crowds have ebbed away." Happy is he, who can reply, "This, thy will, is also mine, I flee unto Thee to hide me. Hide me in the secret of thy tabernacle, and beneath the covert of thy wings."

Every saintly soul that would wield great power with men must win it in some hidden Cherith. A Carmel triumph always pre-supposes a Cherith, and a Cherith always leads to a Carmel. We cannot give out, unless we have previously taken in. We cannot exorcise the devils which possess men, unless we have first entered into our closets and shut our doors, and spent hours of rapt intercourse with God. The acquisition of spiritual power is impossible unless we can hide ourselves from men and from ourselves in some deep gorge, where we may absorb the power of the eternal God, as vegetation through long ages absorbed those qualities of sunshine, which it now gives back through burning coal.

Bishop Andrewes had his Cherith, in which he spent five hours every day in prayer and devotion. John Welsh had it, who thought the day ill spent which did not witness eight or ten hours of closet communion. David Brainerd had it in the woods of North America, which were the favourite scene of his devotions. Christmas Evans had it in his long and lonely journeys amid the hills of Wales. Fletcher of Madeley had it, who would often leave his class-room for his private chamber, and spend hours upon his knees with his students, pleading for the fulness of the Spirit till they could kneel no longer. Or, passing back to the blessed age from which we date the centuries, Patmos, the seclusion of the Roman prisons, the Arabian desert, the hills and vales of Palestine, are for ever memorable as the Cheriths of those who have made our modern world. Our Lord found his Cherith at Nazareth, and in the wilderness of Judæa, amid the olives one of us therefore can dispense with some Cherith where the sounds of earthly toil and human voices are exchanged for the murmur of the waters of quietness which are fed from the throne; and where we may taste the sweets and imbibe the power of a life hidden with Christ, and in Christ by the power of the Holy Ghost. Sometimes a human spirit, intent on its quest, may even find its Cherith in a crowd; of such an one God is its all-sufficient abode, and the secret place of the Most High its most holy place.

III. God's servants must learn to trust God absolutely.—We yield at first a timid obedience to a command which seems to involve manifest impossibilities; but when we find that God is even better than his word, our faith groweth exceedingly, and we advance to further feats of faith and service. This is how God trains his young eaglets to fly. At last nothing is impossible. This is the key to Elijah's experience.

How strange to be sent to a brook, which would of course be as subject to the drought as any other! How contrary to nature to suppose that ravens, which feed on carrion, would find such food as man could eat, or, having found it, would bring it regularly morning and evening! How unlikely, too, that he could remain secreted from the search of the bloodhounds of Jezebel anywhere within the limits of Israel! But God's command was clear and unmistakeable. It left him no alternative than to obey. "So he went and did according to the word of the Lord."

One evening, as we may imagine, Elijah reached the narrow gorge, down which the brook bounded, with musical babble, toward the Jordan. On either side the giant cliffs towered up, enclosing a little patch of blue sky. The interlacing boughs of the trees made a natural canopy in the hottest noon. All along the streamlet's course the moss would make a carpet of richer hue and softer texture than could be found in the palaces of kings. And, yonder, came the young ravens—"the young ravens that lack and suffer hunger," bringing bread and flesh. What a lesson was this of God's power to provide for his child! In after days Elijah would often recur to it, as dating a new epoch in his life. "I can never doubt God again. I am thankful that He shut me off from all other supplies, and threw me back on Himself. I am sure that He will never fail me, in whatsoever circumstances of strait or trial through which He may call me to pass."

There is a strong emphasis on the word, there. "I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there." Elijah might have preferred many hiding-places to Cherith; but that was the only place to which the ravens would bring his supplies; and, as long as he was there, God was pledged to provide for him. Our supreme thought should be, "Am I where God wants me to be?" If so, God will work a direct miracle, sooner than suffer us to perish for lack. If the younger son chooses to go to the far country of his own accord, he may be in danger of dying of starvation among his swine; but if the Father send him there, he shall have enough and to spare. God sends no soldier to the warfare on his own charges. He does not expect us to attend to the duties of the field, and the commissariat. The manna always accompanies the pillar of cloud. If we do his will on earth as in heaven, He will give us daily bread. "Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

We will not stay to argue the probability of this story being true. It is enough that it is written here. And the presence of the supernatural presents no difficulties to those who can say, "Our Father," and who believe in the resurrection of our Lord Jesus. But if corroboration were needed, it could be multiplied an hundredfold from the experience of living people, who have had their needs supplied in ways quite as marvellous as the coming of ravens to the lonely prophet.

A little boy, having read this incident with his widowed mother one wintry night, as they sat in a fireless room, beside a bare table, asked her if he might set the door open, for God's must be on their way. The burgomaster of that German town, passing by, was attracted by the sight of the open door and entered, inquiring the cause. When he learnt the reason, he said, "I will be God's raven," and relieved their need then and afterwards. Ah, reader, God has an infinite fertility of resource; and if thou art doing his work, where He would have thee, He will supply thy need, though the heavens fall. Only trust Him.

IV. God's servants are often called to sit by drying brooks.—"It came to pass at the end of days, that the brook dried up." "The whole country was like a heath; fields, and parks, and woods were scorched as by fire; fountains and brooks were mere beds of stones. No clouds drew their welcome veil over the burning orb of day. No dewdrops wept refreshing tears over the parched vegetation. The brook began to sing less cheerily, till it became a mere silver thread stealing at the foot of the great stones it used to cover; at last it stood in dwindling pools. The birds fled. The garden was a desert."

What did Elijah think? Did he think that God had forgotten him? Did he begin to make plans for himself? This would have been human; but we will hope that he waited quietly for God, quieting himself as a weaned child, as he sang, "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectatien is from Him."

Many of us have had to sit by drying brooks; perhaps some are sitting by them now. The drying brook of popularity, ebbing away as from John the Baptist. The drying brook of health, smitten by a creeping paralysis, or slow consumption. The drying brook of money, slowly dwindling before the demands of sickness, bad debts, or other people's extravagance. The drying brook of friendship, which for long has been diminishing, and threatens soon to cease. Ah, it is hard to sit beside a drying brook, much harder than to face the prophets of Baal on Carmel.

Why does God let them dry? He wants to teach us not to trust in his gifts, but in Himself. He wants to drain us of self, as He drained the apostles by ten days of waiting before Pentecost. He wants to loosen our roots ere He removes us to some other sphere of service and education. He wants to put in stronger contrast the river of throne-water that never dries. Let us learn these lessons, and turn from our failing Cheriths to our unfailing Saviour. All sufficiency resides in Him, unexhausted by the flight of the ages, undiminished by the thirst of myriads of saints, who drink yonder in the uplands, near its source, as we do in these lower lands of earth and time. "The river of God is full of water." "He that drinketh of this water shall thirst again, but he that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, but it shall be in him a well of water, springing up into everlasting life." "Drink abundantly, O beloved!"

THE MISSION SHIP.—The launch of the Herald of Mercy took place at Troon, N.B, on the [illegible]th inst., the vessel being named by the Marchioness of Ailsa. The craft will hold on deck and below nearly four hundred persons. On Monday last a week of evangelistic meetings was commenced, at the close of which the Herald of Mercy will sail to various ports for mission work.

IN MEMORY OF JERRY McAULEY.—The superintendent of the old McAuley Mission, 316 Water-street, New York, Mr. S. H. Hadley, who was converted from a life of drunkenness five years ago at Jerry's Mission, has caused a tablet to be placed in the wall of the old mission, where Brother McAuley first began his famous work of saving the drunkard, the thief, and the outcast. At the dedication and unveiling of this tablet, a crowd, such as Water-street has probably never seen before, gathered at the mission. Mrs. McAuley, now of the Cremorne Mission, was so affected by the memories called up by the occasion, that it was with great effort she controlled her emotion sufficiently to speak. She closed by giving her own experience; how the Lord found her, seventeen years before, a poor street drunkard. Her home was in Cherry-street, just back of the Mission, in a miserable room, and her bed a bundle of straw on the floor. Some missionaries found her here, and subsequently she gave her heart to God, and had been the means, through Christ, of

THE OFFICERS' DEFEAT.

A party of gay young officers were walking up and down the Newbridge platform, waiting the arrival of the up train to Dublin, where they were going to a ball.

As the train came up to the station, with the conservativeness of railway travellers, they looked into each first-class compartment to find one empty. At length they decided on a carriage in which a gentleman sat, reading. It was such an ordinary occurrence to see a traveller reading; and they were so occupied with one another, laughing and talking together, that they did not at first notice the book he was intent upon; or, had they seen it was the Bible, they would not have chosen him for a companion.

Soon after leaving the station they began to smoke; the one sitting next the gentleman saying, "I hope you don't object to smoking?" "Indeed I do." "Then so much the worse for you." At which sally they all laughed.

He said nothing for a time; then leaning over to the officer next him he inquired, "Do you believe on the Lord Jesus Christ?" "Shut your mouth," was the ready rejoinder. Quietly looking the officer in the face, he said, "If you don't believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, you'll be damned." "Who asked you your opinion? don't be annoying us." "My not annoying you will not alter the fact; if you don't believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, you'll be damned."

"What business have you speaking to us? We don't want your cant." "Your not wanting my cant does not alter the fact; if you don't believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, you'll be damned." "Let us sit on him." "Your sitting on me will not alter the fact; if you don't believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, you'll be damned." "Shove him out of the window." "Your shoving me out of the window will not alter the fact; if you don't believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, you'll be damned."

It was getting too hot for the young fellows, and the train coming to a station, they cried—"Let us get out of this into another carriage, and leave the old hypocrite to himself." He followed them to the door, and spoke aloud after them—"Your leaving the carriage does not alter the fact; if you don't believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, you'll all be damned."

Some years passed; and this gentleman was travelling in England by the L. & N.W.R. At Chester, he went into the refreshment room, and while there, a military looking man came in. He looked at our friend once or twice, as if to make sure he was right, then stepping over to where he stood, said, "Pardon me! if I don't greatly err, we have met before. Do you recollect travelling in Ireland by the G.S. & W.R., and a party of young fellows getting into your compartment at Newbridge?" "Perfectly."

"Well, I am one of that party, and the one who sat next you, to whom you addressed your question. I was thoughtless and worldly then, and we were all engrossed with the gaiety of the scene we were going to that night. But your sole answer to our many insults, 'If you don't believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, you'll be damned,' lodged in my heart. I went with the rest, and dressed for the ball; but I could hardly see to attire myself properly, your words swam before my eyes.

"I attended the ball, but could enjoy nothing; for every voice seemed to re-echo your sentence. I could endure it no longer; I pleaded indisposition, and withdrew. How I cried for mercy! and, thank God, I saw that if the terrible negative was awfully true, the grand positive, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.' (Acts xvi. 31), was none the less happily so. And like the Philippian jailer, I 'rejoiced, believing in God.'"

MR. & MRS. JOSEPH lately left London for the Holy Land, to establish and work a mission to the Jews, in and about Jerusalem. Our readers,

WORK FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Writing with respect to the many calls to service, in all parts of the world, for Christian young ladies, Mrs. Dawbarn, lady superintendent of the Doric Lodge branch of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions, says:—

In East London we want young ladies to work amongst the thousands of girls employed in factories during the day. For want of a helping hand they too often frequent the theatres, public-houses, and music-halls, or parade the streets at night, and so go to ruin. There are also thousands of lads, equally needing sympathy and kindness, instruction and guidance; whose homes hardly deserve the name, and whose parents are all unfit to control and lead them aright. The lads want something pleasant, some freshness and brightness after leaving a hard day's work, something to learn, or something to do, and a lady may obtain a wonderful hold of them, and be made a life-long blessing, by spending her evenings among them. There are men, too, whom a kind word may win from the public-houses, and poor, hard-working, bravely enduring women, to whom you might be a ray of sunshine.

Beyond these there are the millions of heathen in lands afar who are waiting for you! Are there some of you who do not realise this, who have never heard the command, "Go ye into all the world"? Perhaps some of you are ready and willing, even anxious, to be used of God; but you do not know how to find out what you can do best, or where you are most needed. Let me tell you of our Doric Lodge Home, at Bow, which exists to help young Christian women in your perplexity. Two years since Mrs. Grattan Guinness established this Training Home in East London, having for its first object the preparation of earnest Christian women for missionary work. Many, since its commencement, have passed through their training in this Home, and are now in foreign lands acquiring the languages and winning the confidence of Mohammedan and heathen peoples. One is in New Jersey, one in Brazil, one taking hospital work in Edinburgh, and looking forward to going to the Congo, four are in North Africa, and four more now with us are expecting to join them early this summer. We should welcome you to our circle if you are longing to serve the Lord Christ either at home or abroad. We have room enough, and work enough and to spare. Our neighbourhood is a grand training-ground, and we live in a missionary atmosphere.

No doubt there are some to whom the prospect of being made a means of blessing to souls in England, seems a more possible and practicable thing than that of becoming a missionary to the heathen. If that is your call, let me invite you to come and try systematic home mission work. We should be pleased to receive any lady willing to take active part in the different operations of our work in East London, including men and women's night schools, house-to-house visitation, addressing mothers' meetings, cottage meetings, Bible-classes, factory girls' meetings, out-door work, &c. The ages of our students and deaconesses vary between twenty-two or three and thirty-five. Those only who have sound health, and who can stand a continuously active life should entertain the thought of coming to us. Full particulars will be sent to any lady communicating either with Mrs. Guinness, at Harley House, Bow, E., or with myself, at 28, Bow-road, E.

TRAVELLING CHILDREN.—Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, writes, giving some glaring instances of ignorance of the rudiments of education he has met with among gipsy and van children. He states that he explained his simple plans, and the Bill now before Parliament for improving the condition of the children, and no one objected to it. It is time, he adds, that the hand of civilisation opened a door into the many thousands of dark abodes that move to and fro before our eyes, to let a ray of light upon the tent and van dwellers and their children to guide them heavenward.

MR. SAM SMALL AND ATHEISM.

In a recent interview this Southern journalist-evangelist said, in answer to the question whether he was not at one time an atheist or agnostic :—

No, but I tried very hard to become a follower of Bob Ingersoll. When I was a stenographer at Washington I went to hear Ingersoll frequently, applauded his jokes, and tried my best to become thoroughly en rapport with his infidelity. I could not. Every time I heard him and imagined I was becoming his disciple, I always thought of my mother, how I had said prayers at her knee, and how she had inspired me to read the Bible; and these fond and sweet memories, trooping back to me across the dark years of my manhood from the innocent days of my youth, were angels of warning that kept me true to the faith she taught me. Thus I was saved from the fate of a howling infidel. But Bob Ingersoll is not doing any harm now. I remember when his lectures and writings were sold on every train, and were conspicuous on every bookstand. You do not see any of his works offered for sale on the trains now, and on the bookstands they are piled away in some unnoticeable corner where they do not attract any attention. Agnosticism is not gaining ground in this country.

CHINESE WOMEN.

In a letter given in this month's China's Millions, Miss Annie Taylor, says :—

Lan-Chau is a very wicked city; the marriage relationship is not looked upon as sacred. Twice when visiting the sick I have had it said to me, in reference to a wife, "Do make her well, for if she dies I have no money to buy another!" A woman here is just looked upon as so much merchandise; a girl is either sold when quite young to a man she has never seen, and who will very likely beat her, or she may be sold as a slave. Wife-beating is common even among the better class. Is it to be wondered at that many of them commit suicide? Three girls took opium on the same day in different parts of the city, and all died. I was called to one of them, aged eleven, but was too late to save her. I met with a poor little girl who had been sold as a slave. She told me that her father died, and her mother and youngest sister went away, she did not know where; that her aunt took her and sold her to a mandarin's wife, who was very cruel to her, beating her and not giving her enough to eat (she looked half-starved). Now she had been sold again, and was on her way to another mandarin's wife.

Two little girls, living in the same compound as I do, have been taken away from their mother; their father being dead, the grandmother sold them, with their mother, who was to be the wife of the purchaser. He was kind to them, but, the grandmother dying, their great-aunt, who is my landlady, got one of their uncles to go to the ya-men and claim them, and give them over to her, as the eldest is now of a saleable age. Poor little things—she does beat them so unmercifully!

The women are very ignorant, not one in a hundred being able to read. A large proportion —about sixty per cent.—smoke opium. They are sunken low in degradation and vice, their very faces being disfigured by passion. They are thieves and liars, never telling the truth even in little things. And such are the mothers of immortal beings whom they are training for eternity! Who will come and help to raise them? There is no one but myself in this great city to witness for Jesus amongst them.

BRIXTON SHAFTESBURY MISSION. — The Ragged-school opened at this hall twelve months since has grown till now there is a nightly attendance of between forty and fifty. Comparatively little is done for the large number of lads who are roaming the streets of this neighbourhood. Earnest men and women willing to engage in this important work will be cordially welcomed. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Kate Cunningham, 12,

THE WATER OF LIFE.

"The Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures has, since its foundation, ten years ago, freely given away, through judicious distributors, in about fifty different countries, including India, Australia, Persia, Argentine Republic, Jamaica, Demerara, Siam, Madagascar, &c, Bibles, New Testaments, and Gospels." So runs a paragraph at the commencement of the very interesting little report just issued. The total number thus circulated almost reaches three quarters of a million. Last year over £1600 was spent in this work. As we have before stated, every penny of the funds goes direct to the distribution of the Scriptures.

We get a glimpse of the work and its effects, in the reports from twenty different countries. One correspondent writes, "Your Society is of the greatest importance to France;" and another, "We know of many, young and old, converted through the Bibles and Testaments given by your Association."

At another place, a Testament given to a young girl having been thrown on the fire by her father, she walked thirty-one miles to get another. After a long time the father's heart was touched, and the entire family are now rejoicing in the salvation freely bestowed upon them. At a village in Spain a priest, who asked one who had a Testament to let him look at it, saying it was a bad book, immediately tore it up, but an evangelist gave the woman another, to her great joy. Mr. E. C. Newbery writes from Leghorn of wonderful blessing wrought simply by the reading of Testaments. Of one man it is said, "It is marvellous how God has taught him!" And others are rejoicing in Jesus. From many other parts comes testimony as to the way in which God is honouring his Word amongst all classes of people, thousands of whom have never before had a copy of the Scriptures in their hands, and whom it would be simply impossible to reach in any other way. Many are too poor to buy, but receive the Word with much gladness.

From the far East again, reports equally encouraging have been received. An Armenian pastor, says that, during the past year and a half, twenty-nine souls have come to a knowledge of the truth by reading the Bible in their own language. One missionary in India says that, while out in a tent, he visited 265 villages, travelled over 495 miles, and held 648 meetings, left copies of the Word all the way he went, in palaces, castles, houses, temples, and schools, as well as in the homes of the poor, and the retreat of the recluse. Thus it is seen how wonderfully God is blessing the work set on foot by Mrs. Robertson. But millions of human beings are yet unreached, who have never possessed a copy of God's Word. Those who would have a part in the glad work of spreading the Gospel light should communicate with Mrs. Robertson, at 1, Oak Hill Park, Hampstead, N.W.

SOUTHALL.—Miss H. J. Baxter, The Green, Southall, Middlesex, writes that the Gospel and temperance effort, carried on for the workers in the brickfields, continues to be much needed and much blessed. Help is required in connection with the meetings in the barn, and also in sustaining the temperance vans that visit the men and boys at work in the brickfields. Perhaps some kind friend might lend a pony for this latter effort. Miss Baxter will be glad to hear from any sympathising friends.

ASHLEY MISSION, BETHNAL GREEN.—The annual meeting was held on Monday, May 10, the members of the various classes having been previously entertained at tea through the kindness of Lady Smith. The chairman, Hon. Lionel Ashley, presented an encouraging report, telling of vigorous life and growth in the many meetings and classes. After earnest addresses from Lady Hope and Mr. Harris, Mr. T. A. Denny, as treasurer, expressed an earnest hope that new subscribers would rally to the support of the work. The hon. lady superintendent is Miss Bontein,

Mr. J. SPIERS at TOTTENHAM.

The once rural village of Tottenham is rapidly becoming one of the densely populated suburbs of the great Metropolis. The parish numbers more than 50,000 inhabitants. There is much to sadden the Christian heart in the state of things which prevails, but a blessed "time of refreshing" has been given during the last fortnight through the visit to this neighbourhood of Mr. Josiah Spiers, of the "Children's Special Service Mission."

For some weeks before the mission commenced it had been the subject of prayerful thought and effort. Mr. Spiers met the workers, and encouraged them by his bracing, helpful words. The matter was taken up warmly by Christians of various denominations who worked together in this effort for the children; the result was indeed cheering. Although the weather was not favourable during great part of the time the attendance was very good, and the interest manifested was most marked. The after meetings were very encouraging, and many happy children are now rejoicing in the sense of a Saviour's pardoning love. Great is the responsibility resting on parents and teachers to care for these lambs of the flock.

Not the least part of the mission has been the wide-spread dissemination of picture leaflets and Gospel hymns which have found their way through these services into hundreds of homes. We believe that if similar missions could be held in all the places round London, great blessing would result.

BLACKGANG MISSION, I.W.

There has been at Wellow and Yarmouth, I.W., during the past month, a time of spiritual revival and great blessing from the Lord. At each place Miss Hamilton and Miss Reade have conducted a fortnight's special services. It is especially encouraging to mention, in connection with Wellow, that ten years ago these same workers were the instruments of a great outpouring of the Lord's Spirit here. Then 200 souls were won for Christ during special services lasting nearly a month, and great has been the joy to find that with comparatively few exceptions these have stood firm in their witness for the Saviour; many of them have come out as faithful workers for Him, and were amongst the active helpers on the present occasion. To the unspeakable joy of seeing the rich fruits of their labours in the past, there was added now that of seeing a goodly number won for Christ, and acknowledging his goodness in bringing them to Himself. Amongst other cases of blessing to families, a father, son, and three grown-up daughters were gathered in.

At Yarmouth there were many cases of conversion, besides a goodly array of children who, at a meeting expressly convened for them, remained behind, desiring to be led to Jesus. With the aid of the Bible Christian and Baptist ministers, open-air services were held with marked success. An interesting case of conversion was that of a sailor belonging to a ship which came into port whilst the services were being held, and who said he had been seeking the blessing for years. Much good work was done here also amongst those who frequented the public-house and attended no place of worship.

BETHESDA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH. — In connection with this work there are three mission halls, all well used and worked. In them and other rooms of the borough of Portsmouth there are nearly fifty Gospel, Sunday-school, Temperance, and other mission meetings continually going on, Sunday and every week. There are four paid missionaries, three of whom devote their whole time to the work. The Superintendent, Commander Key, R.N., Downham-street, Edward's-road, Southsea, will welcome the help of friends in MISSION WORK IN EGYPT.

We are permitted to give the following portions of a private letter, written to a friend in England, which give a glimpse into the work of the Presbyterian missions in Egypt:—

We left Cairo to visit our churches north of Asyout, took train for Asyout, and then, on our dear old mission boat, commenced the duties of the "trip." Soon we shall have spent a month at the work, and thirty stations have been visited; they have so multiplied, the last year or two, by Divine blessing, as to be very near each other, and so Dr. Lansing has had incessant work day and night, and very little time for rest. I cannot tell you how intensely interesting these visits have been, and how our hearts have been cheered. The people are so earnest in trying to provide themselves with churches, where they may worship, and which may also serve for school purposes for the children, and seem so happy in their new love, and in the appreciation of their meagre privileges.

Besides these stations we are constantly having calls to villages scarcely enlightened, but longing to share the blessings which others enjoy, but neither time nor strength permits us now to respond to these pressing calls. How often we long for the strength and vigour of earlier years, to do more than it is now possible to do! Still, at all these thirty stations, Dr. Lansing has preached and often had communion services, besides examining schools, and attending to the varied wants of each. He often comes home after a long and weary day, so happy, saying as he enters, "Oh! I have had a glorious time today! What delight to preach to people so, so hungry for the word." I have visited the women, as far as I have been able, and have enjoyed it much. They give me a cordial welcome, and gather in crowds at my feet, to hear what I have to say for their spiritual good.

In some places there is quite a large membership, and some are able to read. I am often struck with their attainments in Divine knowledge, and their simple, trusting faith. At one place I found only five connected with the Church, but several had learned to read, and said: "Three years ago we lived and toiled like the poor beasts around us." At another place I found that twenty had been received into the Church, consistent Christian women, and regular in their attendance at the nightly meetings. At another twenty-four women were in membership, fourteen of whom had learned to read. Here the poor people had, with the help of £16 from the Mission, built a large comfortable building, with strong walls, well roofed; the furniture—some plain benches, a small table, and a lamp. This is all they aspire to.

The women preferred the carpet to sit on, which was deep desert sand, and more than fifty were thus huddled together before me. As I sat and looked upon them and partook with so many of them of the precious elements of the Lord's supper which Dr. Lansing dispensed, I felt that of these humble ones it might be truly said: "The people which sat in darkness saw great light, and to them which sit in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." When they were building this church, the women carried the water in jars on their heads from the river (a distance of more than half a mile) for making the mortar, and were so happy in the loving service.

At Minieh I found one of our school girls of Cairo the wife of the native pastor. She is a pastor's wife, indeed, and doing a noble work amongst the women. Yesterday I rode as usual a bridleless donkey to a new station, Dr. Lansing preceding me. There was a wonderful scene as I approached a large and beautiful palm grove near the town, and a large and really imposing building was the prominent thing to be seen on the outskirts of the village; it is now nearly finished, and has been built at the sole expense of the Sheik of the town, who within the last few years has been enlightened, and now he and

CLUB FOR WORKING MEN, EALING.

This Club was opened about three years ago by Miss Peck. Moved with distress at the sight of the drunkenness in her neighbourhood, she began single-handed to try what she could do to gather the men out of the public houses; the work, as might be expected, has steadily grown upon her hands. Those of us who see a little behind the scenes wonder at the courage and power with which she has laboured during this time, sometimes quite alone, and with constant discouragements and difficulties on all sides. Miss Peck has given up her own large house, and taken two small ones that there might be a building entirely for the Club.

A most outrageous case of child assault has lately stirred in some of the people here a desire to speak plainly to working mothers about the necessity for watching and warning their little ones. Mrs. Wookey, of the Gospel Purity Association, gave an address last week, and a small but interested party gathered to hear her. The mothers were deeply moved. Mrs. Wookey's clear, powerful, natural speech appealed to every heart.

SALVATION ARMY RESCUE WORK.

We are having much blessing in our dealings with the poor girls, and even more encouragement in the result of the work than I had dared to hope. Those who are outside in the street seem to be learning more every day to look to us as true friends. The women whom I have on the streets at night would have no difficulty at all to get them to come home, but for the most part of our time we are unable to invite them, as we have no room to take them in. We have sent over three hundred girls to situations, and up to the present we have a total of about seventy unsatisfactory out of the 563 girls who have passed through the Homes, and we are praying and believing for all our lost ones.

It is, to me, a wonderful and encouraging fact that we have heard of or found again (with the exception of two or three) all those whom we lost sight of during our first twelve months' work, while the Home was in Whitechapel; and a great many of those whom we then considered hopeless are now doing well. This encourages me to have faith for all those whom God has ever put into our hands, and, at any rate, I feel sure that they hear such truths, and are dealt with in such a way, as they shall never forget, if they are with us only two or three days.

I am only grieved that we cannot do more, but our funds are very low at present, and, of course, even with the greatest care, this work becomes very expensive. Please continue to pray for us, that the Lord may keep us on the right lines, and make of me and all my helpers in this work, women of mighty faith and boundless love.—Yours in God's service,

Florence E. Booth.

HARDLEY (near Loddon) has recently been visited with a revival of the work of God in connection with the labours of Mr. J. Kendall, of the Y.M.C.A., Tenby, Wales.

THE VILLAGES OF ENGLAND.—In a little book published by James Clarke & Co., 13, Fleet-street, there is an account of mission work in our villages in connection with the Congregational Union, and of the trials daily endured by those who engage in it. The Congregational Church Aid and Home Missionary Society has been in existence since 1819, and has expended in the interval more than half a million for the evangelisation of rural England. Last year it helped to sustain 1031 chapels and mission stations, these aided churches being under the superintendence of 487 pastors, 129 missionaries and evangelists, and a large number of lay preachers. The work done by these is incalculably great, and it is not too much to say that our cities and places far away from these shores are the richer for their labours. Any information can be obtained from Rev. Andrew Mearns,

CHRISTIAN WORK IN SYRIA.

Not least in interest and importance of the various missionary operations going on at Beyrout, is Miss Taylor's Moslem Girls' School. In this Institution there are now thirty-two boarders and forty-five day scholars, and Rev. Thomas Young, of Ellon, N.B., who is at present in Syria, in connection with the mission work of the Established Church of Scotland, in a recent letter gives a most encouraging report of the work. All classes of Christians combine in saying Miss Taylor is doing a splendid work among a class that others cannot reach. Six of the girls, in age between thirteen and eighteen, were baptized by Rev. Dr. Jessop, the pastor of the native congregation, at the beginning of March.

The "John Wilson Memorial Schools" at Baakleen, in which there are now over 200 children, with from four to six teachers, are doing exceedingly well under the management of the American missionary of the district, Rev. W. Bird. Two ladies have just opened here a Medical Mission on a small scale. Communications with reference to this work should be sent to Mrs. E. Wilson Melville, Llandaff Deaf and Dumb School, Cardiff.

SCUTARI MEDICAL MISSION.

The work in which Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian are engaged in Scutari has lately encountered considerable opposition. Many speak against the Doctor in public and private, saying that he is not a physician, but a Protestant preacher (this being the most insulting name they think they can give), and that he is trying to make the people Protestants. Notwithstanding this, the work has gone forward in a most encouraging way. Since the opening of the dispensary there have been about 2300 patients in attendance.

One very sad case was that of a Mohammedan girl, whom her father brought from a considerable distance, carrying her all the way on his back. On seeing Dr. Alexandrian, he exclaimed, "Have mercy upon my only child—my only child!" But the child was already past recovery. Many who have been sufferers for years have had their health restored, and are delighted at being able to work again. To all medicine is given, and Christ is preached. Quite recently, several Jews have taken great interest in Christianity, and two of these are now believers, and come regularly for Bible instruction.

The chief difficulty at present arises from the want of a dispenser, who must, therefore, be engaged if the work is to be continued, and this will add about £4 a month to the expenses of the Mission. Communications should be addressed to Rev. T. W. Brown, secretary of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, 7, Adam-street, Strand.

MISSIONARY INFLUENCE IN FIJI.—A Blue-book of correspondence on the affairs of Fiji, just issued, gives interesting particulars of the condition of the natives in the islands, and the methods of applying English laws. Under the influence of missionary teaching most of the pernicious native customs have been abolished, and the material condition of the people greatly improved.

BARCELONA COTTAGE HOSPITAL.—For seven years this retreat for sick Protestants has proved of great value, inasmuch as those who have abjured the Romish faith can never hope to receive proper attention for either body or soul in the Catholic hospitals. It is managed conjointly by Pastors Simpson, Payne, and Empaytaz, who represent respectively the Wesleyan, Brethren, and Swiss Churches, and forms an agreeable bond of union in service. Sick members of these respective communities, who are poor in this world, find that the care which they receive greatly alleviates their pain, whilst the privilege of worshipping God without let or hindrance brings comfort to their souls. During the past year £11 was realised by the sale of used postage stamps. Friends who can collect such (except English penny stamps), will confer a benefit upon the work by sending them to Miss Von Mielecka, St. John's Vicarage, Ryde, I.W., who will also send a report and furnish in-

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS

(St. James's Hall, May 10.)

AT the breakfast which preceded the annual meeting, Sir Robert Phayre presided, and spoke cordially of the Society's operations. Rev. N. E. Douglas (Ealing) spoke upon "Our Witness." After showing that the solemn commission given to the first disciples was emphatically to be witnesses of the Lord's resurrection in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, wherever they went, he applied the thought of "witness-bearing" to the work of the Society. Rev. E. N. Thwaites (Salisbury) spoke upon "The Secret of Success," founding his remarks on 2 Samuel ii. 1.

At the annual meeting in the large hall, the Bishop of Exeter, who presided, strongly recommended a small tractate, written by Bishop Wordsworth, "Is not the Church of Rome the Babylon of the Apocalypse?" as one well fitted to stimulate Christians to take up the Society's work. They were now holding the fort on a cloudy and dark day; but he felt sure that in a very few years, if they remained faithful to the truth, there will be a rallying round the Society.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.

(Mansion House, May 10: The Lord Mayor, Chairman.)

IT is rather a significant fact that, though the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has been in existence for about eighty years, no effort was formulated for preventing cruelty to the still more helpless children until three years ago. There was need enough for the Society, however. The history of its efforts during that short period affords a terrible picture of the inhuman way in which too many men and women treat their offspring. The child is a nuisance or burden to be got rid of in some way or other. And, alas! the mother is not less to be dreaded than the father. "Oh, mother, don't whip me any more," pleaded a little girl as her mother approached, weapon in hand, to commence, within an hour of the first, a second outrage upon her bruise-covered back. Incredible tortures the committee has punished and tried to punish. These need to be particularised to give an adequate idea of their savagery.

> Strapping a deaf and dumb boy because it was extremely difficult to make him understand; drawing a red-hot poker before the eyes of a blind girl, and touching her hands with it (this was done by her brother, but in the presence of the parents, and for fun); after beating, locking up for the night in a coal-cellar with rats; immersing a dying boy in a tub of cold water for nearly an hour, "to get his dying done;" breaking a girl's arm while beating her with a broomstick, then setting her to scrub the floor with the broken arm folded to her breast, and whipping her for being so long about it; hanging a naked boy by tied hands from a hook at the ceiling, there flogging him; savagely beating with a loin-belt, felling with fists, and then kicking in the groin, on the abdomen, and face with working boots; lashing a three-year-old's face and neck with drayman's whip; a three-year-old's back with whalebone riding whip; throttling a boy, producing partial strangulation, to stop the screams of his pain; beating on scarcely-healed old sores, then thrusting the knob of a poker into the lad's throat, and holding it there "to stop the row." Six of the cases had ended fatally.

The scenes amid which these diabolical acts were perpetrated "range from the nursery of a fine old house, and the bedroom of a villa, to the cellar and attic," and the provocations pleaded in excuse were generally only childish errors. Some have even said they thus acted because they believed the Bible, and would thrash out of the heart of the little ones the wickedness in their nature. One man, who had wreaked his vengeance on a baby fifteen months old, admitted that he did so "to vex its mother's sister," who was very fond of the baby. In the list of cases, there were twenty-two of deliberate starvation. In two of these the parents now await their trial for murder. The prosecution was needed and richly deserved, and then to make it thorough. The report contains many practical suggestions for the better carrying out of the objects of the Society.

The Bishop of Derry pointed out that the Society does not interfere with the homes of the poor, but seeks to bring to punishment those who have been guilty of these unnatural offences. Mr. Justin M'Carthy, M.P., said the revelations of the report were sufficient to make the most contented optimist pause and ask whether there is so much reality as was sometimes fondly thought in the kind of glittering civilisation to which we have attained. He, as well as Mr. J. Lawrence Gane, Q.C., M.P., insisted on the necessity for legislation in order that the rights over their children extended even to brutal parents might be modified. The latter said the children have a right to look to the country for protection. Cardinal Manning, in pointing to one of the causes of this cruelty, denied the possibility of England being free, unless she was sober. He remarked also on the tact with which the inspectors had conducted their very delicate duties.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

(Exeter Hall, May 12: Mr. Colman, M.P., Chairman.)

THE heroes of this annual meeting were, without doubt, Revs. J. Lees and J. Chalmers. The former is well known for his zealous labours in China, and the latter for his romantic experiences while preaching the Gospel in the island of New Guinea. Four other speakers addressed the meeting; but, as one of them expressed it, they had "grace and sense" enough to be brief.

The Chairman pointed out that much of the work accomplished in foreign lands was due to native evangelists, and that was a result which could only be obtained after years of labour. As a nation we are a great colonising people, and we ought also to be a great christianising people. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, instead of reading the report, presented its most important points before the audience in an excellent address. With tender feeling he made allusion to the losses sustained during the year, and pleaded for the means with which to extend the Society's work. They could not afford to court defeat by limiting their forces, and while the help of the Native Christians was of great value they must not indolently thank God for them. Rev. Dr. E. R. Conder ridiculed those who said that at the present rate of missionary progress the conversion of the world was an impossibility. With such people the promises of God seem to go for nothing if they do not square with the rule of three.

Following Dr. Conder, Rev. Jonathan Lees, of Tientsin, spoke for over an hour. Of course, China was the burden of his theme. He described how that land is rapidly rising to a position of importance among the great powers of the world, and pleaded for its evangelisation, on the ground of the great influence that it would have in the conversion of Asia. Confucianism and Buddhism cannot accomplish the salvation of China; "the Light of Asia" has gone out in darkness. God has opened the doors of that great land to us, and is bidding us go in and possess it for Christ. Mr. Lees related a conversation he had with some poor heathen in one of their temples, when they had asked for a teacher, and said, "We cannot find the door." Yet there was One who had said, "I am the way!" In conclusion, the speaker pleaded for a return of the spirit of the Crusaders, in order to seek a living shrine for a living Christ in the hearts of the people of China.

Dr. Monro Gibson made a brief speech, in the course of which he said, with an eye to the drink traffic among native races, that the great need for the advancement of their work was an alliance between the Gospel and commerce.

Rev. James Chalmers received a most hearty welcome. The burden of his speech was the great claims of New Guinea, and he clearly showed that missionary work in that island is of a very hopeful character. He held the attenmethods of work, and related how, on several occasions, he had been mercifully delivered from death. He complained bitterly of the cowardly way in which Roman Catholics are taking advantage of the work already achieved, and at great peril; and spoke in glowing terms of the kindness he had often received from the natives. He believed that the winter of New Guinea's spiritual death was passing away, and that soon the spring of Christian life and faith would be seen.

B. and F. SAILORS' SOCIETY.

(Mansion House, May 6: Bishop of London, Chairman.)

THE report read by the secretary, Rev. Edward W. Matthews, refers gratefully to the work done by the Sailors' Institute, at Leghorn, Naples, Marseilles, Malta, and many other ports. Besides the visiting of ships, the Society's missionaries visit the sailors at their lodgings and in hospital. Upwards of six thousand Bibles and Testaments were sold in addition to the distribution of over 300,000 tracts, magazines, and books. As a result of all this effort, a very considerable improvement in the condition of the mercantile marine is noticeable. The moral condition of our seamen one hundred years ago, it was said, would defy description, but now the whole face of things is wonderfully changed for the better. It is proposed to establish a fund, to be called the Victoria and Albert Memorial Fund, to assist the aged missionaries of the Society.

The Chairman referred to the steady growth in the work of the Society during the sixty-nine years it has been established, and to the wonderfully improved condition of those amongst whom it laboured. The very nature of the work, he said, renders progress slow and gradual, and the results aimed at can only be brought about in a quiet, steady, and unostentatious manner. A resolution, laying it down as a solemn principle that it is the imperative duty of Christians on land to provide the means for the moral and religious improvement of sailors, was next adopted; as well as another expressing pleasure at the idea of the establishment of a national pension fund for sailors and their families, and suggesting that unclaimed wages and proceeds from wreck sales might be added to such a fund.

YOUNG MEN AT BREAKFAST.

(Aldersgate-street, May 10: Mr. G. Williams, Chairman.)

A MAY morning could scarcely have appeared more attractive than that which greeted those who gathered here for breakfast on Tuesday week. Any who had to make an early start must have felt well rewarded. Breakfast being over, Mr. George Williams discoursed on the freeing of the slave, the deliverance from the burdens of the past, and the recovery of lost possessions, which distinguished the year of jubilee in olden times.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson at once caught the ear of the meeting by the earnestness and freeness with which he spoke. "This is terribly in earnest," he was moved to exclaim, whilst watching a battle in Afghanistan between our little army under General Roberts and the Ghilzais. In the contest against invisible foes men need earnestness, determination, strength. Mr. Gregson, by two or three illustrations from personal experience, showed the power of Christ, and the power of evil, and his address altogether was very stimulating. Rev. W. R. Mowll urged the necessity of meditation, and followed this up by a few weighty words on some of the temptations that beset young men, dwelling on the importance of keeping holy the Sabbath Day. He commended to all those words of the dying King David to his son Solomon, "Show thyself a man," and said, "If you do not know God you are not a man." Mr. Clodwell (from America), and Mr. Hind Smith, gave some interesting information as to the progress of Y.M.C.A. work in America and Ireland respectively, and a few words from Mr. John Hayward, Mr. Hodder, and Mr. Burn, the secretary, brought the twenty-fifth breakfast meeting

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOC.

(Exeter Hall, May 9: Lord R. Montagu, Chairman).

This Society has been at work for more than half a century, and there seems to be greater need than ever for its efforts on behalf of the truth. Most encouraging accounts of the past year's work are given in the report. Against that the startling fact must be put that while, in 1829, there were no convents and monasteries in England, these now number 413 and 224 respectively. The chairman dealt especially with the subject of Ireland, which he described as bad in every way. He affirmed that the aim of Rome is to separate Ireland from England, and to establish a Romish autonomy in the country, and pointed in confirmation to the claim made by the priesthood that there is "a law which is higher than the law of England—the law of Rome."

Rev. Burman Cassin expressed an earnest hope that the report would wake up "sleepy England" to the encroachments of Rome. Men should stand up for evangelical truth, though they were laughed at, and though Ritualists were promoted by the Bishops, and patted on the back by Governments both Liberal and Conservative. Sound Christian men must bestir themselves, or the battle of the Reformation will have to be fought over again. He strongly advocated the preaching of the old-fashioned Gospel, and urged all to withstand Rationalism, Ritualism, and Romanism. Rev. E. N. Thwaite, in a vigorous speech, said the fight between Protestantism and Romanism is based on one word—the word "only." Protestants say salvation is by Jesus only; Romanists say we are saved by Jesus, but not by Him only. Rev. J. H. Berguer, Rev. Charles Stirling, and Mr. W. J. Fraser also spoke.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

(Exeter Hall, May 9: Earl Fortescue, Chairman.)

As was well remarked by Mr. F. A. Bevan, at this anniversary meeting, the view presented from the platform afforded at once a justification for the work of the Union, and a proof, if such were needed, of its value. Here were gathered together some eight hundred prize takers from seventy ragged schools in all parts of London. Well-to-do children do not attend ragged schools, but these were well dressed, and as blithe and happy looking as any similar number of children that could be brought together. They acquitted themselves admirably in a bright selection of hymns and songs. A single imaginative glance from the platform to the environments amidst which these children live in Field-lane and George-yard, the Seven Dials, and many other poverty-stricken districts, was quite sufficient to reveal how much has been accomplished.

The report read by the secretary, Mr. Kirk, stated that there are now affiliated to the Union 200 local institutions, whose aim it is to reach the very poorest of the people—the children first, and through them the parents. The various efforts put forth by these institutions touch directly and indirectly from 80,000 to 100,000 lives. There are near upon 50,000 children in average attendance at 238 Sunday-schools, and the teachers muster nearly 4000. There are also Bible classes for older scholars, with more than 4000 members regularly attending; many of these, having decided for Christ, have been formed into Christian bands, while 285 have become communicants during the year.

The Baroness Burdett Coutts kindly handed to the several teachers, representatives of their schools, the books and certificates which were the reward of diligence during the year. She spoke highly of the work, insisting that it was as necessary now as ever. The Bishop of Bath and Wells spoke briefly to the same effect, pointing to the 40,000 children in London alone without any good home influence. Rev. C. Fleming Williams, Rev. J. Chalmers (from New Guinea), and others bore earnest testimony in

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICES.

(Exeter Hall, May 11: Rev. E. A. Stuart, Chairman.)

Mr. Bishop's account of the year's work showed that under all the different heads there has been a distinct advance during the year. In speaking of the foreign work he mentioned that Dr. Murdoch, of India, had paid them a visit in the new premises of the Mission in Warwick-lane, and on looking over the list of translators he said, "In every language you have got hold of the best men that could be found." Such an expression of opinion from such an authority, was of the greatest value. Since the conclusion of the seaside work about sixty inland towns have been visited, and much good work has been done.

The Chairman urged all to be preparing for the summer work. In visiting Hull recently he was pleased to find that there were 200 members in one branch, formed about twelve months ago, reading regularly together. This led to the suggestion that those who are privileged to form branches should visit them whenever it is possible. Hon. and Rev. Talbot Rice said that the Mission has taught children that religion is a thing for every day, and not for Sundays only, and that without love to Jesus Christ it is impossible for them to be truly happy. He was personally grateful to the Society, because he would never have felt towards children as he did but for his connection with it. Rev. W. Fuller Gooch expressed his thankfulness that the Church of Christ is waking up to her great privilege of feeding the lambs of the flock which Christ has committed to her. After pointing to seven incidents in our Lord's life directly illustrating his Divine compassion for children, he pointed out that the Society has given an immense impetus to the study of God's Word by the young, and thus conferred an incalculable benefit on the rising generation. It has taught the children also that they can be helpers in the grand work of extending Christ's kingdom. As showing the responsibility of parents, he told a beautiful story of a little fellow who told his sister he should like to make Jesus a present. She said, "Jesus will be so glad if you give Him your heart." Then, after considering, he answered, "I will, if mother will." "Oh," the sister returned, "everyone knows mother has done so long ago," and so there was no barrier in the way of her little one doing so. "Have we, as parents, all done this?" he asked. Mr. E. J. Kennedy, Mr. Spiers, and Mr. A. C. Bellingham also spoke.

REFORMATORY and REFUGE UNION.

The report, at the outset, expresses thankfulness that during the past year there has been an increase of income as well as of work. The number of children befriended by the Children's Aid officers has been larger than in any previous year, the total reaching to about nine hundred, of whom two hundred were sent to Certified and Voluntary Industrial and Reformatory Schools; about the same number were admitted to Shoeblack Brigades; and the remainder dealt with in a variety of ways. The interest taken in all branches of work represented by the Union is increasing yearly, and affiliated thereto there are upwards of 650 preventive and reformatory institutions, seventy-eight being represented on the council. The summary of the rescue officers' work shows bout 250 cases effectively dealt with; but, in addition to these, 680 were visited and investigated, whom it was found impossible to rescue. This is, indeed, a serious fact, attributable, no doubt, to the supposed rights of neglectful and vicious parents, which, in conflict with those of their children, the committee allude to as of most pressing moment. The remark of a late prison chaplain that from all industrial schools comes the cry, "If only the lads and lasses have no 'friends' they will probably do well," is of though it has largely increased in recent years, is thus hindered in a way which only legislation can remedy.

The Educational Inspector reports on forty-two schools and homes visited in connection with the Union that in regard to educational and industrial as well as religious work their position was very satisfactory. Much care has been bestowed on the teaching of Scripture, and on religious and moral training generally.

Forty-two cases of attempted suicide were assisted during the year, and towards this portion of the work an anonymous donor contributes £50 a year. The females receive shelter, and care for whatever period may be necessary, and the males are assisted by the purchase or redemption of tools, or by being placed in charge of relatives willing to receive them. The Female Mission is another important part of the work, in connection with which missionaries are at work nearly every night, and 829 cases have been helped during the year, making a total since the foundation of the Mission of more than 19,000. The very considerable diminution of crime, amounting to 25 per cent. as compared with last year is referred to in another paragraph of the report.

The annual meeting was held at St. James's Hall on May 11, Mr. W. E. Hubbard presiding in Lord Aberdare's absence. The cause was advocated by Mr. Howard Vincent, M.P., Mr. Samuel Hoare, M.P., and Rev. Preb. Billing. The presence of 500 children created great interest, and their musical achievements under the hearty leadership of Mr. J. Proudman elicited warm applause. Rev. F. T. Colson, M.A., also deduced some telling lessons for them from the inscriptions on the English penny.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

(Exeter Hall, May 12: Sir J. Pease, Chairman.)

By common consent of all, whose opinions we have heard, this was one of the best "May Meetings" of the season. It was neither killed by respectable dulness, nor spoiled by boisterous hilarity. The splendid audience (which showed quite an array of brass buttons) cheered with a will all the really good points in the speaking, and these were by no means few. The only criticism we would offer is that rather too much was crowded into the programme, and of course the last speaker had to suffer.

The report was a model of compactness and comprehensiveness, was pitched in a hopeful major key throughout, and was excellently read. But it is not every secretary who has such a pleasantly strenuous voice as Mr. Spencer. He told of many conversions during the year; of an increase of over 50 branch missions; of an addition of 1000 members to the Railway Men's Christian Association; of an extending colportage work; of large additions to the staff of voluntary lady workers; and of growth in the adoption of temperance principles. "Railway Mission members are almost to a man out and out teetotallers." The crying needs of India and South Africa for railway workers were strongly stated and appeal was made for help in supplying them, as well as in developing the work at home.

In presenting his balance sheet, Mr. Gurney Sheppard, the faithful treasurer, made a strong plea that the great travelling public, who are so much indebted to railway-men, should give a heartier support to the work. He thought that if this country would give the Gospel to all the railway-men in Ireland, it might prove a more efficient remedy for the woes that afflict the sister isle than a Coercion Bill or the Plan Campaign.

The Chairman made a decided hit at the beginning of his speech by reading a brief letter he had received from Mr. Gladstone, commending the work of the Mission. Sir Joseph filled up his allotted fifteen minutes in excellent style, speaking of the wonderful progress made in railway matters since the days of George Stephenson, of the immense capital now invested in this direc-spiritual work of the Railway Mission. If all railway directors were as friendly to the work, it would surely advance by leaps and bounds. It was very gratifying, however, to know from the secretary that over ninety directors had written expressing regret at not being able to be present: the fact of their writing was a presumption in favour of their sympathy. Mr. T. A. Denny moved, and Mr. Handel Cossham, M.P., seconded a resolution of Jubilee congratulation to Her Majesty, and this was carried with due acclamation. Delegates from Cardiff, Manchester, Derby, Liverpool, London, Leeds, and Birmingham, having given short and red-hot testimonies about the work in their districts, some wise words of counsel and exhortation were uttered by Mrs. Gates, of Brighton, a much-esteemed pioneer in Railway Gospel work. Then Mr. Howe pleaded most eloquently for South Africa, telling something of the spiritual destitution there at remote stations. The speech of the evening was that of Rev. John McNeil, of Edinburgh, full of robust wisdom, set off with flashes of pawky northern humour. Mr. McNeil, we hope, will be heard on Exeter Hall platform again. Last of all came Mr. William Noble, who was crowded into a corner by the exhaustion of time, but who nevertheless gave a telling testimony on behalf of temperance, making effective allusion to Mr. Gough's closing days.

EAST LONDON EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

(Westbourne Park Chapel, May 11: Dr. John Clifford, Chairman.)

This society is thirteen years old, and numbers 147 members, of whom 70 are preachers; the rest are tract distributors, or help in other ways. During the year 528 services have been held in lodging-houses, and a band of young men have been out thirteen nights scouring the streets of East London from twelve on Saturday night till half-past eight on Sunday morning, and this mode of mission work has proved highly successful. Free breakfasts were provided for over 700 poor persons who had neither homes nor means, and several young women rescued from lives of shame, and placed in decent homes. It is proposed to erect a hall in East London for classes of instruction. Mr. Harvey, in giving the report, drew some very striking pictures of scenes that he had witnessed in East London, particularly during the late prolonged and severe winter, and which seemed to have a great effect upon many of his hearers, to whom East London seemed further away than the beach of Boulogne, and is in fact a terra incognita.

Rev. John Atkinson said he should like some of his hearers to see one of those lodging-houses which were visited. A friend of his went to address the inmates of one, and waxing warm with his subject he took off his coat, and put it over the back of his chair. When he got cool, and wanted his coat again, he found that it was gone. In these lodging-houses are all sorts, if not all conditions, of men. There are parsons, lawyers, and other professional men, who have once been respectable members of society, but who, through their own folly, have become a disgrace to civilisation and their own families. It was amongst these that their friends were working, and they demanded their warmest sympathies and prayers. He was glad they had given the people of the West-end a chance to hear their story, and he hoped they would acquit themselves as men and women, the result being the setting up of the evangelists with some money by which they could go on with their work more easily. None of the workers in the society received pay. Yet they fed the hungry and clothed the naked, and he asked those present, as well as the people of the West-end generally, to give them help.

Rev. H. Simon, of Westminster Chapel, Rev

BAND OF HOPE UNION.

(Exeter Hall, May 10: Lord Mount-Temple, Chairman)

Last year's work, says the report, has been in every way successful. There are now in the United Kingdom more than 13,000 Bands of Hope and other juvenile temperance societies, with a membership of over 1,600,000 young people continually receiving instruction in temperance principles. Much has been done by delivering illustrated temperance lectures in Board schools and similar institutions. During the year the movement has also received considerable development in the colonies, where a large number of societies are using the publications of the Union.

The Chairman said he regarded the Union as the most successful of all temperance movements, because it has to do with the children. Even if in after years these went back and began to drink, they never lost the influence of their early days, and were far more easily won to temperance than others. The Union, he said, is a good combination of organisation with individuality, each Band of Hope being left to follow its own course of action. Miss Agnes Weston, of Portsmouth, gave an interesting account of her work amongst the "blue-jackets" in the training service, of whom about 4500 are abstainers. Mr. Arthur Pease and Mrs. Ormiston Chant dwelt on the great importance of work amongst the young, which is ever most blessed and the most lasting. Dr. Dawson Burns and Mr. Gustafson also spoke.

AMONG ITALIAN JEWS.

For two and twenty years, Mr. Arias, a converted Jew, has made an annual mission tour through Italy, as an agent of the Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London. It was a difficult work in those days when to sell Bibles in Italy was to run the risk of imprisonment, and when the hatred of Christ and Christianity was so strong among the Jews that the colporteur was often attacked with stones.

Then came the era of freedom and liberty, when Bibles could be openly offered for sale; prejudice had by this time been so far conquered, and interest and curiosity so far aroused, that numbers of Jews bought Bibles, and even New Testaments, as well as many of the useful works published in Italian by the Society. The effect of this and of the long years of patient work among them has shown itself in the gradual decrease of prejudice against Christ and Christianity, and in the friendly welcome which Mr. Arias now meets with in the towns and villages, where formerly he had been so badly received.

An English lady who visited Rome these last two winters brought with her an excellent magic lantern, and each time kindly held an exhibition for the Jews and Jewesses attending our schools. Between fifty and sixty were present on each occasion. The interest they took in the entertainment, and the fact that they retain from year to year a vivid impression of what they saw and heard then, convinces us of the helpfulness of this way of teaching, and makes us to try its effect in other places.

A good "magic lantern," with plates, would cost £15, and we have no funds available for this outlay. I wish, therefore, to make our wants known to those in England who may feel moved to help in giving a new interest to an old mission work.

We would earnestly ask those who are interested to pray that the power of the Holy Spirit may make our efforts of good effect, and that those who are addressed may be given not only the seeing eye and the hearing ear, but the believing heart, so that many Jews may be turned to the Lord in this summer's work.

Katherine Burtchell.

50, San Nicolà da Tolentino, Rome.

[Mrs. Burtchell's excellent work among the Jews was mentioned in Mr. Morgan's "Letters from Rome." It is hoped that the evangelist may be provided with the magic lantern very speedily.]

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

Medical missions have not yet received the full attention they deserve from the great missionary societies, and the Christian Church. A striking illustration of their value has come to light through the experience of the missionaries of the London Missionary Society, in the district of Chin-Chew, China. They find that every time the preaching stations are visited they have the pleasure of baptizing some who have been patients at Dr. Grant's Hospital at Amoy.

The latest advices by mail from Dr. Mackinnon, Damascus, report much success in Medical Mission work which he has been carrying on there for the last eighteen months. During that period he has treated more than 2000 cases, and has been enabled to proclaim the glad tidings both to Jews and Mohammedans. A telegraphic despatch has been received from Constantinople, saying that owing to an outbreak of fanaticism the Government has been forced to suspend his labours. Will our readers remember in prayer Dr. Mackinnon and this ancient city, that the Gospel may have free course within its walls.

MOUNT HERMON ORPHAN HOMES.

These Homes are open for the reception of girls between the ages of five and twelve, who have either lost both parents, or whose mothers, having lost their husbands, are left with families larger than they can maintain. The little ones are here shielded and protected from evil. After being suitably trained, till between fifteen and sixteen years old, the girls are provided with suitable situations, and they are allowed to return to the Home while seeking new ones. Nineteen orphans were admitted during last year, making a total, since the Home was opened in 1864, of 500. The Lord has given a full share of blessing to this labour of love. With very few exceptions the girls turn out well, and there is good hope that many are true followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, the chief object being to instruct them in his Word, and to lead them to Him. In the Homes, at the present time, there are 120 children.

The report gives several touching illustrations of the singleness of heart with which many of the Lord's stewards support this work, and of the Lord's goodness at all times, and especially in times of need. This, as recorded in the report before us, was wonderfully manifest when the new Home, "Berachah," at Margate, was taken, and in regard to the furnishing, &c. At the first prayer-meeting, God gave a marked answer to the petitions offered.

There are now altogether five Homes, three at Cambridge-road, Kilburn, one at West Hampstead, and the other at Margate. All communications should be addressed, Miss M. A. Cole, "Mount Hermon," Cambridge-road, Kilburn, N.W.

TRAVELLERS AND TOURISTS will be glad to learn that two gentlemen have undertaken to keep a register of hotels and pensions on the Continent, where facilities for united prayer and the study of God's Word are effected, and where family worship is conducted. There is a promising field of Christian labour for those who contemplate a lengthened stay abroad at Savoy, where already at Thonon, on the Lake of Geneva, an excellent work is being carried on by several ladies amongst the poor of the district. Communications may be addressed to Monsieur Wyler, 7, Rue de l'Evêche, Geneva, Switzerland.

TESTIMONIAL TO MRS. LUCAS.—The members of the British Women's Temperance Association some time since expressed a great desire to present some testimonial to their president, and various suggestions were made to her as to the form this should take. She at once declared in favour of the formation of a fund to be used for women's temperance work. About £200 has already been received, but this, it is hoped, will be considerably augmented before the day of presentation, the 24th inst. Communications may be

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

THE THIRTIETH ANNUAL MEETING of this Institution will be held (D.V.) at the Homes, Parsons Green, Fulham, on Saturday, June 11.

THOS. SALT, Esq., M.P., will take the chair at 3 o'clock.

Mrs. FRANK BEVAN will open the new Training Home for 50 Friendless young girls.

A Choir of 50 young girls will sing a selection of JUBILEE HYMNS.

Friends desirous of inspecting the arrangements of both the Homes at Parsons Green, may do so on presenting cards of invitation for the Meeting (to be obtained at 200, Euston-road) from two to three o'clock on the day of the Meeting, and also after the termination of the Meeting.

Tea will be served at 5 o'clock in a Marquee, under the shadow of the venerable old mulberry tree, as on former occasions.

There will be a Sale of Useful and Fancy Articles, many of which will be made by the Inmates of the Institution. Ladies are invited to send contributions of work to be sold on the occasion.

The proceeds of the Sale, and the contributions received on the day of the Meeting, will be applied to the proposed extension of the Open All-Night Refuge, which has been so pre-eminently blessed of God in saving young women and girls.

Since the establishment of this Asylum in 1867, more than 13,000 POOR YOUNG CREATURES have been sheltered.

God's merciful providence has already supplied about £500 towards the proposed extension.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

This patient applied to me November 5 last year. Colds upon colds neglected, had settled on the lungs, and brought her down excessively low. She was vomiting profusely a yellow and greenish phlegm. The cough was violent, causing a mixture of blood with the expectoration. At this time she was reduced in flesh, and weak in the extreme. The doctor had said, "her left lung is diseased; if the medicine she is taking does not help her, I can do no more."

The medicine she was taking did not help her; and at once, upon this, her brother wrote me full particulars of her case. Medicine and advice was sent her.

In less than a month I received the following report:—"Your medicine has done her good already. She can now take a little nourishing food; she is more inclined to talk; and getting hopeful."

And so, after three months only under my treatment, I was delighted to receive the following from the patient herself:—

"DEAR SIR,—I write now to tell you I am so well from the use of your valuable medicine, that I have returned to my employment. My kindest thanks to you. You are at liberty to publish my case.—JESSIE McTAGGART, PARKNEUCK, ALEXANDRIA, DUMBARTON, N.B."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

LIGHT AT EVENING TIME.

The following stirring incident is condensed from a little book entitled, "SKIPPER GEORGE NETMAN," a story of out-port Methodism in Newfoundland, by Rev. GEORGE BOND. 1s. T. Woolmer, 66, Paternoster-row. The book is full of interest for young people, and will give them many helpful and valuable thoughts as to the higher meaning of life.

THERE was not much sleep in the settlement that night. The twinkling lights shone through the windows of the cottages, until the dawning of another day rendered them unnecessary: and as the day advanced the men gathered in knots on the hills which commanded the best view of the bay, and peered earnestly through the morning mist to catch a glimpse of the returning boats. Not a vestige of ice was in sight, though, away on the horizon, the dreamy light of the "ice-glim" in the sky showed that the white field was just beyond its rim. Hour after hour passed away; the morning was succeeded by noon, and yet no stroke of work was done in the little harbour.

Slowly the hours of the day dragged on, the suspense of all becoming every hour more painful, and the strain on those chiefly interested almost agonising in its intensity. At length, just as the night came on, a boat was seen rounding the most distant point down shore, quickly followed by another and another. The news flew rapidly, "The boats are coming! The boats are coming!" and in a few minutes the whole population of the village was clustered on the high lands, watching the boats as they were rowed up the shore. Darkness closed in long before they reached the harbour mouth, and the people, hurrying from the hills, crowded the beach and the stages to greet them on arrival, and learn the tidings they were bringing. By and by the oar-strokes, plainly heard, told that they had entered the Narrows, and as the splash, splash of the steady pulls came closer and closer, the eagerness and suspense became terrible. Here, indeed, were the anxiously expected boats, but what news were they bringing? Was it life or death? O, the suspense of that awful moment! At length a voice broke the stillness. It was Mr. Fairbairn's, and strangely tremulous and unnatural it sounded:—

"Is that you, Skipper George?"

"Yes, sir." The answer came promptly through the darkness. There was a pause. "Have you found them?"

Again there was a pause—very long it seemed to the listeners—and then the reply in broken tones—

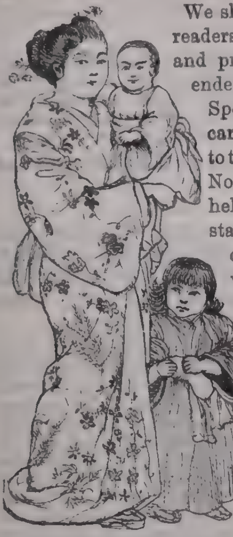
"All found, sir, thank the good Lord."

The pent-up feelings of the people could no longer be restrained. Some shouted, some cheered, some laughed hysterically, while not a few, men as well as women, burst into tears, and wept like children.

Meanwhile the boats had reached the stage, and the lights of a score of lanterns flashed down upon them. Ay, there they were, poor fellows, haggard-looking and cold, it was true, as they lay wrapped up in the blankets which their finders had brought with them, but safe and sound, there was no doubt of that. In a few minutes the boats were made fast, and the missing men restored to their friends on the stage. Who can describe that meeting—the joy that was almost too great for expression, the certainty that seemed almost impossible of realisation, the excitement and agitation, intensified by the vigils of the past night, and the strain of the anxious, dreary day that was closing so happily?

"Friends," said Mr. Fairbairn, "let us sing the Doxology," and instantly every head was bared and every voice was raised as the grand and appropriate outburst of praise rolled up to heaven. Never more fittingly, and never, perhaps, more sincerely, did those words go up from human hearts. Again and again they sang them, and the surrounding hills caught the echoes and redoubled them, until the very night itsel seemed

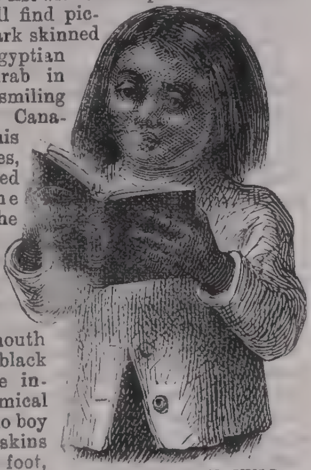
CHILDREN OF OTHER LANDS.



JAPANESE MOTHER AND CHILDREN.

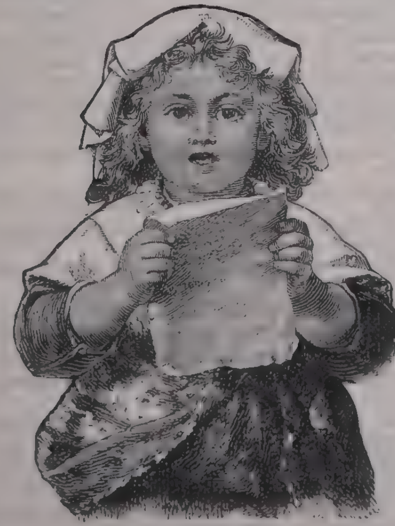
We should like our younger readers to take a lively and practical interest in the endeavour of the Children's Special Service Mission to carry the Gospel message to the children of all lands. Nothing will be a greater help to them in understanding the wide extent of this work, than a very attractive circular which the Society has printed, giving full particulars of it. Free copies of the circular may be had from the office of the Mission, 13, Warwick lane, London, E.C.

This interesting statement contains twenty illustrations representing children of different nations. By the kindness of the Mission we give three of these, but we advise our boys and girls to get the paper, and study the whole list with the help of their friends. There they will find pictures of the dark skinned Parsee, the Egyptian fellah, the Arab in School, the smiling Spaniard, the Canadian with his queer snow shoes, the bright-eyed Hindoo, the Japanese, the girl from Naples, with her splendid bunches of grapes, that almost make the mouth water, the coal black "Sambo," the inexpressibly comical looking Eskimo boy covered with skins from head to foot, the Portuguese children carried in panniers on a mule's back, and others that we need not mention.



NORTH AMERICAN CHILD.

To look at all these pictures, and get to know something about the history of the children they represent, will be nearly as good as a trip round the world. But, of course, the chief thing is to remember that they all need a Saviour just as much as we do in Great Britain. And why have we got so much Gospel teaching and Gospel light? Surely, that we may send some of it to all those children who are not so greatly priviledged. The pictorial tracts, of which this Mission has sent out seven millions, in forty languages, all tell of salvation through faith in Christ, and the pictures secure for them an entrance into multitudes of homes.



AN ITALIAN GIRL.

TALEBEARING.

LEVITICUS xix. 16; PSALM xciv. 9.

Oh! could there in this world be found
Some little spot of happy ground,
Where village business might go round
  Without the village tattling!
How doubly blest that place would be,
Where all might dwell in liberty,
Free from the bitter misery
  Of gossip's endless prattling.

If such a spot were really known,
Dame Peace might claim it as her own,
And in it she might fix her throne
  For ever and for ever;
There, like a queen, might reign and live,
While everyone would soon forgive
The little slights they might receive,
  And be offended never.

'Tis mischief-makers that remove
Far from our hearts the warmth of love,
And lead us all to disapprove
  What gives another pleasure;
They seem to take one's part, but when
They've heard our cares, unkindly then
They soon retail them all again,
  Mixed with their poisonous measure.

And then they've such a cunning way
Of telling ill-meant tales. They say:
"Don't mention what I've said, I pray;
  I would not tell another."
Straight to your neighbour's house they go,
Narrating everything they know,
And break the peace of high and low,
  Wife, husband, friend, and brother.

Oh! that the mischief-making crew
Were all reduced to one or two;
And they were painted red or blue,
  That everyone might know them!
Then would our villagers forget
To rage and quarrel, fume and fret,
And fall into an angry pet
  With things so much below them.

For 'tis a sad, degrading part
To make another's bosom smart,
And plant a dagger in the heart
  We ought to love and cherish.
Then let us evermore be found
In quietness with all around,
While friendship, joy, and peace abound
  And angry feelings perish.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, May 22, Ps. xxvii. 1—14; Monday, May 23, Ps. xxviii. 1—9; Tuesday, May 24, Hosea vi. 1—7; Wednesday, May 25, Hosea xi. 1—12; Thursday, May 26, Hosea xiv. 1—9; Friday, May 27 Joel i. 1—14; Saturday, May 28, Joel ii. 1—14.

MARSEILLES.—A correspondent who has lately visited Mr. C. E. Faithfull's Sailors' Rest, 40, Quai du Port, in this city, speaks of its usefulness in very high terms. An English lady devotes herself to the sailors, takes care of their money, mends their clothes, and writes their letters. Sailors of all nationalities are received in this Home, and their spiritual welfare is attended to.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.—A sale in aid of the work of this excellent institution will be held on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, next week, at the Cannon-street Hotel, E.C., Viscountess Lymington will open the bazaar on Monday at two o'clock. Mrs. Hilton says it is necessary to make this effort successful, or some branch of the work will have to be closed. We trust many friends will come to her help.

☞ To prevent delay in the execution of orders, it is specially requested by the Publishers that all business letters may be directed to the firm (Morgan & Scott). Also that personal letters for either partner may be so marked.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give a portrait and sketch of Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., of Boston, Mass., U.S.A.

If the Christian Churches of the Metropolis rise to the gravity of the issue, there will be an immense gathering in Exeter Hall to-morrow (Friday), to protest against the licensing of sin in our Colonies. The interests of about one-fifth of the human race are directly affected by the operation of the C.D. Acts in lands under British rule. We call ours a Christian Government, but a Government of infidels could not have perpetrated a greater abomination. We are hopeful that the Churches will recognise the tremendous importance of this question, and that to-morrow evening will witness a gathering of such an influential character as will compel the authorities to sweep away, without delay, this "agreement with hell."

Some of our readers have expressed the opinion that we are somewhat uncharitable in our treatment of present day Romanism. We only wish we could perceive such symptoms in the speech and conduct of Popish authorities as would warrant our thinking that the broadening influences of the age have changed the old lion into a lamb. Let those who think so read the following letter, dated New York, April 13, 1887:—

> GENTLEMEN,—By this note, which is entirely private and not to be published, I wish to call your attention to the fact that the third Plenary Council of Baltimore, following the leadership of Pope Leo XIII., has pointed out the duties of the Catholic press, and denounced the abuses of which journals styling themselves Catholic are sometimes guilty. "That paper alone," says the council (decree No. 328), "is to be regarded as Catholic that is prepared to submit in all things to ecclesiastical authority." Later on it warns all Catholic writers against presuming to attack publicly the manner in which a bishop rules his diocese, affirming that those who so presume, as well as their approvers and abettors, are not only guilty of very grievous scandals, but deserve, moreover, to be dealt with by canonical censures. For some time past the utterances of The Catholic Herald have been shockingly scandalous. As this newspaper is published in this diocese, I hereby warn you that if you continue in this course of conduct it will be at your peril.—I am, gentlemen, yours truly,
> M. A. CORRIGAN,
> Archbishop of New York.

What is the dreadful offence which has evoked this threatening letter, one worthy of the tyrannous days of the Inquisition? Solely the expression of an opinion, by The Catholic Herald, that in political matters neither Pope, Propaganda, nor Archbishop has a right to prescribe for American Catholics. We are not expressing any opinion as to the truth or error of the political views of the paper referred to; what we contend is, that freedom of conscience cannot exist where Popery has

In commenting on the action of the Romish hierarchy in this case, an American contemporary says:—

> The fact remains, that Rome claims its followers soul and body, person and property, from cradle to coffin. The more she announces her claims, the more hope will we have that some of her intelligent devotees will shake off their debasing allegiance.

For our own part we marvel they have not done so long ago.

In a review of "Italy Present and Future," by Signor Gallenga, The Pall Mall Gazette thus truly and forcibly depicts the condition of the inhabitants of sunny Italy, under the ban and blight of Popery:—

> No European nation has ever deteriorated as did the Italians. They were simply starving body and soul. Their minds, paralysed by an infernal obscurantism in Church and State, could harbour nothing but trifles; their physique—and this point is strangely neglected—was, and still is, lowered by abject poverty. Idyllic simplicity, picturesque rags, and smiling sunshine, conceal from the tourist in Italy what is the lowest standard of living and the most widely diffused to be found in Europe. It is not a bit of use enfranchising the peasants so long as they live on slops and messes. Breed a better style of Italians, feed them and house and clothe them better, and then leave them to enfranchise themselves, which they will pretty soon do; and not only that, but will use their votes like men. At present they vote with the priest or abstain. It is the same in every department. Italy is made. It remains, to make the Italians.

It is the same everywhere. Wherever Rome has had sway she has destroyed the manhood of the men and the womanhood of the women. Could a more damning charge be made against any system? Socially, politically, and religiously, Popery is a curse.

The virus of slavery seems to linger in the nation that paid such a heavy blood ransom to be delivered from it. The colour line is still strongly marked in the churches of the Southern States, and that is now being brought forward as an obstacle to the union of Northern and Southern Presbyterians. This caste feeling will die out, it is said; but is there not sufficient courage among the white-skinned Christians of the South to strangle such an enemy to the cause of Christ?

Mr. Justice Day last week sentenced a young man to three months' imprisonment and twenty lashes as a punishment for robbery with violence. This retributive justice is according to God. To hang Haman on the gallows he had reared for Mordecai; through death to destroy him that had the power of death: that is the way of Divine justice.

> The heathen are sunk down in the pit that they made.
> In the net which they hid is their own foot taken.
> The Lord is known by the judgment which He executeth.
> The wicked is snared by the work of his own hands.

Lex talionis is the way of God. Crimes of violence should be punished with the lash. Crimes against the person should be visited upon the person of the criminal.

It was a rough and ready, but an effective method by which the lads of the High School, Bedford, dealt with a seller of indecent photographs who visited them last week. They swung him into three feet of water, and kept him there till he promised to leave the town at once. We should not be surprised if Bedford justice were more effectual in extirpating this type of the human harpy than the more

We would request friends when remitting to us Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders, to cross them "City Bank." This will effectually prevent misappropriation in case of loss in transmission through the post.

The Queen had glorious weather for her visit to the East-end on Saturday last, which increased the pleasure of the immense crowds that thronged the streets through which Her Majesty passed on the way to the People's Palace. Her kind, sympathetic face, too, betokened her gratification at the hearty expression of goodwill which greeted her appearance among her people. Such interest in their welfare as this occasion denoted, will endear her the more to the hearts of her subjects.

A friend writes:—

> I wish you would write some papers in THE CHRISTIAN really hot and heavy, on the prostitution of the churches and chapels to worldly amusements—theatricals, raffles, comic entertainments, &c. You ought to raise a trumpet voice against it. No doubt there will be a great howl in reply, but that won't matter. It seems to me that the Church of God is dying for want of some burning witnesses to tell her of her sin. The state of things is really scandalous. In many cases I do not hesitate to say that it is abominable.

Meeting another friend a few days later, he referred to the same subject, in very much the same terms.

We are glad to believe that the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland is not going to retreat and abandon their work in Spain and Japan, notwithstanding a serious deficit in the funds. Dr. Calderwood strenuously declared, at the recent meeting of the U.P. Synod, against retiring before the enemy. He says that if the matter is gone into in a Christian spirit by the whole Church the difficulty can be surmounted; nay, he anticipates already songs of thanksgiving for the coming victory. Such is the language of faith, and we hope our Scottish friends will make an answer worthy of their history.

We observe with pleasure that The Times is devoting somewhat more space than its custom has been, to reports of the May Meetings; though it is still very inadequate from a journal that professes to reflect the movements of the day. The Echo has given by far the best accounts we have seen in any of the dailies. Its candid and sympathetic, if sometimes caustic sketches, entitled, "Exeter Hall in Session," have been quite a feature of this lively evening sheet. The special bi-weekly issues of The Christian World are unapproached by any other publication, for the fulness, catholicity, and general accuracy of the reports.

We commend to the numerous class of our readers who are interested in the subject of "Thrift," an admirable article on "Fifty Years of Savings Banks" in the current number of Good Words. When hearts are saddened by the sight of a continuous and reckless spending on tobacco, drink, and Sunday excursions, on the part of the working classes, it is well to recall the fact that many of them are otherwise minded; that Savings Banks in connection with the Post-office have been a grand success; that from their commencement in 1861, forty-five millions sterling have been accumulated; and that now the colossal sum of a hundred millions stands to the credit chiefly of the working people of our

The following passage, delivered last week from the chair of the Congregational Union, and which was obviously intended to describe a phase of Nonconformist life, might well have arrested the attention of the assembly :—

> When we hear that young men born in a Christian home are known as the best billiard players in their club, and are told that it must have cost as much time and as much money to acquire this skill as would have made each one a member of a learned profession, we may well ask how much might have been accomplished if this time and money and enthusiasm had been devoted to Christian uses. When we see families making excuses for frequent journeys to London or Paris, and note that their visits synchronise with the arrival of another prima donna, or the putting of some new play on the boards ; and know that their zeal for Christ's service languishes exactly in proportion as their "knowledge of life" spreads ; when we see how eagerly every form of social gaiety is patronised, and how increasingly hard it is to touch the inner heart of our young people ; the question occurs—is this the end of our struggles for spiritual freedom ? was it for this our fathers suffered and our mothers prayed ?

The godly ones who have mourned over the new customs of Church members, and who have braved the reproach of being called old-fashioned and Puritanic, will see in such an influential utterance a justification of their fears. Teaching Sunday scholars in their festivals to sing secular songs and act plays, and bridging over the borderland between the Church and the world, are among the influences that will bring other grave consequences to kill the life of Christian communities.

The Synod of the Episcopal Church of Ireland has lately discussed the desirability of revising the Hymnal now in use. We observe that whilst one section express the hope that no "Moody and Sankey" hymns will be permitted, another is advocating strenuously the insertion of Ritualistic Processional ones. That hymns should be rejected simply because they have been greatly blessed in evangelistic work seems incredible. Neither is it a hopeful sign for the future of the Irish Episcopal Church that the Ritualising element is asserting itself.

A correspondent in Norway sends to us a request that at the approaching season of Whitsuntide there should be united prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the whole of Christendom ; and that the Lord would send forth more labourers into the harvest fields of the world. Surely this is a prayer that ought to go up from all Christian hearts day and night without ceasing. Still more to be desired, perhaps, is the prayer that no action or inaction on the part of the Church of Christ shall delay the answer.

The spirit of militarism is sufficiently rampant in this country, we think, not to need any prompting from writers who are supposed to view things from the calm standpoint of the philosopher and the historian. Yet Mr. Lecky in his fifth volume of the "History of England in the Eighteenth Century" has this sentence, intended no doubt for the admonition of the statesmen of the present time :—

> One of the most serious dangers of modern popular politics is that gambling spirit which, in order to lower estimates and reduce taxation, leaves the country unprotected, trusting that the chapter of accidents will save it from attack.

Of course it is possible to err on the side of parsimony with regard to our weapons for the day of defence; but that is scarcely the advice that our statesmen need in the present day. Moreover, we fail to see why Great Britain should be at all apprehensive of attack, if she adheres to a policy of uprightness and due regard for the just claims of others. If we act on the Christian principle of doing to other peoples and nations as we would be done by, the comity of civilisation, at this advanced stage of the Christian era, ought to place us beyond the probability of attack. In keeping our powder dry, do not let us forget the first part of the famous axiom—trust in God and a faithful adherence to his laws.

An esteemed correspondent writes to us as follows, respecting a matter dealt with in our notes last week :—

> May I suggest that the reason why Protestantism closed churches on week-days, was to protest against the notion that men could only pray acceptably in a place where a priest had raised the host.

The collective wisdom of the Bishops of the Established Church of England, in Convocation assembled, has produced the following deliverance which their lordships "carried unanimously" :—

> That, in the opinion of this House, it is contrary to the principles of the Catholic Church, as maintained at the English Reformation, that clergymen should take part in the public religious services of those who are not in full communion with the Church of England, and it is desirable that the Bishops should use their authority and influence to induce the clergy of their respective dioceses to abstain from the practice ; nevertheless, the House deeply sympathises with the desire to bring all Christians into sincere communion with each other through a union with the Great Head of the Church, and recognises the fact that there are many ways of maintaining kindly intercourse with Nonconformists which are not open to reasonable objection.

With regard to "the principles of the Catholic Church, as maintained at the English Reformation," there would seem in these days to be much conflict of opinion ; and we do not care to inquire very minutely into the matter. "Let the dead past bury its dead." But we should think there can be little difference of view among those who are not influenced by sectarian bigotry or ecclesiastical assumption, that the first part of this resolution is as "contrary to the principles" of fundamental Christianity as anything can well be. We cannot but think that this intolerant deliverance will be a source of grief to all members of the Established Church who wish to preserve the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and to cultivate that brotherly love which is the great outstanding evidence of Christian discipleship.

Two deeply interesting papers in the current number of The Century Magazine on "Finding Pharaoh," and "Pharaoh and his Daughter," will well repay careful reading. The first has reference to the discovery of the mummy of the king of Egypt to whom, more than thirty centuries ago, the Lord bade Moses "go in and speak." In the second paper there is a remarkable testimony to the accuracy of Scripture, for the author—Professor Paine—shows conclusively that Pharaoh was of Assyrian rather than Egyptian descent, a fact which explains the reference in Isaiah lii. 4, "For thus saith the Lord God, My people went down aforetime into the land of Egypt to sojourn there ; and the Assyrian oppressed them without cause ;" the latter part of which has generally been taken as an allusion to the later persecutions of the chosen people. Day by day valuable proofs are accumulating with regard to the literal truth of the Bible narratives ; yet there are numbers of so-called philosophers who seem to prefer modern speculation to the Divine dicta.

Mrs. Haweis, in a paper in this month's number of one of the popular magazines, makes an appeal with reference to the destruction of wild birds merely for the sake of their use in the so-called ornamentation of ladies' attire. We hope those who read it may be induced to take a stand against a barbarous fashion which certainly is responsible for much wanton cruelty and wholesale destruction among the beautiful feathered tribes. That 30,000,000 birds of bright plumage are killed annually "for the purpose of disfiguring hats, muffs, and screens," is, as Mrs. Haweis designates it, a "shocking and disgusting fact."

In a recent address to the Congregational Union of Scotland, Rev. Edward White made a very serious statement to the effect that, many ministers are teaching a system of moral living, but they "are not preaching the Gospel which can bring back sinners to God." Such preachers, he added, were in great danger of being called to give a tremendous account for their preaching.

The Toronto Christian Guardian has an article upon some proposed legislation in Quebec with regard to the administration of oaths ; from which it appears that it is intended to pass an Act providing that in all Her Majesty's Courts of Justice in Canada, a crucifix shall be placed in a conspicuous place, opposite the witness box, and that every witness shall be required to "lift his right hand in front of the crucifix, and to place his left hand on the Book of the Evangelists, and to cause him to swear before the crucifix, and upon the Holy Evangelists." The Act also provides for the infliction of heavy penalties upon sheriffs who neglect to provide and fix such a crucifix in the Court-houses in their districts, and that the size of each crucifix shall be decided by the Lieutenant-Governor General in Council.

Naturally, there is much excitement in Toronto and elsewhere with respect to such a recognition in the State institutions of what our Canadian contemporary terms the "rites or insignia" of any denomination, and we shall look with much interest for the development of this matter. The Romanists, unfortunately, are in the majority in the province of Quebec, but that is no reason why they should be allowed to insult Protestant feeling :—

> The exigencies of political parties, anxious to get the Catholic vote, have given to Rome an influence in Canada to which she has no right, but there is a limit to Protestant submission, and if the placing of the Romish crucifix in every Court-house in the province of Quebec, and the compelling of every witness to do reverence to it, does not bring out signs that the limit of forbearance has been reached, we shall confess ourselves mistaken.

So speaks our contemporary, and we must say the surprise will not be confined to Protestants in Canada, if the opposition to this action on the part of Rome does not take a very practical form.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER wishes us to state that he has changed his address to Fallibroome, near Macclesfield, Cheshire.

AN EDINBURGH PRAYER MEETING.

McCrie-Roxburgh Free Church stands in an out-of-the-way and dingy street in Edinburgh. It was not formerly spoken of much in ecclesiastical circles, but it has of late come into notice through the singularly fresh and fearless preaching of its minister, Rev. John McNeill. Mr. McNeill has succeeded in moving Edinburgh, and that is not an easy task. His sayings often form the subject of conversation and his methods are freely criticised. Some denounce him as sensational and inclined to lower the dignity of the pulpit, which too often means the dignity of dulness; but the many recognise in him a gifted man dead in earnest.

His church is, I hear, packed to the door on Sabbaths, and his weekly prayer-meeting is largely attended. It was to the latter I went on Wednesday evening. Rain was falling heavily and the streets were almost deserted, but every seat in the lower part of the church was packed, and some had to go up to the gallery. The audience seemed to be chiefly composed of working men and women, with horny hands and care-lined faces.

Singing and prayers were hearty, after which part of Acts xxvii. was expounded. The comments on the chapter were racy and striking. "Life is a voyage. Where are you bound for? Some of you are sinners drifting about the streets of Edinburgh, water-logged, and all but wrecked. You are hopeless and peaceless, and it is blacker and gloomier on before. Why? Because you, like the sailors, would not listen to a Paul. Faithful servants of God warned you of storms ahead, but you regarded them as fanatical preachers. All was well at first. The soft winds blew (ver. 13) and the vessel went smoothly, 'What a fool I would have been to lie at home, rotting in the harbour. Did they think I would go down in the city's depths that they should terrify me with their tales?' But Euroclydon came. Then all the bounce and brag were taken out of you. Some of you are scudding along to-night with bare poles.

"Paul was silent when he saw that the men were bent on showing their own wisdom. He waited till they were at their wits' end. God throws obstacles in a sinner's downward way; but at last He stands back, and allows him to go on his self-willed path, till in his distress He draws near to tell him how He has always sought to save him. To-night, when you are sweltering in the agony of remorse, not daring to look back on the terrible past, or forward to the dark and cheerless future, God's message to you (ver. 22) is, 'Be of good cheer.' It is not Paul, the servant then, nor John McNeill, the servant now, who speaks these words of hope, but Jesus Christ, who was always the slave for our salvation.

"But before you can receive this message you must abandon hope in self. Have you come to an end of patching up the old ship? You try to weather yon public-house, but you get stranded on it every time you come near it. You can't stop drinking, swearing, or unclean thoughts. It is as impossible as for the Ethiopian to change his skin."

The closing words of the address were an appeal to sinners to accept of this eternal salvation of God, as freely offered in the Gospel.

Mr. McNeill has an easy way of speaking; he talks, rather than preaches, and is not afraid to use homely illustrations. The common people listen to him gladly, and educated men find a stimulus for food in his bracing ministry. We came away feeling that the right man was in the right place, and that the Edinburgh ministry has received a notable acquisition. Sigma.

MRS. E. H. BRADLEY has returned from a somewhat prolonged tour in the United States and Canada, where she delivered many addresses in connection with the purity department of the W.C.T.U. She will be glad of engagements to address meetings in this country on the temperance and purity reform, or to give accounts of progress in America. Her address is now 19,

BOOKS FOR THE BLIND.

The recently issued report of Dr. Moon's Society for embossing and circulating the Holy Scriptures and other useful books states that there are now 667 different books printed from this type, which is adapted to 331 languages and dialects. This is, indeed, a triumph of mechanical genius, but it is much more. The blind in many countries are now enabled to read the Scriptures, besides books of history, geography, religious and biographical works, and their field of interest has been thus wonderfully enlarged. Last year Mr. Prescott, of the Sydney Home Teaching Society for the Blind, brought with him to this country a memorial to Dr. Moon from 500 blind persons who had learnt to read, thanking him for the great blessing his system has been to them. In Edinburgh and its neighbourhood about 250 blind are being visited by the missionary teachers, and the Glasgow societies have over 1200 cases on their roll.

Practically, of the many embossed types invented, there is now but one besides Dr. Moon's in existence. During last year more than 5000 volumes were issued in this type, making a total since the commencement of the work of 165,885. Dr. Moon's address is No. 104, Queen's-road, Brighton.

JEWS IN RUSSIA.

In a letter to Dr. A. Saphir, dated April 19, Mr. Rabinowitz says:—"Since I returned home multitudes upon multitudes come to me to find salvation. If I were to name them all by name, and to describe to you the circumstances by which they were led to see the truth, I should then need ten clerks. On Good Friday, on the following Saturday, and on Easter Sunday, we had services in our place of worship, each day I preached about two hours long, concerning the suffering of our Lord and his resurrection. All the three days our place of worship was crowded with men, women, and children, who listened with open ears, and with faces full of awe and earnestness. On Easter Sunday, after the service was over, many of the brethren came to kiss me. Then they returned home with joy, and thankful that the Lord awakened them to their present state.

"Tell the brethren in London, Edinburgh, and Glasgow, that in the valley of Russia the dry bones of Israel are beginning to come together, bone to his bone; and those who have eyes can also see sinews and skin and flesh. But there is no spirit in them yet. Therefore, pray to the Father that He would command the four winds to breathe upon these slain, that they may live, and that the whole world may know that Jehovah spoke, and also performed."

Mr. Rabinowitz has found a Jewish Christian brother, who would make a most suitable assistant to him in his arduous work; but it depends on the liberality of Chistian friends whether this much-needed help can be given.

REV. C. MELVILLE PYM writes:—Kindly insert a request in your next issue for God to bless the means about to be used for my restoration to health. I hope to begin the waters at Kissengen in the middle of next week, and be there for two months. Ask, also, that I may be used of God there for blessing to souls.

"MERE SPECULATION."—Dr. John Hall, of New York, in a recent sermon, said: "It is claimed by some men that man has risen from a state of savagery. There is not one atom of scientific evidence to justify such a belief. There never was a barbarous race which raised itself. Others think that man is a development from lower orders of life. We have no proof of such development." The evolution theory (adds the New York Independent), like the future probation theory, may very properly be called a "mere speculation." There are a great many people who are always speculating about something. It is their special privilege, they think, to be wise above what is written—more especially what is written in the Bible—and the absence of Bible teaching they also seem to think is proof that their "mere specu-

AT WORK IN BOMBAY.

Since I last wrote I have received several kin letters from England, Ceylon, and India, wit gifts of tracts and money for our seamen's work Our work is still being blessed of God. Mrs Stone and I are not confined in our labour to sailors' work. We love our seamen friend very much, but our more legitimate field i among the other English-speaking peoples of thi metropolitan city. These people are growing i numbers yearly. Thousands of educated Hindus, Parsees, and Mahommedans are now to b found in Bombay. Europeans and Anglo-Indian form a very important part of the population We are very anxious to induce the educate natives to attend our church. We long for th time when the building will be thronged wit these amiable and interesting people. The are very polite, easily approached, but char abou entering Christian churches.

A few months ago we threw our drawing-roon open on a Tuesday evening, and received abou sixty specially invited guests from the ranks o the educated natives. A few native ladies wer present. We chatted, drank tea, sang hymns and had a regular evening "at home," closin with an address and prayer. Our guests seeme to be pleased with their entertainment. O course our aim was to win them to Christ. W found them ready to converse upon religiou subjects. We have had two of these gatherings At one of them ten nationalities were represented.

I should like your readers to pray for us an our fellow-workers in this Mission. Gifts o tracts for this, as for the seamen's work, woul be acceptable. In connection with our Seamen' Mission, I may refer to a matter which ha given us no little gratification. A meeting of th Port Trust of the City was lately held, and letter was submitted from the Commissioner o Police, forwarding a copy of the report of crim for the year 1886, in the Princess Dock, by Mr Ingram, the inspector in charge. He states tha the general improvement in the behaviour of th Europeans, both sailors and firemen, notice last year, continues, and considerably lighten the work of the police. This improvement h attributes entirely to the efforts of persons wh take an interest in the men. He speciall mentions the "Rest," in Frere-road, under th superintendence of Mr. Pranch, supported b the Methodists, the Seamen's Institute, in charg of Mr. Ellison, and the coffee-house opened b the Y.M.C.A., as instrumental in improving th conduct of the sailors.

We hope soon to put up a building in whic we will have a recreation room also for nativ sailors, a large and useful but much-neglecte class of Her Majesty's subjects.

Grant-road, Bombay. J. S. Stone.

P.S.—If good people in England or in othe Colonies would send us religious periodicals fo ordinary illustrated papers, sending regularly t our reading rooms, and for the "bags" to b given to sailors when sailing, we would be cheere very much.

THE JEWS.—Mr. W. G. Habershon presided a the forty-fourth annual meeting of the Britis Society for the Propagation of the Gospel amon the Jews in Exeter Hall on Tuesday week. Rev John Dunlop, secretary, reported that there ar now 100 workers, paid and unpaid, and three ne missionaries have been added during this yea Operations, resulting in many baptisms, have bee carried on in the large towns of England and th Continent, and in America and Canada. In Vienn 74 Jews have been received into the Protestan Church, and in South Russia there is a churc composed of Hebrew Christians. In this countr the members of the Hebrew Prayer Union numbe 351. It is estimated that since the beginning o the century 100,000 Jews have been converted t Christianity. Addresses were given by Revs. D MacEwan, P. J. Turquand, R. Taylor, W. F Gooch, J. F. T. lotes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MAY 22.—PSALM CVI.

ELITZSCH entitles this Psalm "Israel's un- ithfulness from Egypt onwards, and God's ithfulness down to the present time." After an troduction (1—5) it recounts Israel's failure in gypt (6—12); in the wilderness (13—33); in anaan (34—42), closing with a thankful record God's forbearing mercy and restoring grace 3—48).

6.—We have sinned with our fathers.—Con- ssion of sin was always to Israel the prelude to essing, and, as their standing was a national ie, no confession of this kind was genuine that d not identify those who confessed with those ho had sinned before. So shall it be when Israel shall turn to the Lord" (2 Cor. iii. 10); ey shall confess as their own sin (see Zech. xii.), "whom they have pierced") that which was ommitted more than 1800 years ago. In like anner, every truly penitent child of Adam entifies himself with his forefather's sin (see om. v. 12), and is thus permitted, by grace, to entify himself with "the obedience" (Rom. v.) of the Second Adam, the Lord from heaven.

15.—He gave them their request; but sent lean- ss into their soul.—A solemn warning to God's eople of the danger of cherishing carnal desires efore God, which He in punishment may grant.

28.—The sacrifices of the dead.—"The sacri- cial feastings (Num. xxv. 2) are called the crifices of the dead, because the idols are dead eings as opposed to God, the living one."—elitzsch.

48.—Praise ye the Lord.—So ends the fourth ook of the Psalms.

MONDAY, MAY 23.—PSALM CVII.

Under the four figures of the deliverances rought by God in answer to prayer for travel- rs in the desert (4—9), prisoners (10—16), ose who are sick (17—22), and seamen in a orm (23—32), are set forth suggestively piritual lessons which every believer will know ow to apply to soul trouble, and that without all robbing the Psalm of its literal application literal circumstances.

2.—Let the redeemed of the Lord say so.— This is a choice song for the redeemed of e Lord. Although it celebrates providential eliverances, and, therefore, may be sung by any an whose life has been preserved in time of anger; yet under cover of this it mainly agnifies the Lord for spiritual blessings, of hich temporal favours are but types and adows."—Spurgeon.

3.—And gathered them out of the lands.— Gathering follows upon redeeming. No matter hat divides, the Lord will gather his own into e body."—Ibid. The object of the death of hrist is said (John xi. 52) to have been "that e should gather together in one the children of od that were scattered abroad."

7.—He led them forth by the right way.—"I n the way, the truth, and the life; no man ometh to the Father but by Me" (John xiv. 6). hat they might go to a city of habitation.—See eb. xi. 10, 16.

12, 13.—And there was none to help. Then they ied unto the Lord.—How true it is that we ust be brought to the end of help from man efore we will cry unto the Lord (John v. 7, 8; om. x. 13).

20.—He sent his word, and healed them.—This as a special significance for the spiritually sick." Paul speaks of "healthful doctrine," healthful words" (1 Tim. i. 10, vi. 3, margin .V.)

27.—They reel to and fro.—Isa. liv. 11 gives e key to the spiritual application: "O thou, ssed with tempest, and not comforted."

43.—Whoso is wise, and will observe these ings, &c.—These providential deliverances are tended to set forth "the lovingkindness of e Lord" in a higher sphere. They are so any parables of God's way of salvation.

TUESDAY, MAY 24.—PSALM CVIII.

"We cannot find it in our heart to dismiss is Psalm (as most of the commentators have Ps. lvii. 7—11, and then to Ps. lx. 5—12, though it will be at once seen that these two portions of Scripture are almost identical with the verses before us. The Holy Spirit is not so short of expressions that He needs to repeat Himself. There must be some intention in the arrangement of two former divine utterances in a new connection."—Spurgeon.

1.—Even with my glory.—"Not only the mouth but also the soul, whose praise is acceptable to God because it is glory."—Hengstenberg.

6.—That thy beloved may be delivered.—These words in Ps. lx. follow an introductory, melancholy complaint of previous defeat. Here the man of faith is wholly occupied with the praise of God, and goes on straight to victory, relying on the Word of God. "God hath spoken in his holiness, I will rejoice."

8.—Gilead is mine; Manasseh is mine.—The New Testament version of this is, "All things are yours...the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours" (1 Cor. iii. 22, 23).

10.—Who will bring me into the strong city? who will lead me into Edom?—"The strong city built on the rock, even man's hardened heart, stronger and more stony than the tomb, He has conquered and overcome; and in Him and his might are his people to carry on his warfare, casting down all the strongholds of human pride and subbornness and unrepentance."—Plain Commentary.

There is another application of these words which should not be overlooked. According to Jewish tradition, Edom typifies Rome. Rome means "strength," and as the "great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth," it has always been the most formidable antagonist to God's word, and God's people. Even to-day, with all our nineteenth century advantages, "the strong city" of Romanism is the chief opponent of the Gospel on the Continent of Europe, and the soul zealous for the spread of God's truth has still to cry, "Who will bring me into the strong city? who will lead me into Edom?" and to add, if entrance for the Gospel is to be obtained, "Vain is the help of man. Through God we shall do valiantly."

WEDNESDAY, MAY 25.—PSALM CIX.

"Under the sense of the treason of Judas (and in that treason Judas was the leader and representative of unbelieving Israel, Acts i. 16), Jesus here cries to Him who could both save Him from death and avenge Him on his adversaries."—J. G. Bellett. "We may consider Judas at the same time as the virtual head of the Jewish nation in their daring attempt to dethrone the Son of God. The doom pronounced, and the reasons for it, apply to the Jews as a nation as well as to the leader of the band who took Jesus." —A. A. Bonar. "This terrible series of maledictions, unparalleled in Holy Writ, as directed against an individual sinner, is little more than a special reduplication of the national woes denounced in Lev. xxvi. and Deut. xxviii."—Neale and Littledale.

4.—I give myself unto prayer.—The Hebrew is literally, "I am prayer." "The assertion that he is 'prayer' is intended to say that he, repudiating all revenge of himself, takes refuge in God in prayer and commits his cause into his hands."—Delitzsch.

6.—Set thou a wicked man over him.—In the Hebrew there is no emphatic "thou" as our translation would suggest. It is, "Set a wicked man," &c. From this to the end of v. 19 is best understood of God's sentence going forth in answer to the prayer (4), rather than as being the prayer of the Psalmist.

20.—Let this be the reward of mine adversaries from the Lord.—This is incorrectly rendered. There is no "let" or "be" in the Hebrew. R.V. gives it correctly: "This is the reward of mine adversaries from the Lord." This confirms the view, just expressed, of the previous nineteen verses being a judicial sentence from the Lord, in answer to the Psalmist's prayer.

THURSDAY, MAY 26.—PSALM CX.

"Luther calls this Psalm 'the true high main Psalm of our beloved Lord Jesus Christ.' Our Lord Himself attests that it was composed in the Holy Ghost, and there is no other passage of the Old Testament so frequently quoted or echoed in the New."—Hengstenberg.

1.—The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou at my right hand.—Jehovah speaks to the Messiah (David's Lord), and confers upon Him that glory which was to be the reward of his suffering. This glory proves his work accepted. "God raised Him up from the dead, and gave Him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God (1 Pet. i. 21). "This 'sit thou at my right hand' is infinitely rich in consolation for the Church of God at all times. As Arndt says, I know one who sits at the right hand of God, and He is strong enough for all my enemies, and for all my misfortune. He sits on my account at the right hand of God to protect me."—Hengstenberg.

2.—Rule Thou in the midst of thine enemies.— The present sphere of Christ's rule in grace is to be found "in the midst of his enemies." Luther says, "He gives us no other mark as to the spot where He is to rule."

3.—Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power.—"Not willing only, but willingness itself in the abstract; nay 'willingnesses' in the plural number."—Witsius. From the womb of the morning thou hast the dew of thy youth. —Delitzsch renders this, "Out of the womb of the morning's dawn cometh the dew of thy young men." The morning's dawn points to the coming of Christ. "The dew" typifies the influence of the Holy Spirit (Hosea xiv. 5). Perhaps the whole of Hosea xiv. is the best commentary on this passage. See also Rom. xv. 13; 1 John iii. 3.

4.—Thou art a priest for ever.—All priesthood is now summed up in the one Priest who is at the right hand of God. Hence sacerdotalism is anti-Christian.

5.—The Lord at thy right hand, &c.—The last three verses relate to the second coming of Christ (Rev. xix. xx.) "Wound the heads" should be "head" (R.V.), and may be an allusion to the bruising of the serpent's head, the final fulfilment of the first promise.

FRIDAY, MAY 27.—PSALM CXI.

"An alphabetical hymn of praise (each verse containing two letters). It has for its subject the works of the Lord in creation, providence, and grace."—Spurgeon.

3.—His work is honourable and glorious.—"His one special work, the salvation of his people, is here mentioned as distinguished from his many other works."—Ibid.

8.—They...are done in truth and uprightness.— "A precious word for the soul whose rest is in the finished work of Christ. Jehovah has commanded, giving it in trust to Jesus to make sure in perfect obedience the word of truth and holiness. The commandment (ver. 7), therefore, has been done." Jesus held the law within his heart to keep it there for ever. As the Fulfiller in truth of the commandment He has become its end for righteousness to every believer in his name."—A. Pridham.

SATURDAY, MAY 28.—PSALM CXII.

An alphabetical Psalm like the last. "This Psalm is immediately connected with the last verse of the preceding one, and may be considered as a commentary on it."—Hengstenberg. "The subject—the blessedness of the righteous man—bears the same relation to the preceding which the moon does to the sun; for whilst the first declares the glory of God, the second speaks of the reflection of Divine brightness in men born from above."—Spurgeon.

3.—Wealth and riches shall be in his house; and his righteousness endureth for ever.—"Often when gold comes in the Gospel goes out; but it is not so with the blessed man. Prosperity does not destroy the holiness of his life, or the humility of his heart."—Ibid. Comp. ver. 9, where the use he makes of his wealth is spoken of, followed by the same concluding clause.

5.—He will guide his affairs with discretion.— "Alas! some professedly good men act as if they had taken leave of their senses. This is not religion, but stupidity. True religion is sanctified common sense."—Spurgeon.

8.—Until he see his desire upon his enemies.— Omit "his desire upon," as not in the Hebrew. It means until he beholds them securely as being out of their reach, as Israel did at the Red Sea.

"What a comfort it is to find that the Bible saints, who now shine as stars in the firmament of heaven, were men of like passions with ourselves! They were not always saints: they sinned, and murmured, and rebelled—as we do. Heaven's rarest blades were not wrought of finer metal than that which is within our constitution. God's choicest vessels were not turned from superior earth to that of which we are made. The jewels which now lie at the foundation of the new Jerusalem were once obscure, un named men of no finer texture than ourselves. Look to the quarry whence they were hewn, and the hole of the pit whence they were digged, and say if there was much to choose between their origin and your own. And then, take heart; for if God were able to take up such men as Jacob, and Simon Bar-Jona, and make of them princes and kings, surely He can do as much for you. The discipline may be keen as fire; but the result shall be glorious; and all eternity shall ring with the praises of Him who raises up the poor out of the dust, and lifts up the beggar from the dunghill, and makes them kings and priests unto God."—Extract.

The JUBILEE YEAR!

A POEM. By R. C. M.

REPRINTED FROM "The Christian."

"Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the Jubilee
to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the Day of Atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout
all your land.
And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a Jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family."
(Lev. xxv. 9, 10.)

"'Tis the Day of Atonement! The utmost bound
Of Israel's land hears 'the joyful sound'
Of the silver trumpet, which, loud and clear,
Proclaims the gladsome Jubilee Year.

A SOLDIER'S REQUEST.

LADY writes from Reading:—"The other day I ceived the enclosed very encouraging letter om a soldier in Malta who seems most anxious find out who has been sending him The hristian for the past two years, which has, rough God's blessing, been the means of s salvation. It is difficult for me to find out e sender, so I write to ask you to aid me, as I el it is my duty to do my utmost to get the formation desired."

COPY OF THE LETTER.

Dear Friend,—I write to ask you if you would so good as to try and find out for me a hristian friend who has been kind enough to nd me The Christian paper for the last two ears and six months. It has followed me wherever I go, it has even found me in the Eastern oudan and in the Western Soudan, and I have ken it all through each campaign that I have ken part in. It is very nice to read and a omfort to any British soldier, both in the barrack oom and in the field. I have been trying to nd out my friend ever since I have come from gypt and have not succeeded, so, as I have seen our name in The Christian, and as I come rom Reading myself, I thought I would write to ou. I expect you will think me very forward or writing to you, but I do so long to find out ny dear friend, as I hope please God Almighty might find him or her so as I can thank them or their kindness for the good that they have one for me, for bringing me to the blessed ord Jesus and to know that He died to save inners.

My comrades one and all flock round me for he loan of the book as soon as I get it, and they it and read it over and over again, and I think lease God Almighty it may be the means of ringing them to God, for they do so like to read he Christian.

It is always directed to Gibraltar and then sent n from there to Cyprus, and then from there to Malta to me. There is no direction to say where t comes from, but sometimes there is a mark, "81 Ivanhoe," and that is all, but it comes direct rom England, so I ask you, dear friend, in God's name to do me this kindness if you will be so good.

[We withhold the soldier's name, but if any friends who send The Christian to the Royal Berkshire Regiment, Gibraltar, will communicate with us we shall be happy to forward their names to our correspondent —Ed]

PEACE AT TONGA.—Sir Charles Mitchell, High Commissioner for the Pacific, has been for some weeks engaged upon inquiry into the recent disturbances at Tonga. Replying to a question in the House of Commons on Monday week, Sir Henry Holland surmised that "by this time" the inquiry might be completed, which seems probable enough, since the High Commissioner left Fiji on March 24 for Tonga. The result of the iniquiry will be awaited with interest. A telegram published in The Melbourne Argus, to hand by the last mail, indicates that the situation has been horribly simplified. "The latest news from Tonga," says the telegram, "reports that all is quiet there, and that the Wesleyans have been totally exterminated." Thus order reigned in Tonga before the High Commissioner arrived. [A later telegram referred to in the House of Commons somewhat modifies this, and states that the king has guaranteed liberty to all.]

ANTI-VACCINATION CONFERENCE.—A Conference of delegates from all parts of England has been held at the Apple Tree Restaurant, Poultry, to discuss the question of the repeal of the Vaccination Acts, and the granting of Government bonuses to English public vaccinators. Mr. William Young presided, and was supported by the leaders of the movement in London and the provinces. In view of the debate in the House of Commons on the estimates a resolution was adopted, pointing out that the vote of £16,500 for bonuses to public vaccinators was distributed among English vaccinators only, and declaring that this expenditure was useless and unnecessary. A resolution was also passed, urging the appointment of a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the practice and results of vaccination, and that the operation of

FREE ITALIAN CHURCH.

The sixteenth annual report of this Church is issued, and it abounds with evidences of life and progress. The unfortunate position of the Union negotiations with the Waldenses is stated clearly. The Italians have an intenser love for nationality even than our Irish or Scotch. Their desire was to lay the basis of a great national Church, bearing the national name. For that they were willing to sink their own name and identity, to hand over all their valuable properties with their organisations, and to remove the stigma of division in face of a common enemy. But the Waldensians have insisted on preserving their own name for Italy, and making Italy Waldensian.

It is greatly to be desired for the sake of a most interesting country, that the counsels of friends of both parties should lead to a union, commendable to both and advantageous to Italy.* Everywhere there is evidence of the revived work of the Jesuits through the late brief of Leo XIII. A special interest attaches to the school work of the Church. In Rome it seems that all other evangelical schools have been shut through the ceaseless efforts of the priests. But at the head of the bridge of Sant' Angelo, the school of the Free Italian Church has kept on with its work, though no less than thirteen Popish schools all round it have been playing on it like so many batteries.

* [We confess to a doubt whether the proposed "great national Church" would be so advantageous. What we have seen in Spain of an endeavour to establish a similar national church there does not lead us to desire it either there or in Italy. We do not think such an endeavour is founded on Scripture precedent.—Ed.].

AMERICAN NOTES.

Brooklyn.—Working Girls' Clubs are held at different parts of this city, to which physicians and others have given free instruction in sanitary science, hygiene, domestic economies, first aid to injured, gymnastics, cooking, and sewing. There have been recently organised eighty bands of women, 7500 in number, auxiliary to the City Mission Society, in which the educated and wealthy classes are well represented. A new impulse is given to evangelistic labour.

Chicago.—The Adelphi Mission began three years ago last October, when Rev. and Mrs. A. H. Kirkland, of Brooklyn, held a Gospel service on the Custom House stoop, closing with a free lunch of coffee and sandwiches. The Adelphi Theatre was secured, for years the resort of harlots, thieves, and gamblers, and surrounded by fifteen pawnshops, and twenty-four drinking-saloons, and uncounted houses of evil resort. Among these people 1600 meetings have been held, average attendance 150, and 8000 profess conversion. Changed lives attest the genuineness of many of these conversions. Many drunkards, too, have become sober men. The Mission Worker is the monthly organ of the Mission.

SUPPER TO OMNIBUS MEN.—On Thursday night Lord and Lady William Compton gave a supper to about three hundred ostlers connected with the Chelsea and Hammersmith lines of omnibuses. After the repast, brief words of exhortation were spoken by Mr. Weylland, Mrs. Frank Bevan, Mr. A. Smith, City Missionary, and others. Last of all, the noble host wished them peace with God, improvement in their social condition, and good morning. Each man on retiring got a present of books and cards.

ORPHANS AT WALTHAMSTOW.—Dear Sir,—After eight weeks' serious illness and much suffering, I am on the way to recovery of strength, and to the taking up of my work again. We have long been seeking a house which would give us the room and convenience we have been so sorely needing for the good of our children. Such an one has just lately offered, and within five minutes of our present Home. I feel this is of God's guidance, and have, therefore, decided to take it. We hope to be able to occupy the house almost immediately, and in order to do so ask the sympathy and help of those whose hearts yearn over the little children.

Yours faithfully, Mary Parsons.

Cumberland House, Walthamstow.

DEATH—then POWER.

2 Chron. xxvi. and Is. vi.

On, past the smoking altar!
 On, past resisting priest!
Pushes self-willed Uzziah;
 Nor have his footsteps ceased,
Until he gains the Presence
 Where only Levites stand:
And while they cry, he lifts on high
 The censer in his hand.

Why does that death-like pallor
 His angry face o'erspread?
And why that awful whiteness?
 His folly now is stayed.
He hastens from the Temple
 A leper white as snow.
He leaves the throne, he dwells alone.
 Was king e'er brought so low?

But now another Temple,
 With flaming seraphim,
And "another King—one Jesus"—
 Who makes earth's splendour dim,
Bursts on Isaiah's vision.
 But the leper king had died
E'er that royal One—God's only Son—
 Poured forth his glory tide;
And the glowing coal met the prophet's lips,
 And the word came from the throne,
"Thou art healed by that touch—Go, thy roll shall be such As no prophet nor seer hath known."

Within another kingdom—
 Thy soul, O child of God!—
Another king holds legal sway,
 And dares uplift the rod;
Boldly he utters his mandates
 Where angels would be awed,
'Tis a leper still—'tis thy own self-will,
 'Tis a rebel against God.

Would'st thou see the exceeding glory
 Of thy thrice holy God?
Know anew the atoning power
 Of the altar's precious blood!—
That celestial touch that quickens,
 While it burns away thy sin?
Would'st thou be re-commissioned
 Many perishing ones to win?
Then too in thy innermost being
 A death, yea a burial, must be.
Thy will must be slain, and thou risen again;
 Then the word "Who will go for me?"

Heed the earthly "Go" of Jesus,
 Spoken on Galilee's hill;
For all power in earth and heaven
 Abides in the Risen One still.
But heed well this "Go" from heaven
 That rang in the prophet's soul
When self-will was slain, and from every stain
 He was cleansed by the altar's coal.

Fez, Morocco. E. F. Baldwin.

MESSRS. FULLERTON & SMITH have concluded a fortnight's mission at Middlesborough, and have now crossed the Tees for a fortnight's work at Stockton. The meetings are in connection with all the free churches in the town.

FACTORY HELPERS' UNION.—The superintendents of various missions to factory girls met in consultation last week at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street. Mr. George Holland, who presided, said he believed the number of factory girls in the metropolis, including those not in regular employ, would reach a total of 400,000. He told something of his fifteen years' labour on behalf of these girls, of whom there are now three hundred at evening classes and meetings at George-yard, Whitechapel. As to the methods of reaching these girls he dwelt on the advantage of cookery and dressmaking lessons, on the necessity for wholesome recreation, and especially urged the importance of influencing them while young, before their characters have been moulded by the evil surrounding them. Several ladies offered to assist in the work. Any who can help should communicate with Miss E. Robarts, hon. sec., 164, Old Cavendish-street, W.

THE REGIONS BEYOND.

(Concluded from THE CHRISTIAN of April 28.)

NORTH AFRICA.

SEVEN students went out to join the mission to the Kabyle and other Berber races in North Africa, where already, scattered along the extended line of 1100 miles between Tangier and Tunis, several others had been previously labouring. Mr. J. Pryor, a Cornishman, last year formed a school for native boys in Morocco, which he will resume as soon as he has sufficiently recovered from a dangerous attack of typhoid fever. Mr. Liley has been itinerating in the province of Oran and visiting the soldiers of the Foreign Legion; and some interesting extracts from the diary of Miss Reed give a good idea of the kind of work done by lady missionaries in Algeria.

Of one feature of African life, offering a wide field to missionary effort, a graphic account follows:—

"We have to-day seen the most wonderful spectacle the Desert has to show—the Roála camp. We came upon it quite suddenly, as, crossing a low ridge of rising ground, we looked down over the plain of Saighál, and saw it covered, as far as the eye could reach, with a countless multitude of tents, and men, and mares, and camels. In the extreme distance, at least ten miles away, lay the lake of Saighál, glittering white in the sun; and the whole space between it and where we stood seemed occupied, while east and west there was at least an equal depth of camp. We have estimated the whole number of tents at twenty thousand, and of camels at one hundred and fifty thousand, and at the sight I felt an emotion of almost awe, as when one first sees the sea. It gave us, too, an immense idea of the real size of the tribe thus congregated, to find that, travelling at our usual pace, it was more than two hours before we arrived at Sotamm's (the chief's) tent, which stood, they told us, in the centre of the camp, and that during all our route we were never a hundred yards away from a tent."

THE CONGO.

The following account of a wonderful work at Banza Manteka, where Mr. Henry Richards is stationed, is from the pen of Mr. Stephen J. White, of whose early death, accentuating the dangers which missionaries so bravely face, we informed our readers at the time of its occurrence:—

"During the last month nearly seven hundred people have been blessedly converted to God, and one who saw these people five years ago, as I did, and sees them now, can see the great change, and cannot but praise God for his wonderful grace, which has brought them salvation. Their faces tell the story, and their lives confirm their profession. This evening two of the converts returned from a preaching tour, and they have visited several villages. They report five conversions. They met with a good deal of opposition, and some of the people threatened to shoot them, but they replied that they were not afraid of death now, for it was not death to them, but only going to be with Jesus. One man got up and defended them, and said he would kill anyone who killed them. From this same town a man and his family have been driven away, because he tried to teach his fellow-townsmen what he himself has learned. He is rejoicing in his new-found love. I wish those who take an interest in the work out here could just peep in at the morning and evening services, and see with what vigour the people sing the hymns of praise, the eagerness with which they drink in the Word, and the simple, child-like faith they show in their prayers. They would pray and give more liberally to forward the glorious work of 'Congo for Christ.'"

Mr. James B. Eddie supplies a review of last year's work on the Upper Congo, from which we take the following extract:—

"At our station at the Equator school work has been maintained throughout almost the whole year, and indeed since the station was first established in October, 1884. The children have shown themselves to be fairly intelligent; but work among them has been greatly hindered through want of school materials. For a long time we had only two slates among twenty, and no school-books whatever. The average attendance since school began has been about twenty. The most of them lived with us. Education is of no value in the eyes of these people, and so we need not expect them to be anxious to get for themselves, or for their children, what to them appears to be quite useless, though they think it is of great value and profit to the white man. Besides school, every morning we have a short service, reading and explaining portions of 'Peep of Day,' singing and praying, and conversing with any who are so disposed; and there is scarcely a native but is fond of conversing, and will talk and ask questions by the hour. For some time they were very much afraid to bow the head or close the eyes in prayer. The boys, who considered that to be a most important item, would urge them to do so, but instead, they would seize their arms and run off a short distance, where they would wait until the suspicious-looking business (in their eyes) of praying was over, when they would rejoin us. After a time these feelings of fear and suspicion wore off, and we very often had an attentive and inquisitive audience. Interruptions in our services are frequent: one wishes to deny the truth of some statement which does not happen to agree with his opinions or practice, another to ask some question, and a third to make some remark. But in prayer every face is covered and every breath hushed—we are speaking to God."

SOUTH AFRICA.

The mission here, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Clarke, of Ixopo, Rock Fountain, Natal, is in a very hopeful state, and an incident thus described by Mr. Clarke well illustrates the character of the work in this region:—

"During a journey of about one hundred and fifty miles up to the Kahlamba mountains, I stayed at the kraal of a chief, where I had been before. On going into the chief's hut, to my great surprise and joy, I found him trying to spell out a few words of the Bible in Isaiah xv.—not a very profitable portion for a soul grovelling in darkness! I sat down by him, and led him to another part. In the afternoon all the people in the neighbourhood were called up, and we had a good meeting, they being most eager for the Word. After we had cooked some food, and were sitting on the ground round the fire, the chief sent to ask for one little word more before they went to sleep. Of course, I was delighted, and went at once to the chief's hut, where I found every man, woman, and child of the kraal assembled to hear the Word. There were about sixty in all; the Holy Ghost was working in many of their hearts, and a most blessed sense of God's presence was felt. In the morning, just as the day was breaking, I was waked up by a woman praying on the other side of the hut; while listening to her, I could hear in the hut to the left of me, another woman praying, and in a hut to the right of me, the chief himself was engaged in the same way. Before we left, the chief was very anxious to have another meeting; he was most careful not to begin till every one was present who could possibly come, and we had a vary impressive time. The chief plainly said before his assembled wives and children that he intended from this time to serve God, and that it was his wish that they should do so too."

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.—Last week the second party of children left Mr. Quarrier's Homes at the Bridge of Weir, for Canada. The first party, which left little more than a month ago, was made up of 117 boys; this was composed of 96 girls and 19 boys, who were all very cheerful looking, and were well equipped with warm clothing for the voyage. Mr. Quarrier and others

REINFORCEMENTS FOR AFRICA.

MORLEY HALL, the new premises of the Y.W.C. in Regent-street, was all too small for the cro that gathered there on Tuesday week to ta part in the Valedictory Dismissal of missionari The event had been announced with so prominence at the anniversary meetings of t C.M.S., but beyond this was the fact that t missionaries who were to take their farewell we bound for Eastern Equatorial Africa, and there is one part of the foreign mission fie more than another that to-day stimulates e thusiasm, it is that part where Bishop Hanningt was martyred, and where so many native co verts have recently sealed their faith with the blood.

The missionaries were seven in number, whom six were present—viz., Rev. J. C. Pric who is returning after a year's well-earn furlough, and will take back with him, as t result of his own labours, the first printed bo of the Scriptures in the Gogo dialect, a hither unwritten language; Rev. R. P. Ashe, of Ugand Rev. W. Roper, who is going out at his ow charges to join his friend Mr. Hooper; Re Robert H. Walker, Curate of All Souls', Langha place, who will accompany his old friend M Ashe; Rev. A. G. Smith, and Rev. W. Morri two students from the Islington College, wh were ordained last Sunday; and Mr. Dav Deekes, who goes as a lay agent. The preci destination of the missionaries will, to som extent, be left to the discretion of Bish Parker—in whose wisdom and administrati action it was pointed out the Committee feel ever confidence—when they arrive in Africa. M Smith and Mr. Morris were expected to sail the following day, but the others will probab not leave until June or July.—Record.

THE FRUIT OF BAD READING.

THE following case, mentioned in the report the Christian Colportage Society, should p parents and young persons on their guard:—

Domestic servants have always formed a mos important class of persons, to whom this agenc has been particularly blessed. It is little know perhaps, to what an extent these are readers the highly sensational and often impure novelett and weekly serials, or how much injury is thu done. The following sad case, reported to u by one of our colporteurs, is only a sample the sad effects of this evil in too many cases:—

"I should like to bring before your notice th case of a young girl ruined by bad books an bad company. This person of whom I write i only eighteen years of age, and is the daughte of very respectable poor people. She answere an advertisement some time ago as a house maid, and obtained a situation, the parent judging the place was all right. The daughte went to the new situation. Nothing unusua occurred for some twelve months, and then th girl's parents were startled to find that thei daughter had left her place some weeks, an had been living too probably an evil life. I now appears that it was a common practic among the servants at the house to read an delight in trashy novels, and those pollutin books which work such havoc upon the young This poor young girl was filled with the wicke trash common in ordinary novelettes, and th consequence is as I have named.

"The parents pressed their daughter to come home, and promised a free and full forgiveness The girl came, but was not home many weeks before the old desire returned to walk the way of sin, and then, enticing another girl of the same age as herself, she ran away to London and was last heard of there. Before leavin home, she acted in the most cruel and heartles manner, and actually took away with her al articles of value that she could likely pawn o sell. This is a clear case of the most manifes results of bad books. Once the mind is fille with such evil things, I find the utmost difficult in dealing with people. Alas! the means to purchase, as well as the desire to get, is so easy that the work of destruction is terrible to co

OBITUARY.

HON. ION KEITH FALCONER.

As we go to press we receive, with deep regret, the announcement of the death at Aden, whither he had gone as a Free Church missionary, of the Hon. Ion Grant Keith Falconer, brother of the Earl of Kintore. The deceased, who was thirty-one years of age, was well known in connection with evangelical work in the East-end.

REV. C. J. WHITMORE.

On May 13 this well-known Presbyterian pastor entered into rest, in his sixty-fourth year. In 1866 he gave up secular work and devoted himself to the work of the Presbyterian ministry. He held pastorates at Millwall, Wilson-street, Drury-lane, and Kentish Town-road. It has been evident through all his work at this last charge, entered on in 1882, that his physical strength was failing. Indeed, the work at Drury-lane, and the circumstances under which it had to be carried on, were enough to break down the strength of any man. In 1879, after a severe illness, he was ordered abroad; but even then he could not wholly rest from preaching, when opportunity arose. Mr. Whitmore had a facile pen, as many sketches in these columns in past years could testify. He wrote various books of a religious and polemical order, and also many tracts, of which, perhaps, the most popular are, "Herrings for Nothing," "Tit for Tat," and "What becomes of the Infidel Leaders?" His tender heart was ever seeking to find out ways of helping the poor, many of whom will mourn the loss of a friend.

RAGGED SCHOOL HOLIDAY HOMES.—The movement, began in a very small way twenty years ago by the Ragged-school Union for giving much needed change of air to some of the thousands of pale faced children attending these schools, has expanded, until last year eleven hundred were sent away for a fortnight's holiday. The new joy and benefit to health thus conferred upon these little ones can only be revealed by those who have had the privilege of seeing them on their return. Besides the ordinary country cottage accommodation, the Committee have now three Homes, which are already full of children, besides a fourth for elder lads or girls, and some of the needy voluntary workers. The local schools share in the cost, and many Christian friends will be glad to co-operate in this good work. The secretary is Mr. John

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Major Cole has completed a ten weeks' series of Gospel meetings in Springfield, Mo., which resulted in some 1500 professed conversions. Twelve pastors of churches in the city addressed to him a cordial letter of thanks.

Norway.—M. Hubert, of Christiania, writes that he has lately returned from a three months' journey in the country, and he finds that a work of spiritual revival is in progress everywhere. In the districts south and east of Christiania a wonderful awakening is going on amongst the peasants.

A Ten Days' Mission in connection with the Cowgate work of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society has been closed. From Thursday, April 14, till Sunday, April 24, crowded nightly meetings were held. Every family in the neighbourhood was visited by the students; thousands of tracts were distributed, and hundreds, night by night, heard the sweet story of redeeming love.

New Cross Mission Band.—The Mission Band formed last summer by a few members of the South Eastern Railway have recommenced open-air work on Saturday evenings in Deptford Broadway. During the winter months a Bible-class was held. The open-air meetings have been full of encouragement. Gospel tracts, &c., will be gratefully received by Mr. E. C. Cox, 16, Amersham-grove, New-cross, S.E.

Clapham.—Mr. Herbert R. Francis and Mr. Oscar Owers have concluded eight days' services in the Mission Church, South Island-place, Clapham-road. Since the church was reopened three months ago there has been much blessing on the work. Many non-churchgoers were present at the meetings, and some professed to find the Saviour. A thanksgiving tea-meeting at the close was well attended, and it is believed much permanent blessing will result from this effort.

Soldiers at Chatham.—From April 16 to 24, Mr. W. Spencer Walton held services for soldiers at Miss Daniell's "Soldiers' Home" here. They were much blessed. Many have found peace and are going on their way rejoicing. During this year there will be great parades of our troops. Will your readers pray for blessing upon all ranks in the army, and that more of his children may be stirred up to devote their lives to work among the troops? At Miss Daniell's numerous Soldiers' Homes, there is plenty of work for ladies who desire to be God's instruments for the salvation of soldiers. E. R. Kenyon, Capt. R.E.

Merthyr Tydvil.—A nine days' united Gospel mission, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, was brought to a close in this town on Monday, May 9. His Bible-readings and addresses were fresh and forcible, and much appreciated by those who heard them. He was assisted in the inquiry-room by friends belonging to different denominations. In addition to the large number of professed conversions, a gracious influence has been left which will undoubtedly be felt in the churches of the town, many of whose members were drawn together at the different meetings.

Mr. E. Payson Hammond, after holding a week's meetings at Paterson, N.J., commenced at the end of April a mission at Yonkers. His first addresses were given in the Temperance Hall, which is one result of a visit to this place ten years ago. On the following Sunday morning Mr. Hammond preached in Rev. Mr. Allison's church, where many hearts were melted. In the afternoon Rev. Dr. Cole's church was crowded in every part. The majority of those present were adults, and many deeply anxious about their souls found their way into the inquiry-room.

REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR addressed a drawing-room meeting at Woolwich last Thursday afternoon, and a largely-attended gathering in the Assembly Rooms in the evening. The deepest interest was felt throughout, and a few who remained after the evening meeting were address ed by Mr. Taylor for nearly half an hour. Very earnest was his pleading with Christians to give themselves wholly to the Lord, and to be very zealous in winning souls for Christ, whether at home or abroad.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—Prayer for blessing on the following special evangelistic efforts:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, at Thorner, near Leeds, May 23 to June 3; Mr. Herbert R. Francis, at Southampton, to May 20, and Winchester, May 21 to 29; Mr. William Day, of the Evangelisation Society, at Conference Hall, Stratford, E., to May 22; Gospel Tent Missions, at Coningsby, Lincolnshire, May22 to June 16, and at Denholm, N.B.——For special services for children and young people, at Waterford, by Mr. Banaster; at the Grove Mission, Southwark, by Mr. H. W. Pewtress, May 23 to 27; at Woolwich, by Mr. Spiers, June 6 to 10.——For blessing on the efforts of some Christian men to establish an evangelist in a hitherto much neglected village.——For special services at Victoria-park, Torquay, by Mr. John Elliott, till Sunday May 22.——For blessing on the opening of a mission hall, in connection with the Christian work for women, at Garfield House, Ryde, I.W.——That Miss Whateley (Cairo) may be restored to health, and for her safe journey to this country.

Among the Churches.

⁂ We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

There are fifteen deaconesses and thirty associates now labouring in the poorer parishes of East London.

The Church Zenana Missionary Society has now ninety lady missionaries in India, together with 400 assistants, native Bible-women, and teachers.

The Scripture Readers' Association employs, according to the report presented at the annual meeting, 123 agents, nearly the whole of whom labour in London.

BAPTIST.

The church at Ayr, N.B., has been rapidly increasing in numbers since Rev. J. Horne (of Mr. Spurgeon's College) undertook the pastorate, eight months ago.

The Yorkshire Baptist Association, which has just celebrated its centenary, is composed of 90 churches, with 14,844 members; 124 Sunday-schools, with over 25,000 scholars.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A very successful series of mission services has been conducted at the church at Alston by Mr. Thomas Cauker, a Cornish evangelist.

During the first year's pastorate of Rev. A. H. Storrow at Falcon-square, London, the work of the church has shown increased vitality in all its branches.

Rev. George Avery, on the first anniversary of his settlement at Dorking as pastor, stated that special open services for outsiders have been conducted with encouraging results.

SALVATION ARMY.

During the last few months fifty persons professed conversion at Terrington (Norfolk), and most of them are now fighting in the ranks.

It is affirmed in The War Cry that "at this present moment nearly every man in the Seven Dials' lodging-houses is under deep conviction."

The Glasgow anniversary meetings, in the Globe Theatre, have been greatly blessed. At one 150 persons came forward and made a full surrender, and at another "160 were out for the blessing."

In Thrawl-street, Whitechapel, seventeen of the lodging houses are under regular visitation. In one of the worst, a woman brought to the Saviour last autumn is letting her light shine, and the walls are decorated with texts.

METHODIST.

Special services, conducted by Rev. F. M. Lowry, district missionary, at Belper, have resulted in a great quickening of the church.

Captain Warner Dennis has concluded a ten days' mission at Bridgewater. About forty turned to the Lord, many of them young women.

Rev. T. Waugh, who conducted a successful mission at Huddersfield in the autumn, returned recently to see what fruit remained, and expressed himself as thankful for what he saw.

As a result of the mission conducted by Mr. Launcelot Middleton at Langley Heath, Maidstone, in December last, many of those converted are now working in neighbouring villages. Many have been converted since.

A most successful twelve days' mission has been concluded at Blenheim-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, by Rev. Thomas Waugh. The men's meetings were remarkable for the great influence at work, and the proportion of men amongst the many inquirers was very marked.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

M. A. Marriage Allen, of Dublin, has returned from America after a successful mission there.

J. Backhouse Hodgkin and wife are visiting some of the home mission stations in the Eastern Counties.

The law has given the Friends special consideration in their marriage regulations. An effort is now being made to simplify their usages therein.

The meeting-house at West Hartlepool is now open for worship on Sabbath mornings, and for mission meetings in the evenings. An afternoon Bible-class is also held on Sundays.

A general meeting for worship was held at Brigflatts (Sedbergh) on the 6th inst. This meeting has been held twice in the year on the same premises (dated 1674) without intermission since 1701.

The proposal to establish a High Class School is being discussed in the Friends' Monthly periodicals. The children of wealthy Friends are often lost to the Society, it is thought, by want of such an institution.

In Madagascar the work is being pushed out to the Sakalava heathen. Rafaralahy, an active evangelist in the Friends' district, has felt the burden laid on him, and is "making earnest efforts to carry to his heathen fellow-countrymen the knowledge which he himself has received."

In Ohio, at West Milton, a five weeks' mission resulted in sixty-two professed conversion, thirty-five wishing to join the Friends. In the same State, at Highland, twenty more conversions, and eleven applications, are reported. At Samantha, where Emma Spencer and Lizzie Marshall held a mission, eighty professed conversion, and thirty wished membership

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mr. Donald Macrae, Lochcarron, one of the notable "men" of the North, after a week's illness.—Mr. Edward Watson, for many years an esteemed member and deacon of Carr's-lane Congregational chapel, Birmingham.—Mrs. A. Richmond, the oldest member of the Methodist Society at Bilsborough.—Mr. Henry Clayfield, a deacon of the Baptist church at Blakeney for fifteen years.—Rev. F. J. Bird, pastor of the Baptist church at Walsworth-road, Hitchin.—Rev. Christopher Churchill Bartholomew, prebendary and sub-dean of Exeter, aged 84.—Mrs. Cobon, a prominent member of the Methodist church at Lyng, Devon.—Rev. Henry Hilton-Green, rector of West Kingston and hon. canon of Bristol.—Rev. Thomas Tomlinson, a Methodist minister of Nottingham.—Mr. George Barratt, member of the Methodist church at Spilsby for more than fifty years.—Mr. John Nunn, one of the eldest and best-known members of the Society of East Molesey, in the Richmond (Surrey) Circuit.—Mary Davis, wife of Mr. William Davis, Hon. Sec. of the West London Auxiliary of the Open-Air Mission.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE. — The people of Dr. Talmage's church have bought lots adjoining, and will add a wing, capable of seating 1000 persons, to their present edifice.

GENEVA.—The Christian Young Men's Association here, 2, Place du Poit, appears to be in full working order. During the first three months of this year 6414 persons attended the various meetings.

MICHIGAN has the good law that no placards or posters shall be displayed in public representing murders, stabbing, or personal violence. Theatrical posters sin very frequently by displaying what is an injury to public morals, and should be suppressed.

RECENT ELECTIONS IN CHICAGO and other cities, and especially the demand for united opposition to the liquor-traffic and the socialistic tendencies of the labour party, are suggesting to thinking men the power and responsibility of society as distinct from the power and responsibility of political parties. In Chicago the weakening of party ties sufficiently to allow a combination against a socialistic movement saved the city from a great calamity.

MISSIONARIES EXILED.—According to intelligence received at Vienna three Armenian Protestant missionaries residing in Tiflis have been exiled to Siberia. Just before Easter all three missionaries were arrested, thrown into prison like common criminals, and sent to Orenburg on their way to Siberia. The pretext for their arrest is, says The Daily News correspondent, that they displayed undue activity in making converts to their faith, but this accusation is said to be altogether false.

PERSIA —Mr. E. W. Alexander, of the Presbyterian Mission in Persia, notices a great change in Hamadan in a single year. "Hostility to us and our work," he writes, "seems to be a thing of the past." He says Americans, Jews, Kûrds, and Persians, seldom less than twenty, attend evening service, and follow one another in prayer. There are many cases for medical treatment. This dispensary at Tabriz is thronged with sick, sometimes a hundred cases are treated in a single day. A Mohammedan Count was recently baptized openly in Tabriz, a significant innovation.

THE AZTECS.—A church has been recently finished by the American Episcopalian missionaries in Mexico. The natives gave the land, and many took part in the opening ceremony, welcoming the entrance of the Bishop with music from thirty wind instruments. Bishop Hurst's address had to be translated first into Spanish, then into the Aztec language. It seems that Popery is on the decline amongst these Aztec Indians: it is to be hoped that Protestant Churches will be alive to their duty to preach the simple Gospel to them.—Journal Religieux.

THE BALTIC PROVINCES.—A letter from the Governor of Livonia to the Bishop of Riga commands the village priests to inform their flock that the law punishes by imprisonment for twenty months those parents who allow their children to be taught the Lutheran doctrines; that all marriages celebrated in Lutheran Churches are illegal, and the children of such marriages illegitimate; that the pupils of the Lutheran pastors can receive no Government employment; and that the children of parents who educate their offspring in the Lutheran faith, can be legally deprived of them, and their education given to the care of others.

THE RELIGIOUS CHANGES IN COREA are most important and hopeful. Only one year ago there was but one foreign teacher in connection with the Government school, and he was a professed infidel. Now the same school is in charge of three excellent Christian men, and has an attendance of thirty select scholars. The Methodist school has matriculated over forty-five students, and the Medical College in charge of the Presbyterians has an attendance of about twenty. The Orphanage, under the care of the same mission, has over twenty-five; and thus more than one hundred pupils have been brought under Christian influence during the past year. People are all the time coming to the missionaries to be taught about Christianity. One man walked twenty-five miles to hear the Gospel, and has been three times for that purpose.—N.Y. Evangelist.

WOLDINGHAM, SURREY. — A correspondent writes to say that he thinks the paragraph under this heading in our last issue is misleading, inasmuch as the "clergyman from a distance" referred to is the rector of the parish, who holds Wolding-

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Rev. Thomas Champness, at The Joyful News offic Rochdale, publishes some very effective temperanc leaflets.

The Greenwich Hospital Band of Hope has a membe ship of 622. Last year 322 boys left as pledged te totallers.

At a ladies' temperance demonstration, in St. Par cras, it was stated the temperance cause has become power in the district.

Lord Chief Justice Coleridge has attributed a larg amount of the litigation that occurs, to temper an passion generated by drinking.

It appears, from a reply given in the House c Commons, that teachers of national schools in Irelan must neither keep nor reside in public-houses.

The Economist states that if the drink revenue had i creased with the population, it would now be £2,000,00 more than it was ten years ago; whereas, it has falle £4,000,000.

The temperance report of the Presbyterian Churc of England, presented at the recent session of th Synod, at Manchester, spoke of increased vigour i church effort.

A writer in The Morning Post said, recently, he kne personally a number of M.P.'s who had won their seat by "clever and most unscrupulous manipulation of th teetotal question."

At the recent quarterly Court of the Governors of th Newcastle-on-Tyne Infirmary, Mr. W. D. Stephens sai thanks were due to the medical staff for the reductio they had effected in the consumption of spirits an beer.

At the Manchester Assizes, just held, Mr. Justic Wills remarked on the fact that out of eleven cases o homicide or attempted homicide to be tried, eight o the offences were committed on Saturday night. H clearly intimated his opinion that drink was the cause.

On May 5 the House of Commons adopted Mr. Charle Acland's amendment to illegalise the supply of intoxi cating drinks as part wages. We hear, however, that on the report, a strong effort will be made to reverse th decision, hence it is important to support the clause a it stands.

A very large number of conferences and meetings o landowners, farmers, and labourers have been held o this subject, in twenty-three counties, during the las eight or ten years, and, on every occasion when a reso lution has been moved in favour of the principle i question, it has been carried almost unanimously.

The Echo fears the great increase in drinking, in con nection with the Queen's Jubilee, "will make this yea a curse." The two pamphlets published at 337, Strand one by Lady Ellice on "The Shadow of a Comin Danger," and one by Mr. McCree on "The Queen' Health," should be widely circulated.

The new penny weekly publication entitled Th Temperance Caterer, will be conducted strictly as th commercial organ of the large class now engaged i temperance catering in hotels, restaurants, coffe taverns, cafés, cocoa-rooms, &c., and is calculated to b of interest and value to them. It is published b Messrs. William Rider & Son, 14, Bartholomew-close London, E.C.

FOREIGN.

The formation of a Prohibition associated press i talked of in the United States.

The Premier of Nova Scotia advises liquour-dealer to prepare for Prohibition as inevitable.

Canon Wilberforce arrived in New York on April 25 A reception was to be tendered him by the Nationa Temperance Society.

Foggin Tor, Dartmouth.—Pecuniary help is urgently required to complete the mission chapel and cottage being erected on Foggin Tor, one of the wildest and most neglected spots on Dartmoor. The population is scattered over the moor, with no church or chapel within reasonable distance of the greater part. William Short, the originator of this Mission, the signal-man at Prince Town Railway Station, has conducted a Sunday-school on Foggin Tor for two years or more, trudging over the moor Sunday after Sunday, regardless of wind, rain, or snow, at 1,500 feet above the sea level. The Deputy-Governor of Dartmoor Prison, Lieut.-Colonel Plummer, is treasurer, and William Short, secretary.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, May 14, 1887.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

"THE greatest battle the world has ever seen," says an American divine, "is the battle of bread," and none who study

> The city with its noise, its ceaseless whirl and din,
> The myriad hearts that daily beat and break therein, will doubt the truth of this statement. Every morning sees a vast crowd leaving their homes to enter upon a struggle as real as ever a battle-field produced; hand, heart, and head combined in the conflict; every faculty of mind and body brought into subservience to the one great end.

What wonder that in such a battle many fall! What wonder if the continuous strain proves too much for the system, and, nature's cry for rest being unheeded, work becomes a misery; and, as the toilers attend to their various duties,

> The heart is sick, and the brain benumbed,
> As well as the weary hand.

How to regain lost strength is now the great problem by which men's minds are agitated. Ordinary medicinal treatment is of no avail; the cause, not the symptoms merely, must be dealt with. Debilitated systems must be strengthened and energised before they can again take their place in the "bivouac of life." Experience has taught us that to surround the body by natural influences which almost imperceptibly but surely revive the recuperative force, will soothe the overwrought nerves to rest, and restore lost energy, enabling the workers to return with wonted zeal to the task of life.

There is a wonderful power—Magnetism—little understood, whose curative attributes have been wonderfully demonstrated; and by its invigorating influences, not only is power given to resume work, but by and by labour becomes sweet; so that with such a potent element continually in action, the chances of relapse are far more remote than they otherwise would be. We do not say that in all cases where the nervous system has been shattered by continuous overwork, Magnetism will be equally successful; but we do say that the experience of many years, and the testimonials of numerous business men and weary women, to whom the advice to try Magnetism was as Milton's "Arise, or be for ever fallen," confirm us in our opinion that if it does not prove beneficial, other remedies will be of little avail.

On receipt of particulars of any case in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be forwarded, and the required treatment suggested by Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, FINSBURY-SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

"BLESSINGS ON THE BEES!"

A Story of Systematic Giving.
BY S. J. HUMPHREY,
Author of "For His Sake."

"After we have our homes paid for, and are in comfortable circumstances, all we can make surely belongs to the Lord. It would only burden us to keep it; but if given back to Him it is a source of great happiness ever after. It must yield in the conversion of souls more than compound interest."
Extract.

Price 6d. per dozen, or 3s. 6d. per 100.

FOR HIS SAKE.

A Deeply-Interesting Narrative.
BY S. J. HUMPHREY,
Author of "Blessings on the Bees."

"A year ago this winter our house took fire. It was in the middle of the night, and we were all asleep. The flames were first discovered by a poor neighbour, who at once gave the alarm, and then burst in the door. . . . It seems almost a miracle that we were got out alive. We were dazed and suffocated, and it was only the heroic courage and great strength of our neighbour that brought us down the blazing stairway into the open air; but it nearly cost him his life."—Extract.

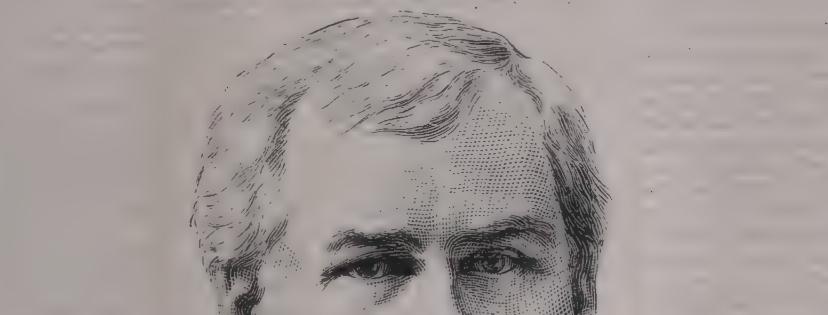
REV. A. J. GORDON, D.D., BOSTON, U.S.

THE honoured servant of God and the American Churches, whose portrait we give to-day, is not known except by repute on this side of the Atlantic. We trust that his voice may be heard in Old England before long. His public ministry as a pastor, extending to about a quarter of a century, has been confined to cultured Boston and its suburbs; but his name is a household word in evangelical circles throughout the United States. Though only fifty-one years of age, there is probably no man in the American pulpit to-day whose ministrations are more appreciated, and who is more highly esteemed for his own sake. If it be permissible to draw such a comparison, we should say that he represents to us the attributes we are wont to associate with the disciple whom Jesus loved.



(From Photograph by Mr. J. Notman, Boston.)

It is only needful to mention the initial names of Dr. GORDON — ADONIRAM JUDSON — to show that he came of a godly parentage and was surrounded in his early years by the best and most gracious of influences. He was converted at the age of sixteen, and, having espoused Baptist views, entered on the customary studies to fit himself for the work of the Christian ministry in connection with that denomination. His first pastorate was at Jamaica Plain, a suburb of Boston. Since 1869 he has been pastor of the old-established and flourishing church now located in Clarendon-street, Boston. It is "one of the most aggressive and spiritually active Baptist churches in the city. It does much in the way of benevolent and missionary work, both home and foreign." We can scarcely imagine a congregation under the pastorate of so practical and large-hearted a teacher doing anything else. This pastorate has been marked by more than one fruitful revival of religion. When Messrs. Moody and Sankey were in Boston some years since, the large tabernacle in which the meetings were held, was located near his church, and Dr. Gordon threw himself heart and soul into the work. His association with the eminent evangelist has been of the closest character since. No teacher receives a heartier welcome at the Northfield Conferences than the Boston divine; and no speaker's words at these gatherings are more eagerly drunk in and carefully treasured up. Only a few weeks have passed since a series of special services were conducted at Dr. Gordon's church, by the evangelist, Dr. L. Munhall.

The prayer-meeting is the best thermometer of the spiritual vitality of a congregation. The prayer-meetings at Clarendon-street Church have been described as models of their kind. "They are made emphatically meetings for the people. The time is given to them, the pastor usually merely indicating some line of thought and giving direction and impulse to others. The result is that the people are interested in the meetings, and make them interesting to all who attend. They are known and spoken of over the city, and many strangers are attracted to them. A large share of the church's harvest of souls is won in them." Temperance effort finds in the pastor a zealous ally, and his support has taken a practical form in the establishment of the Boston Industrial Home, "an institution which has done more good for degraded humanity than ever can appear."

We might refer to Dr. Gordon's bodily presence and gifts of speech as elements in his influence, as a man and a teacher. He said in one of his recent addresses at Northfield that he had always thanked God for a three years' agricultural curriculum on a farm, besides his college course. It had given him a physical development that had stood him in good stead throughout the strain and stress of a working life. In his native country, journalists are more addicted than here, to giving analytical descriptions of the personal appearance of public men; but we have no scruple in quoting, and vouching for the exact fidelity of the following, written by a Princeton resident a little over a year ago. It is much more than a mere portraiture of the outside man; it in large measure furnishes a key to the secret of Dr. Gordon's power over his generation :—

> Dr. Gordon's personal appearance is singularly attractive. He has a well-proportioned and somewhat portly form, rather above the ordinary height; a large square head, set firmly on his shoulders; an abundance of light hair, now tinged with grey, displaying an ample forehead; a smooth face, with clear and pleasant eyes, and expressive mouth; an alert step and graceful bearing. His countenance is one which cannot easily be forgotten. It has the sweetness and openness of a child, with the strength and intellect of a man. There is something quite boyish in it, revealing a suppressed but not extinguished capacity for fun. It is a marvellously, bright, beautiful, benign face, revealing the man, and preaching a most winning sermon before he opens his lips.

A man of action, too, clear-eyed and quick to comprehend, and as quick to act; courteous, yet frank; always with the word ready which needs to be said, and, better than all, the Word of God. It is this latter faculty of familiarity with the Scriptures, both in his mind and in his heart and on his lips and at his fingers' ends, which peculiarly qualifies him for his work as a specialist and consulting physician (so to speak) of souls. As to his manner, Dr. Gordon illustrates Luther's maxim to young preachers: "Stand up cheerily, speak out manfully, leave off speedily." He has literally a speaking countenance. He enters upon his service in a sunny way, "rejoicing like a strong man to run a race." It gives no impression of a task to be performed. He evidently enjoys the Gospel that he preaches more than any of his hearers.

He has a clear, rich, powerful voice, which reminds one of an organ. The awful hush which followed the closing periods of the discourses which I heard were due not only to the way in which the truth was brought to bear upon the individual soul of the hearer, but to the perfect adaptation of the speaker's tone and manner. And yet he never forgets that he is a Gospel preacher, nor feels it necessary to make a little frowning Sinai of himself. Through his most unequivocal putting of the most tremendous truths, and his most unflinching grapple with the heart and conscience, there is never lost that benignant and loving look and manner. I can truly say that I never knew a preacher who had such a faculty of making the Gospel at once imperative and inviting.

I know him to be a man who can hold his own in any conclave of scholars and thinkers; and yet no child would get beyond his depth in that pellucid stream, and neither young nor old could fail to be held by the interest which is imparted to the simple story. His illustrations are numerous, and made very clear and graphic, but are always felt to be subordinate. Altogether, he gives an impression of ease and self-command, which can only come from the severest discipline and preparation. But even he could not be so interesting, much less so powerful a preacher, if he were not, pre-eminently, a Bible preacher.

From this account it will be understood that Dr. Gordon's services are in great request as an evangelist. His Boston congregation has generously recognised the claims of the public on their pastor, and has provided an assistant, so that he may be set free for frequent outside service. Among young men he is a special favourite, and his words carry a double weight, because of the absence of any air of assumption in the speaker, and the gracious atmosphere of his personality. Several visits paid to the far-famed Princeton University have been seasons of much spiritual reviving among the students there. As a speaker at Christian Conferences he is always most welcome, and brings to the consideration of the topics discussed a freshness of thought and felicity of expression that make his addresses linger long in the memory. Mr. Moody, we imagine, would not think a Northfield Conference half complete without the presence and testimony of his friend from Boston, and all who have ever heard him there would be of the same opinion.

He seems to be a man of such large-hearted view and catholic sympathy that in his teaching. No subject comes amiss to him. Whether in reverently seeking to fathom the mysteries of the Trinity; in proclaiming the simple Gospel message; in pressing home the paramount privilege and duty of the believer to a complete consecration of life; in setting forth the glories of the risen Christ, and enforcing the hope of his coming again to a waiting Church; whether in faithfully pointing out the inconsistencies of believers; in denouncing the irreligious delusions of the day; or in sounding a clarion call to greater missionary devotion, Dr. Gordon is equally at home in his subject and equally effective in the presentation of it. And in all his thinking he sticks tenaciously to the evident teaching of the good old Book, as opposed to the speculative theories of man. "His mind seems saturated with Bible truth and Bible phraseology, which not only give colour to every thought and expression, but in his prayers also, which are often composed almost exclusively of Scripture passages and phrases, used to give utterance to the wants of those before him."

With respect to missions, we believe we are correct in saying that to Dr. Gordon, more than any other man, is due the happy removal of the difficulties that some little time since cast a temporary cloud over the affairs of the American Baptist Congo Mission. He threw all the weight of his influence into the scale in favour of a vigorous sustenance of the work. He is, in one respect, singular among the great body of his ministerial brethren in America, in his advocacy of the doctrine of bodily healing, by the exercise of faith in the promises of God. His book entitled "The Ministry of Healing," is a calm and dispassionate statement of his views and experiences on this vexed question. Some other works of his are published on this side of the Atlantic; all are well worthy of study as the product of a cultured and deeply taught mind. He edits a monthly magazine, The Watchword, which is full of matter most profitable to the devout Christian, and helpful to the evangelistic worker. "By common consent," says one of his contemporaries, "he stands in the front rank of the leaders of his denomination in America, both as a preacher and as a man of varied attainments and influence." We may add that in his life-partner he has a lady of great mental capacity, and one who is as active in helping forward every good work, as he is himself.

The extracts from an address which we give on a succeeding page will convey a fair idea of Dr. Gordon's illustrative style of DEVIL'S SLAVES.

BY DR. G. F. PENTECOST.

TRUE-HEARTED Christians find only freedom and delight in the service of God. On the other hand, "the way of the transgressor is hard." Let me give you a few examples of the way in which the devil deludes people and persuades them that the service of sin is pleasurable and profitable, and so keeps them from God, while all the time he is binding the cruel fetters fast upon them. Here are a few of the devil's slaves:

1. The slave of Appetite. Take the drunkard, for instance. Perhaps in the beginning of his service he found some pleasure in the cup, nor did he suspect that the devil was forging a chain for him out of his false pleasure. But see him now: how the taskmaster Appetite is urging him on with the whip of fiery thirst. He is made to serve with rigour. Many times he has tried to escape, but the chain is already grown into his very flesh. Ask any one of them if it is not a bitter bondage.

2. The slave of Lust. Go to the man or woman who has been turned from the path of virtue and made to tread the path of sin, under the soft and silken lash of passion laid across their souls rather like a breath than as the lash of the taskmaster. Who can tell what the first hot, burning whelt of pain was which followed the first stroke of passion's whip? Oh, the bitter tears, the conscious shame, of that first self-loathing! But the cord becomes a knotted one, the conscience is seared under repeated lashes, and by and by that which first gave pleasure, ceases to delight. Nevertheless the taskmaster drives the slave onward, until despair and death are the end of the slavery.

3. The slave of Mammon. This taskmaster has many slaves in his gang. He is persuasive and flattering at first. His victims are charmed with his dominion, and deceived by his promises. Under his soft and golden lash Ambition springs up and the lust of power begins to burn in the soul. But presently he is fairly driven on to his task. Early and late with careworn face you may see him making his tale of golden brick. For this he must sacrifice his family and give himself wholly to business. He heaps up riches under the delusion that by and by he will be free to enjoy the fruit of his labours; but in the end he only hears the startling cry: "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee." And away he is dragged to get his wages, which are—DEATH.

4. The slave of Pleasure. The slaves of this taskmaster are the most mumerous of all. Under the delusion of soft delights and intoxicating pleasure they are driven on in great herds. The singular feature of this servitude is that it leaves nothing behind of all its service. It lays up nothing for enjoyment. It feeds upon the passing hour, and must evermore be seeking something fresh. This service goes on until the soul wearies of it; but it must ever go on until utter languor and weariness take possession; but still the poor slave is driven on, from theatre to ball-room, and from ball-room to opera, until life becomes a mere treadmill of pleasure, and all that is truly noble dries up in the soul, and it comes to pass that she "that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." Ever "stretching forth her arms after more pleasure, she brings them back again unfilled."

Surely sin is most disappointing and most wearisome. The end of it soon comes; then the awful wages are paid, and the soul is lost for ever. This is a bitter bondage, out of which I pray God every one of my readers may be speedily brought.

HOXTON HALL.—On the 31st inst. a re-union of workers, frequenters, and old friends of the Blue Ribbon Mission will be held at the headquarters in Hoxton-street. The Committee are anxious to see all who have been associated at any time in the work, present on this occasion. Further

THE CHRISTIAN'S FOOTPRINTS.

By Rev. A. J. GORDON, D.D.

"Make straight paths for your feet." The meaning is, "Make straight tracks with your feet." So many Christians go through the world without making any tracks at all! They step so softly, and glide so quietly along, that they leave no real definite impression of any sort. And I don't know but this is the most serious question after all—not, first, whether our steps are crooked or straight, but whether they are firm and decisive, and leave a deep indenture on society. If you are decided and thorough-going, whether as a worldly man or a Christian, you will make your mark; and those who follow after you will see that somebody has been this way before. But, alas! how many soft-stepping, easy-going Christians there are in the world. They are believers; but they bear no clear testimony, set no strong example, and do no distinctive work for God.

We have been taught by one of our household poets that—

> We may make our lives sublime,
> And, departing, leave behind us
> Footprints on the sands of time.

But what those footprints shall be is the serious question. There is one track of beasts, and another of birds, and another of fishes; and if you will go into any geological museum, you will find specimens of each of these in the rocks which have been brought there from the strata of the earth. "These tracks were made probably centuries before the creation of man," said a geologist to me the other day, as he was showing me his cabinet. And I did not have to ask which they were—the tracks of birds or of quadrupeds: it was evident enough without inquiry. If, in the future, somebody should find your footprints in the strata of this nineteenth century, don't let them have to ask the question whether they were the tracks of a worldling or a Christian. "He left half a million when he died," it will be said of one: but that will not determine what he was. "He occupied the highest social position," it will be said of another: but I cannot tell by that his character. "He was a man of great learning," it will be said of still another: but all this settles nothing as to his character. This active, cultured, money-making age will be all trampled over with such footmarks as these, but they won't tell the decisive story as to what we were for God and for humanity.

"He turned many to righteousness," it will be said of another. Ah! that is a Christian's track! "He toiled with all his might to destroy the works of the devil." Yes, that is the footprint of a servant of God. "He gave his goods to feed the poor," it will be said of yet another. Yes, that is the sign and signature of a true disciple. Oh that the Lord would inspire us with a holy ambition to make our mark on our generation! But more than that—to stamp the marks of our Lord Jesus Christ in every step and impression of our influence. In order to this we must have what the Scripture enjoins, "Having your feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace." O ye bare-footed moraltiss, thinking to stand in the presence of God, in the unsandalled feet of impenitence and unbelief, come back to your Father, and accept his reconciliation and his "Bring forth the best robe and put it on him, and shoes on his feet," before you can expect to leave the deepest footprints of a Christian example.

But how shall we make straight paths for our feet? "Take the Bible for your compass," it will be answered. True advice! And yet, do you know that if a ship's pilot should happen to have considerable metal about his person, or if he should chance to carry a strong magnet in his pocket, it might so affect his compass as to turn the ship out of its course? I believe the Scripture is the guide, and the infallible guide, of the Christian; but I know that if a Christian has some private prejudice or personal prepossession, he may so deflect the compass of Holy Scripture as to make it lead him entirely out of the way. There are Christians who have an appetite for wine, and who are running straight upon the rocks where they will be wrecked in body, soul, and estate, and who are yet steering all the time by these two texts—that at the marriage in Cana of Galilee Jesus turned water into wine; and that Paul exhorted Timothy to take a little wine for his stomach's sake. The Word is "a lamp unto our feet" indeed; but when we put a porcelain shade over that lamp, tinted and painted according to our own fancy, the consequence will be that we shall be walking in our own light instead of the light of God. And, therefore, I want to impress this lesson upon you all—that you must seek the aid of God's Spirit to interpret God's Word for you. The Bible is God's Word, and the Spirit is God's mind; and only God's mind can fully understand God's Word.

And remember that you cannot exert a Christian influence except as you are yourself personally a Christian. Every shadow is the shadow of something, and a Christian example is only possible as the image and reflection of a Christian character. For a merchant to attempt to exert a religious influence over his clerks, while he is neither religious nor prayerful nor believing: for a parent to try to set a pious example before his family, while he himself is undevout and worldly—this were like attempting to cast a shadow without a substance to give it body and outline. Influence lives happily or unhappily when the person who casts it is gone, like the image retained on the photographer's plate after his subject has left the room. But tell me, who has produced sun-pictures without a face or form to cast them? And tell me, who has exerted a Christian influence or left behind him a Christian example without himself being a Christian?

Oh, men of the world and men of society, women of culture and women of position, there are lame feet straying out of the paths of virtue and stumbling on the dark mountains of sin, which may be led back into the paths of righteousness and purity. But it will take a strong and sturdy example to influence them. It will have to be an example magnetic with Christlike sympathy, and firm non-compromise with Divine holiness and self-denial. No atom-character, floating on the currents of worldliness and self-indulgence, will arrest a wreck that may perchance be drifting down. "Be ye therefore steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord"—steadfast and unmovable, even if you cause a foam in the stream that passes by you by your seeming religious stubbornness and eccentricity. For you are called, not only to make straight paths, but to be yourself a rock, on which bruised and footsore and sliding feet may rest and find a solid support. And the Lord give you strength to be what you are required to be!

A BIBLE CONFERENCE.

It has been decided to hold a Conference in Philadelphia, U.S.A., November 15—20, of this year, on the subject of "The Plenary Inspiration of the Scriptures."

Irreverent sceptics persistently attack the foundations of our most holy religion, while professing friends of Christianity are doing incalculable injury through their adverse criticisms on the Bible. Thus timid disciples become discouraged, many of whom make shipwreck; while the army of the doubters increasees on every hand. Such a Conference is needed in order to confirm the faith of Christian believers in the canon of Holy Scripture, which, in its original languages, has been held by the Church in all ages as the product of the Holy Spirit in all its parts and terms. Men of God spake and wrote as they were moved by the Divine Spirit.

The members of the committee have selected the following topics to be presented by able, scholarly teachers, who have ever been faithful to the Bible as the very Word of God:—Importance of the Subject; Different Theories of Inspiration; Alleged Objections to Plenary Inspiration Considered; Difference between Inspiration and Illumination; the Office of Criticism with reference to God's Word; Jesus a Qualified Witness to Inspiration; Testimony of the Apostles; Canon of Scripture; the Bible and the Monuments; Adaptation of the Bible to Human Need; the Bible Inspired, not Evolved; the Bible an Organic Whole; the Testimony of Jesus to Himself; the Scriptures are the Word of God versus the Scriptures contain the Word of God; History of the Doctrine of Inspiration; Principles of Interpretation; the Spirit and the Word; Preach the Word; Testimony of the Scriptures to Themselves; Relation of the Personality of the Lord to the Doctrine of Inspiration; Difficulties of Conscientious Readers Considered; the Structure of the Book an Evidence of its Inspiration; Difference between Inspiration and Revelation; the Bearing of Prophecy on Inspiration.

We earnestly hope that this legitimate effort to make prominent the full inspiration of the sacred Scriptures will call out earnest prayer, that through this effort God will indeed glorify Himself in the exaltation of his Word.

On behalf of the Committee,
Geo. C. Needham, Hon. Sec.
Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., May 9.

THE BEAUFOY INSTITUTE.—This Institute is an outgrowth of the Lambeth Ragged Schools, and was originated some years ago with the object of attracting the working boys of the neighbourhood. As such it has proved most successful, the average attendance each evening being about fifty. Various means are adopted to interest and amuse as well as to instruct them. Besides the night school there are a club, gymnasium, and football and cricket clubs. A remark of the secretary that "the best way to get at and influence this class of boys is not only for us to know them, but for them to know us," shows that the secret of personal influence is well understood and acted upon. This branch of the Lambeth Ragged School Society's work is capable of great development, which will be undertaken in proportion as support is received. Mr. J. W. Poole, 8, Grange-road, The Chase, Clapham, S.W., is superintendent and secretary.

CHELSEA HOME FOR FRIENDLESS GIRLS.—In the twelve months since the formation of this Home 106 girls have been received, either temporarily, or for training for spheres of future usefulness. Of the forty-four comprising the latter class, seventeen are in good situations, and are doing well. The principle adopted from the first, that of family life, has proved most successful. The hon. superintendent, Miss E. A. Tournier, lives entirely amongst the girls, and there is one table and one fare alike for all. Great care is taken to enlighten them on hygienic, in addition to religious, truths, and to show them that evil passions are fed by unhealthy foods, drinks, and habits. The effect of this may be judged from the remark of one as these facts dawned upon her, "Life seems quite different." The little report is written with a complete avoidance of the sensational, but cannot fail to draw out the sympathies of Christian people on behalf of so many poor girls, utterly ignorant and uncared for as they are until they come into Christian hands. The Home is at 35, Oakley-crescent, Chelsea, S.W.

BEFORE THE JUDGMENT-SEAT.

OUR ACCOUNT.

During the last fifty years a flood of light has shone upon certain truths: e.g., the present possession of eternal life; the priesthood of all believers, the heavenly calling, the union of disciples of Christ with Him, and with one another as members of his body the Church, the blessed hope of the Lord's appearing, &c.; and great profit has resulted. Then, we of the older generation, instead of letting the further insight into truth diminish our view of that which we once learned, have to see to it that we bring forth out of our treasury things new and old; and that we ourselves live under the influence of both. For the younger, if the stronger food is pressed upon them when they are not even well grounded in the elementary doctrines, will be unbalanced, perhaps endangered.

The truth which is particularly in my mind is that of our personal account to be individually rendered. "Everyone shall give account of himself to God." "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after that the judgment." Perhaps the first thought that strikes us in connection with judgment is our own sinfulness. So far, well. Yet when we consider the histories given in Scripture, as of Abraham, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, David, Hezekiah, Paul, or others, how full they are! Their defects and sins are not passed by, but their whole character and course are portrayed. Also how continually does our loving God intertwine an approving word, if possible. So in the messages to the Seven Churches, the Lord commends all He can. This consideration, if we are seeking to walk with God, relieves of its awfulness the subject of the future account and ensuing award, though it will not diminish the intense solemnity arising from the fact that our lives are to come under review. All will be caused to appear, and all will be appreciated that is possible, though a true and just God cannot pass by that which calls for reproof.

I do not advert in particular to an account of our Christian service. The subject of an account often glides into, and is restricted to, this phase of our course. Rather do I refer to the general truth, that each one shall give account of himself to God. Of himself — the at present partially hidden, unfathomed, unrevealed, individual self, moulded by millions of influences. What a marvellous history is that of every man, woman, and child! And what a combination of influences and events exists in the lives of some! The early days, the maturer, the later. The privileges, the disadvantages. The transgressions, the sensualities, the worldliness, the godlessness, the pride. The conversion, the repentance, the faith, the fruit. The strivings, the seekings, the resolutions, the promises, the vows. The temptations, the endurance, the falls, the victories. The amendments, the self-denial, the thoroughness, the vigour. The decline, the mistakes, the lukewarmness, the half-heartedness. The restoration, the confessions, the tears, the cries, the earnestness. The race, the conflicts. The obedience. The fellowship. The prayers. The bitter zeal, the sharp words, the softening love. The reverential working out of our own salvation; the inward working of God Himself. The closing in. The falling asleep in Jesus. The believer's justification in Christ having, throughout his varying experiences and training, remained absolutely secure, because it is God that justifieth, and because the ground of his justification is Christ's righteousness and blood.

Nevertheless, pardon is not impunity. Concerning God's dealings with the people of Israel, it is said, "Thou wast a God that forgavest them, though Thou tookest vengeance of their doings;" as even David and Hezekiah experienced. It is difficult for us to harmonise this twofold action, of forgiveness and yet of recompensing each one the things done in the body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad. But the Scripture cannot be broken, and it states that we all, not our service only, but we ourselves, must appear, must be manifested to be what we really have been and are. And it will be before the judgment-seat—no secondary tribunal. Paul uses the name of the highest court known in the whole world when he wrote—that of the Emperor at Rome, and of Pilate his representative. It will be the judgment-seat of Christ. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath given all judgment unto the Son. And the object stated is, that everyone may receive the things done by means of the body, according to that he hath done whether good or bad.

"Receive"—the veil is not lifted as to how this will be. But such is the fact. There will be some unmistakable expression of the Lord's judgment of each one of us, with a corresponding award. Though saving all who have repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, yet He is the righteous Governor of the universe, and recompenses righteously. He will have regard to the life we have led. He searches the reins and hearts, and will give unto us each one according to our works.

What deep emotions will pervade our whole being at the judgment, when we see all the former life in a true and perfect light in all its bearings. Will not everyone be ready to take the lowest place, when the full blessedness of the love and faith and obedience and sufferings of Jesus is seen, and felt, oh! how intensely! But these feelings will be very mingled. "Herein," the Apostle John said, "is love made perfect with us, that we may have boldness in the day of Judgment." Yet he also says, "And now, little children, let us abide in Him, that, if He shall be manifested, we may have boldness, and not be ashamed before Him in his presence." Those who had oversight in the churches and watched for souls will, as to some, give up their account with joy. Yet it is also contemplated that as to some others, it may be with grief, because the account will be unprofitable to them.

What of yourself, fellow Christian? Have you a well-grounded hope that for you there will be granted an abundant entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? Or will the tree, now perhaps so fair with promise in the spring time of life, be found in autumn to have "nothing but leaves"—"nothing but leaves"? Do we not all say, "God forbid." Still, look the question fairly in the face. Are you one who is overcoming, and who, therefore, will share the throne of Christ's dominion; or will it be that you will be saved, yet only as a person escaping from a fire?

This paper is written chiefly for the disciples of Christ, but others may read it. I therefore conclude with the remark that I have shown what Scripture teaches as to the future account of believers, and that pardon is not impunity in their case. There is a time for judgment even for the house of God, but then, if the righteous person shall scarcely be saved, where shall the one who is continuing to live without God, or in the practice of sin, appear?

OUR SEAMEN.

A sailor, of twenty-five years' experience, writing to Mr. Isaac, of the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, calls attentions to the hardships which, as a class, sailors still have to endure. From a temporal standpoint, he says, the sailor is no better off than he was twenty-five years ago. He points to the Articles as the stronghold of those who take advantage of the sailors' necessities cruelly to oppress them. These articles, he asserts to be so dishonest in character, that they are a disgrace to the shipping offices.

Poor feeding, he declares, causes two-thirds of the quarrels that occur between officers and men, and almost all the desertions in foreign parts. The meat soaked in strong brine loses 50 per cent. of nutriment in the boiling. Bread is so hard and inferior that an unlimited amount is allowed, as the employers would be the losers if it were weighed out. Half a pound of flour and one-third of a pint of peas three times a week, with an ounce each of butter and marmalade, one-eighth of an ounce of tea and a quarter-ounce of coffee per day, complete the sailor's rations. "It is upon this," says our correspondent, "that men are supposed to leap cheerfully from their warm blankets at any time, and in a few minutes to be hauling at canvas with the sleet and slush of a bitter night driving in their teeth." The custom adopted by some owners of giving shipmasters so much per day to provision the ships is also strongly animadverted upon as enabling them, "by buying cheap and inferior food, to wring a penny or two per day out of the sailors' stomachs."

Another grievance is that men are charged "two shillings for every rupee advanced to them in India, and that, if clothing is wanted, they are sent to certain traders, who are only too glad to give the masters a discount upon bills contracted by the crew. Seamen are thus forced to buy at certain shops, and I have seen twenty per cent. increase upon the retail price of an article paid, and this swindle goes on in most of the ports that our English ships visit."

The writer concludes by saying that if sailors could claim their money periodically it would be beneficial to both employer and men. "The former would have to look up sober sailers, the latter would soon find that, if he had not the reputation of a sober man, he would not obtain employment. But the truth must be told that it is to our employers' interest to make us discontented, and the law helps them to do so. The more miserable a foremast man's life on shipboard, the more ready is he to desert, leaving his wages behind him. It would be interesting to ascertain, if possible, how many wheat-laden ships from Australia, viâ 'Frisco, have paid full-voyage wages. I venture to say not one in ten." Notwithstanding all that is said about seamen's drunkenness, he affirms that making their lot happier would be the surest way to prevent this. Singularly enough, if owners want men, they go to the lowest crimps to obtain them. "Our employers can afford to laugh at us," he adds; "although their economy causes misery, they live happily; but the rule laid down by them for making their money pay so much per cent. is a very strong weapon in the hands of Satan for opposing the Gospel of our blessed Lord."

POPE AND PRIEST.—Father M'Glynn has been warned that unless he presents himself at Rome within forty days he will be formally excommunicated. Father M'Glynn may, of course, announce his determination to defy the wrath of Rome, and in that case a most interesting turn would be given to a struggle now very closely watched by the world.—Record.

For the Young.

JOHN DALE; OR, HONOURED OF THE LORD.

THIS is a true story in every particular, and happened but a few years ago. John Dale (so we will call him, for he is still a prosperous merchant in Illinois) was a poor boy, supporting his farther and mother by his daily wages. Passing by the Baptist Church one evening, he stepped in to hear the singing, was welcomed by a good deacon and shown to a seat, and the same evening he believed and was saved. Afterwards he reported to the Sunday-school Superintendent for duty, and became a sort of general helper. Whatever was doing he was ready to have a hand in it.

By and by a new church was built, and there was a debt. A committee was appointed to distribute the debt among the members pro rata, and to try to have each one agree to his assessment. John Dale was by this time working as clerk in a grocery store at a salary of 600 dollars a year, and he had 100 dollars in the bank. This latter amount was an important factor in his hopes, for he was engaged to be married. One day the committee on their rounds called on him at the store.

"I expect," thought John, "they have put me down for twenty dollars, possibly, but I shan't grumble. The debt must go. I expect to pay my assessment," he added aloud in reply to a question from the spokesman of the Committee.

"Then please sign your name."

John took the book, and lo! he was down for 100 dollars, the total amount of his savings.

"I was thunderstruck," said John afterwards to a friend, "for it was all I had." But without a remark he signed his name.

"I suppose they came for a church subscription," said his employer when the committee had gone.

"Yes."

"How much did you subscribe?"

John hesitated.

"A hundred dollars."

"Hundred dollars! Well, John, I almost should say you were a fool! Forgive me for saying so; but you were not able."

John explained how it had come about, expressing the assurance that as he was yet young and strong he should soon work through it; and yet in his heart he felt quite cast down. There was so much depending on that money. Perhaps he had been unwise, so he thought, in pledging his word beforehand, but having favoured the assessment, it seemed but right that he should accept it when made. Besides, had he not asked the Lord to guide him in this thing? And should he not believe that he would be guided? In this way he rolled his burden on the Lord.

At evening, while on his way to supper, a neighbour merchant accosted him.

"Say John, I don't want to take you from your present place if you are permanently engaged there, but I want a man, and if you can come I will give you 800 dollars, and begin to-morrow."

"Well," replied John, "I'll go right back and see about it."

He returned and broached the subject to his employer, adding, "Now I have no fault to find, and should like well to stay here, but you know how it is with me; I need all I can earn."

"Then the salary is all the reason you have for wishing to go."

"Yes."

"Well, we won't part on that. If you are worth 800 dollars to B., I guess you are worth it to me, and I'll give it."

"All right," said John, "I'll be glad to stay."

"And I don't care, if we'll begin with the beginning of the year if you like," continued the merchant, "it's now the end of June, so that will make you an extra hundred dollars."

"Thank you," said John, "you are very good, that just pays my subscription without touching my savings. Pardon me, Mr. C.," John added smiling, "but who's the fool now?"—Gleanings in Harvest Fields.

A DAY IN THE COUNTRY.

[This is part of a chapter from JERRY'S LITTLE NELL, by A. PITTIS. 1s. Shaw & Co. The book contains one of the most beautiful and touching stories of child life and child love we have ever read. This extract will doubtless quicken the sympathies of Christians for the many thousands of London children who are now looking forward with eager longing to their one day in the country.]

"PLEASE, sir, I want fur to know if ye'd mind if I gived me tickut for the treat to me little sister Nell, and let 'er go into the country to-morrer 'stead of me?"

"Don't you care about going yourself, then?"

"Yes, I'd like to go well 'nough, only I'd a 'undred times rather little Nell was to go; she 'ardly ever gets no treats, and she'd enjoy 'earin' the birds sing and smellen the flowers jest ever so."

"But it's against our rules, my boy, to allow any but our regular scholars to go to the treat."

"I knows it be, sir, but Nelly's such a dear little girl, and she's blind, ye knows, sir; and ye see it couldn't make no difference if she went 'stead of me. Jest say she may go, sir, and I'll ever be grateful to yer."

"Well, I will do my best about it, Jerry, but I can't quite promise that Nelly shall go, because I don't know what the teachers and the other boys will say to it; but I don't at all think any of them would mind; but I have only a certain number of tickets. You are quite sure you are willing to give up yours for your little sister?"

"Oh, quite, sir; 't would be such a treat for 'er to go into the country."

"Well, I'm very glad to see how fond you are of your little sister, my boy. Do you know of anyone who would take care of her to-morrow if she go with us? As she is blind, poor child, she will need to be in someone's special charge."

"Oh, my pal, Bob Stamp, 'll take care of 'er, sir, I'll be bound; 'ee's as nice a chap as ever lived is Bob, and 'ee's mighty good to little Nell; I wouldn't be a bit afeared of trusten 'er to 'im."

By this time Mr. Malcolm and his little companion had arrived at the school-room; but before opening the door, the former, with something very much like moisture in his eyes, stooped down and said—

"Jerry, what would you say if I were to write out another ticket, so that you and Nellie might both go into the country?"

"Say, sir? Why, I don't know, sir, that's a fact; I'd feel jest crazed, I would, and I'd jest want to turn 'ead over 'eels and yell."

"Well, I'll just mention it to the other boys, and it shall be put to the vote, and if the majority agree to your both going, you shall."

"Jerry," asked little Nell, as she lay awake that night, long after Jerry, who was thoroughly tired out, had gone to sleep—"Jerry dear, are you awake?"

The boy awoke with a start. "Yes, darlin', I'm awake. What do you want?"

"I wants to know if you thinks as 'ow poor mother knows that you and me are goin' into the country to-morrer?"

"Yes," said Jerry, reverently, "I 'spects as 'ow God 'as told 'er, 'cus He'd know that she'd be so very glad. Don't talk no more now 'cus it's ever so late, and I don't b'lieve you've been to sleep yet at all."

"No," said Nelly, "I won't talk no more. Good night."

The next morning, at about ten o'clock, amidst ringing cheers of delight, six waggons, full of children accompanied by a good staff of teachers, left St. Mark's Ragged School en route for Briarly Woods. Little Nell, who was arrayed in the pretty blue dress lent by Bob, had a comfortable seat between him and Jerry. She looked radiantly happy; her little face, which was usually so pale and wan, had become quite rosy with the great amount of washing and rubbing it had undergone, and at Jerry's urgent request Mrs. Watkins had curled her hair. The day was very fine, and the drive alone was a glorious treat to the poor London children, the majority of whom had never before seen a green field or wild flower; but when at last they reached the woods, and all alighted from the vans, their delight knew no bounds, and with glad shouts they rushed about in every direction, until the sound of a gong summoned them to a bountiful dinner under the trees, which, to judge from their happy faces and merry voices, they seemed fully to enjoy.

After each child had done full justice to the dinner, they all repaired to their various amusements. Everything they saw, even down to the butterflies and bees, formed an object of interest to these children, whose lives had been spent in the courts and back-yards of the city; and the numerous wild-flowers and the joyous songs of the birds afforded them intense delight. Some of the elder boys amused themselves with cricket, or had donkey-rides in an adjoining meadow, whilst most of the younger ones and the girls got into boats and swings, or took part in ring games.

To joining in the others' play, Jerry preferred roaming about the wood with little Nelly's hand in his, making nosegays of the wild-flowers—which the little blind girl carefully examined with her fingers, whilst Jerry gave her a description of their appearance—or to sit under the trees and listen to the singing of the birds.

"Don't I wish that you could see all that I sees, little Nell," said Jerry, as the two children were resting beneath a shady oak. "I never knowed the country was one bit like this; I jest feels as if I'd like to live 'ere always. Even the sky looks different out 'ere from what it do in Lunnon; and, oh, Nelly, there's a dear little rabbit a runnen up a tree as fast as ever it can go, leastways I s'pose it's a rabbit, 'cus don't you mind Bob was a sayen as we was comin' along that we'd sure to see lots of 'em out 'ere in the woods. There! now 'ee's got to the top, and gone out of sight. Oh, I does wish you could 'ave seed 'im, Nelly, 'ee wur such a pretty little cretur!"

"So does I, Jerry darlin', and I'd like to see all the flowers and the trees and the pretty little birds; but I think 't would be best of all to see you, Jerry. I 'avn't forgot what you're like, only it seems ever and ever so long since I seed you. Jerry dear, does you think it 'ud be a good thing for me to be able to see again?"

"A good thing!—of course I does, darlin'; I think 't would be a werry good thing indeed."

"Then I think I'll ask God if He'll let me, 'cus, don't you know, the gemmen at the Mission House was saying last Sunday that if we was to ask God for anything that we wanted very much, if 't was a good thing He'd be sure to give it to us, just as sure as a little boy's father that had lots of pennies would be sure of giving him a piece of bread if he was to ask him for it."

"But may be God wouldn't think 't would be a good thing for you to see like other folks."

"No, p'r'aps not; but if I didn't ask Him I shouldn't know whether He would or not."

"P'r'aps He'd be angry at you for asken 'im."

"I isn't a bit afraid that He'll be angry, 'cus when Jesus lived down 'ere, lots of people that was blind came and asked 'im if He would open their eyes and make them see, and He did direc'ly. I think I'll ask Him now." And with childlike faith little Nell knelt down on the soft turf, and with clasped hands asked her Father in heaven, in her own simple words, that, if it would be a good thing, her sight might be restored.

A LADIES' MISSIONARY PRAYER MEETING has been started at Brighton, at which Mrs. Hannington (the Bishop's widow) presides, and which is attended weekly by some 150 ladies.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—May 29, Joel ii. 21—32; May 30, Amos v. 1—15; May 31, Amos viii. 1—14; June 1, Ps. lxv. 1—13; June 2, 1 Sam. i. 1—18; June 3, 1 Sam. i. 19—28; June 4, 1 Sam. ii. 1—11.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Meetings will be held for children during the coming week as follows:—Mr. H. W. Pewtress will be at the Grove Mission Hall, Great Guildford-street, Southwark, May 23—27; on June 6 Mr. Josiah Spiers will commence a mission at Queen-street Schools, Woolwich. Will our young readers pray for these services, and also for those at the seaside this summer, that many may find the Saviour.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.

ORDERED TO ZAREPHATH.

A friend of mine, spending a few days in the neighbourhood of our English lakes, came upon the most beautiful shrubs he had ever seen. Arrested by their extraordinary luxuriance, he inquired the cause, and learnt that it was due to a judicious system of transplanting, constantly pursued. Whatever may be the effect of such a process in nature, it is certainly true, that our heavenly Father employs similar methods to secure the highest results in us. He is constantly transplanting us. And though these changes threaten at times to hinder all steady progress in the Divine life, yet, if they are rightly borne, they result in the most exquisite manifestations of Christian character and experience.

Another illustration of the same truth is given by the prophet Jeremiah, when he says, "Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, he hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity; therefore his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed" (Jer. xlviii. 11). Grape juice, when first expressed from its ruddy chalice, is impure and thick; it is left in vessels for a time till fermentation has done its work, and a thick sediment, called lees, has been precipitated to the bottom. When this is done, the liquid is carefully drawn off into another vessel, so that all the precipitated sediment is left behind. This emptying process is repeated again and again, till the offensive odour that came from the must has passed away, and the liquid has become clear and beautiful. In the case of Moab, there had been none of this unsettling process, "he had not been emptied from vessel to vessel," and in consequence the people had made no moral or spiritual progress; "his taste remained in him, and his scent was not changed." The quiet life is by no means the greatest life. Some characters can only reach the highest standard of spirituality by the disturbings or displacings of God's providence.

Is not this the key to the life of Elijah? Once he stood in the vessel, "Home"; then emptied into the vessel, "Jezreel"; then into the vessel, "Cherith"; and now into the fourth vessel, "Zarephath"; and all that he might not settle upon his lees, but might be urged toward a goal of moral greatness, which otherwise he had never reached, but which qualified him to take his stand in after days on the transfiguration mount, the associate of Moses, the companion of Christ. Take heart, ye who are compelled to be constantly on the move, pitching the tent to-night, and summoned by the moving cloud and the trumpet call to strike it to-morrow, all this is under the direction of a wise and faithful love, which is educating you for a glorious destiny. Believe only that your circumstances are those most suited to develop your character. They have been selected out of all possible combinations of events and conditions, in order to effect in you the highest finish of usefulness and beauty; they would have been the ones selected by you, if all the wide range of omniscient knowledge had been within your reach.

And yet, when a human spirit is entirely taken up with God, as Elijah was, these changes become comparatively harmless and trifling, as a gnat-sting to a soldier in the heat of battle. To one who lives ever in the presence of the unchanging God, and who can say, "Thus saith Jehovah, before whom I stand," the ever-varying conditions of our lot touch only the outer rim of life; whatever they take away, they cannot take away that; whatever they bring, they cannot give more than that. The consciousness of that Presence is the one all-mastering thought, the inspiration, the solace, the comfort, of every waking hour. And as we have seen a far-spread summer landscape through the haze of intense heat, so do all people and things and events show themselves through the all-enwrapping, all-encompassing presence of God. To fulfil his plans; to obey the least intimation of his will; to wait on his hand; to dwell in the absorbing vision of Himself; to be satisfied with the fulness of joy which fills his presence-chamber with sweetest perfume and with celestial music; this is the one passion of the happy spirit, to whom, as to Elijah, this grace is given. But such grace is for thee, through the Holy Ghost, if only thou wilt open to it all the capacities of thy heart and life. Why not seek it!

There are several lessons here.

(I.) Faith awaits God's plans.—"It came to pass, after a while, that the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land." Week after week, with unfaltering and steadfast spirit, Elijah watched that dwindling brook; often tempted to stagger through unbelief, but refusing to allow his circumstances to come between himself and God. Unbelief sees God through circumstances, as we sometimes see the sun shorn of his rays through the smoky air; but faith puts God between itself and circumstances, and looks at them through Him. And so the dwindling brook became a silver thread; and the silver thread stood presently in pools at the foot of the largest boulders; and then the pools shrank. The birds fled; the wild creatures of field and forest came no more to drink; the brook was dry. Only then, to his patient and unwavering spirit, "the word of the Lord came, saying, Arise, get thee to Zarephath."

Most of us would have got anxious and worn with planning long before that. We should have ceased our songs, as soon as the streamlet carolled less musically over its rocky bed; and with harps swinging on the willows, we should have paced to and fro upon the withering grass, lost in pensive thought. And, probably, long ere the brook was dry, we should have devised some plan, and asking God's blessing on it, would have started off elsewhere. Alas! we are all too full of our own schemes, and plans, and contrivings. And if Samuel does not come just when we expect, we force ourselves, and offer the burnt-offering (1 Sam. xiii. 12). This is the source of untold misery. We sketch out our programme, and rush into it, and only when we are met by insuperable obstacles do we begin to reflect whether it was God's will, or to appeal to Him. He does often extricate us, because his mercy endureth for ever; but if we had only waited first to see the unfolding of his plans, we should never have found ourselves landed in such an inextricable labyrinth; and we should never have been compelled to retrace our steps with so many tears of shame.

One of the formative words for all human lives, and especially for God's servants, was given by God to Moses, when He said: "See that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount" (Heb. viii. 5). Moses was eager to do God's work, and the best skill amongst the people was at his command, but he must not make a single bell, or pomegranate, or tassel, or fringe, or curtain, or vessel, except on God's pattern, and after God's ideal. And so he was taken up into the mount, and God opened the door into his own mind, where the tabernacle stood complete, as an ideal; and Moses was permitted to see the thing as it lived in the thought and heart of God; forty days of reverent study passed by, and when he returned to the mountain-foot, he had only to transfer into the region of actual fact, that which had been already shown to him, in pattern, on the Mount.

Surely some such thought as this must have been in the mind of our blessed Lord, when He said: "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do" (John v. 19). So utterly had He emptied Himself, that He had abandoned even his own schemes and plans; He lived a planless life, accepting each moment the plan which his Father unfolded before Him, and being confident that that plan would lead Him on to greater, and ever greater works, until the world should marvel at the splendour of the results, rising from Gethsemane and Calvary, through the broken grave, to the Ascension Mount, and the glory of his second Advent. Oh, mystery of humiliation, that He who planned all things, should will to live a life of such absolute dependence! And yet, if He lived such a life, how much more will it become us; how much anxiety it will save us; and to what lengths of usefulness and heights of glory will it bring us. Would that we were content to wait for God to unveil his plan, so that our life might be simply the working out of his thought, the exemplification of his ideal. Let this be the cry of our hearts, "Lord, show me thy way; teach me to do thy will; show me the way wherein I should walk, for unto Thee do I lift up my soul."

II. God's plans demand implicit obedience.—"So he arose and went to Zarephath," as before he had gone to Cherith, and as presently he would go to show himself to Ahab. A Christian lady, who had learnt amongst us the blessedness of a surrendered life, and was soon after obliged to find another home across the ocean, came back quite recently, over thousands of miles of land and water, to visit the scene of that act, in the hope that she would find again her former joy, which had faded, like the hues of a too radiant dawn. But to her disappointment, though she worshipped on the same sacred spot, and listened to the sounds of the well-known voice, she could not recover the priceless jewel she had lost. At last the cause appeared. She had been living in conscious disobedience to the will of Christ, expressed through her conscience and his Word. The motives that prompted the disobedience had a touch of nobility about them, but it was disobedience still, and it wrought its own penalty.

This is the true cause of failure in so many Christian lives. We catch sight of God's ideal; we are enamoured with it; we vow to be only his; we use the most emphatic words; we dedicate ourselves upon the altar. For a while we seem to tread another world, bathed in heavenly light. Then there comes a command clear and unmistakable. We must leave some beloved Cherith, and go to some unwelcome Zarephath. We must speak some word, take some step, cut off some habit. And we shrink from it. The cost is too great. But, directly we refuse obedience, the light dies off the landscape of our lives, and dark clouds fling their shadows far and near.

We do not win salvation by our obedience; that is altogether the gift of God, to be received by faith in the finished work of Jesus Christ our Lord. But, being saved, we must obey. Our Saviour adjures us, by the love we bear to Himself, to keep his commandments. And He does so, because He wants us to taste his rarest gifts, and because He knows that, in the keeping of his commandments, there is great reward.

Search the Bible from board to board, and see if strict, implicit, and instant obedience has not been the secret of the noblest lives that ever lit up the dull monotony of the world. The proudest title of our King was the Servant of Jehovah. And none of us can seek to realise a nobler aim than that which was the inspiration of his heart, "I come to do thy will, O my God." Mary, the simple-hearted mother, uttered a word which is pertinent to every age, when, at the marriage feast, she turned to the servants and said, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it."

III. Implicit obedience sometimes brings us into a smelting-furnace.—Zarephath means a smelting-furnace. It lay outside the Land of Canaan, occupying the site of the modern Surafend, which stands on a long ridge, backed by the snow-clad steeps of Hermon, and looking over the blue waters of the Mediterranean. Many things might have made it distasteful to the prophet. It belonged to the land from which Jezebel had brought her impious rites. It was as much cursed by the terrible drought as Canaan. It was impossible to reach it save by a weary journey of 100 miles through the heart of the land, where his name was execrated, and his person proscribed. And then to be sustained by a widow woman belonging to a heathen people! He would not have so much minded to sustain her, but it was not pleasant to feel that he must be dependent on her slender earnings or meagre store. Surely it was a smelting-furnace for cleansing out any alloy of pride, or self-reliance, or independence which might be lurking in the recesses of his heart.

And there was much of the refining fire in the character of his reception. When he reached the straggling town, it was probably toward nightfall, and at the city gate a widow woman was gathering a few sticks to prepare the evening meal. To some it might have seemed a coincidence, but there is no such word in faith's vocabulary; that which to human judgment is a coincidence, to faith's is a Providence. This was evidently the widow of whom God had spoken. Faint with thirst, and weary with long travel, but never doubting that his needs would be amply met, he asked her to fetch a little water in a vessel, that he might drink. The widow may have had some premonition of his coming. There would seem to be some suggestion of this having been so, in the words, "I have commanded a widow woman to sustain thee." Her character will come out in due course, but there must have been something in her which could not be found in the many widows of the land of Israel (Luke iv. 25, 26). It was for no arbitrary reason that God passed them over, and went so far afield. She must have possessed qualities of character, germs of better things, sparks of heroism and of faith, which distinguished her from all her sorrowing sisterhood, and made her the befitting hostess of the prophet, and the glad sharer with him in his Father's bounty. To her the impression was probably given of the coming of the prophet, just as the visions to Saul and to Ananias, to Cornelius and to Peter, flashed upon them in duplicates.

She was not, therefore, surprised at the prophet's request, and silently went to fetch a cup of cold water (Matt. x. 42). Encouraged by her willingness, Elijah asked her to bring with her a morsel of bread. It was a modest request, but it unlocked the silent agony of her soul. She had not a cake, but a handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse; and she was about to make one last repast for herself and her son, who was probably too weak through long privation to be with her, and, having eaten it, they had no alternative but to lie down together, and die. It was very depressing for the man of God, after his long and weary march.

It is thus that God leads his people still. "All that abideth not the fire, ye shall make go through the water," i.e., He will not suffer us to be tempted beyond that which we are able to bear; He will not thresh vetches with a sharp threshing instrument, nor turn a cartwheel about on cummin. But it is written, "Everything that may abide the fire, ye shall make it go through the fire, and it shall be clean" (Num. xxxi. 23). If, then, there is aught in you that can bear the ordeal be sure you will be put into the furnace. But the fire shall not destroy it shall only cleanse you. You will be put into it by the hand of Love, and kept in it only till patience has done her perfect work. The flames shall only consume the bonds that bind you, and, as you walk loose in the fire, bystanders shall descry at your side the form of one like unto the Son of God.

IV. When God puts his people into the furnace, He will supply all their need.—Circumstances were certainly very depressing; but what are they to a man whose inner self is occupied with the presence and power of God. God had said that he should be fed, and by that widow, and so it should be, though the earth and heaven should pass away. Difficulties to faith are what gymnastic apparatus are to boys, means of strengthening the muscular fibre. Like the fabled salamander, faith feeds on fire. And so with heroic faith, he said: "Fear not; go and do as thou hast said, for thus saith the Lord God of Israel, the barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the Lord sendeth rain upon the earth."

Our only need is to inquire if we are at that point in God's pattern where He would have us be. If we are, though it seem impossible for us to be maintained, the thing impossible shall be. We shall be sustained by a miracle, if no ordinary means will suffice. "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." We reserve for future thought that unfailing meal and oil. But, ere we close, remark with what different meaning different people may use the same holy words. The widow said, as Elijah had done, "the Lord God liveth" (ver. 12). But to her those words brought no comfort, because they were repeated from hearsay, and not from a living experience of their truth. God forbid that they should be a parrot-speech upon your lips, my reader; but burnt into your inmost being, so that you may go through life fearless of all save sin, and cheering timid hearts with the assurance of an unfaltering courage, "Fear not" (ver. 13).

THE FIRST EASTER.

It was the eventide. The crescent moon,
Low over Olivet's three summits, shed
Pale light upon the plains of Jordan, down
Unto the sea called Salt, which glimmered white
In livid ghastliness beneath the peaks
Of Moab's mountains, stretching to the sands
Of Edom lone and bare.
No restless winds
Sighed through the full-eared barley in the vale,
Or stirred the crested feathers of the palms,
And nature seemed like one asleep and still Wearied by pain.
A sound of voices came
Now and again across the eastern slope
From Bethany, belovèd of the Lord;
For there a group was gathered in the lane
Before the door of him who from the tomb,
Bound hand and foot with graveclothes, and his face
Bound with a napkin, trembled into life
Responsive to the words Divine.
The man
Whom Christ Himself had raised stood in the midst,
His eyes dim in a clinging mist of tears;
For he had come from Zion, o'er the hill
By Kedron, through Gethsemane's sad shades,
With wondrous stories of the Master's death
On rounded Golgotha—the Temple veil
Rent in the midst, the quaking earth, the words
Of that strange superscription Pilate wrote
Gleaming within the gloom, as writ in fire,
"Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews":
The dying cry, "Lama Sabachthani,"
And, on the cross, the Crucified.
A few
There were of those who had believed on Christ,
"When they had seen the things that Jesus did,"
And these to Bethphage walked in bitter grief,
A burden on their hearts, for they had hoped
It had been He who Israel would redeem;
And in the little houses in the lanes
They talked far into the night, or dreamed
Of all that they had heard, and saw again
The sweet sad face, "marred more than any man's."

. . . . .

The first day of the week had come. The land
Lay in the solemn starlight hushed and calm,
With not a stir or sound of anything,
And ere the dawn flushed o'er the paling blue
Came Mary Magdalenè to the grave
Where they had laid the Lord. The heavy stone
Was rolled away. The Crucified was risen,
And in the valley of Jehoshaphat
Full many bodies of the saints arose
And went into Jerusalem, and there
Were seen of many.
Up into Bethany
With rod and crook a man walked wearily,
Coming at early morn from pasture fields
Where he had led the flock from out the fold;
And, as he neared his house, a rich full song
Fell on his ear. He heard the blessed words,
Read in the synagogue on Sabbath days,
"All we like sheep have gone astray. The Lord
Hath laid on Him the sin of all. Oppressed,
Like to a lamb unto the slaughter brought,
His mouth He opened not. He was cut off
Out of the land, stricken He was and slain
For our transgressions, and his soul was made
An offering for sin, and yet we hid
Our faces from Him, the despised of men."

Stepping beneath the climbing vine he cried,
"Art thou too his disciple?" The singer said,
"From death He brought our neighbour Lazarus,
And gave him back to those who wept his loss.
I would that we had prayed Him for our dead,
Our little one, Meshullemeth."
The man
Paused for a while, and sadly turned away,
For sudden tears welled up into his eyes:
But as he went into the court, he spake:
"For me, I follow not the Nazarene.
Our girl is dead, as he is: let them rest;
Nor prayers nor tears can aught avail. To-day
To them is just as yesterday."
The wife
Went to the doorway, and stood there and wept,
Dreaming she saw once more Meshullemeth—
A graceful maid, who, with the gathering crowd,
Had followed Jesus by the way. Again
They stood in wonderment when at the grave
Christ cried, "Loose him and let him go," and he
Who had been dead four days gazed round, his eyes
Dimmed by dark mysteries of death, and then
With Martha, and with Mary, and the Lord,
Walked slowly homeward in a deep amaze,
Like one who waking from a lingering dream
Sees all the fondly loved familiar things
Through clinging mists of sleep's forgetfulness.
And she remembered how in after days,
When in the dying day the Saviour came Up from Jerusalem with James and John,
And walked full wearily along the lane,
The girl bent in hushed worship as He passed,
And Christ laid hands divine upon her head.
O sweet that thought, and even dearer still
The memory of the loving words He spake
Unto the maid, who hid them in her heart
And breathed them not, until one autumn morn,
As in the dawn a wind swept up the slope
From off the stretching plains, and brought
Perfumes of flowers in lonely far-off lands,
She sighed the Master's name, and lingering o'er
His words, she faded out of life, His eyes
Beaming in love upon her through the gloom
That slowly hid the doorway, and shut out
The date palms standing clear against the sky
And all the expanse of the dusky vale.

A sudden peace that made her half afraid,
So sweet it was, swept o'er the mother's heart
As thinking thus she gazed on Olivet
Decked with its terrace gardens and its groves;
And then there came a pang, for o'er the ridge
A girl crossed to the pathway down the hill,
A maiden like unto Meshullemeth,
And so the woman turned into the house
And sat her down to mourn.
"Meshullemeth!"
"My mother!" That was all. It was the girl
Back from the graveyard of Jehoshaphat!

Like Lazarus, the girl had nought to say
Of what there is beyond the tomb; a break
Had happened in her life. Her lips were sealed.
Each day she went about the household tasks
As in the olden time, and soon she ceased
To be a wonder in the hamlet, where
Full many seeing her believed, as did
Her father who had sternly said, "Let be,
She and the Christ are dead, disturb them not."
For walking near En-Shemesh, he had seen
Jesus Himself, arisen from the dead,
With his disciples talking by the brook,
And he had worshipped Him, and called Him Lord.

. . . . .

The wondrous forty days had gone, and He
Who died and rose "firstfruits of them that slept,"
And unto doubting Thomas showed his hands,
Marked with the nail-prints, and his wounded side,
And on the shore of Lake Tiberias
Asked softly, "Children, have ye any meat?"
And bade the loved disciples "Come and dine,"
Ascended into heaven from Olivet.
So at still Bethphage in the eventide
Her place no longer knew Meshullemeth;
But Lazarus was left in Bethany
To wait till death should whisper once again,
"Behold the Lord is come, and calleth thee."

FACTORY GIRLS AND CHILDREN. — The anticipations formed of the future of our young friends, the factory girls taken from East London for training to the Country Home of the North-east London Gospel Mission, are being most happily realised. Those already sent to service have done well, and few looking at them now could realise what they were like when we received them in rags and tatters, with low-type features almost hidden by the thick heavy fringe of hair. The change in speech and manners, and better still their love for their Bibles are all so encouraging. For every £3 subscribed a poor factory girl will be delivered from her evil surroundings, and given a month or two of training, and sent to service with a small supply of clothing. The country holiday work for the little people has begun in earnest, and any parcels of clothing, specially shoes for children, would be most acceptable.

WITH EAST-END WORKERS.

The familiar upper-room at the Home of Industry showed a right pleasant sight on Wednesday evening, last week. The great centre of interest was the band of bonnie lasses and lads (a hundred or so) who were there to receive a parting good-bye—God be wi' ye—before leaving London for Liverpool, en route for Canada. The girls were cloaked and hooded ready for the journey.

A host of grateful and gladdening thoughts troop into the mind at the sight of such a company of young immortals, gathered from strange places, and many of them the heroes or heroines of "strange true stories," more truly sensational than the wildest of imaginative fiction. Down East, there are dramas daily being enacted that might even be compared with the Langworthy marriage. Cruelties are being done, wrongs are endured, miseries are undergone, that can never reach the public ear; if they did, that ear would pall with the hearing of them. But the ears of these godly women of Commercial-street and eastwards, attuned by the love of their Divine Master, never seem to weary of taking in the tales of sadness and woe. No expenditure of self-sacrificing effort seems to lessen the glow of tender compassion that finds these wastrels, cast on the shore of the heaving ocean of society; that nurtures them with a care which is unknown to many a modern mother's heart; that washes, feeds, and clothes the little bodies till they look as though they had been reared in king's palaces; that gently instils into their opening minds the love and the true knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ. When all this is done, and the "raw material" has been transformed beyond human recognition, the "manufactured articles" are passed on to the goodly land across the sea, there to enrich the homes of the Dominion, and to build up within its borders a free, contented, and Christian generation. Then these good Sisters of the Guild of St. Dorcas begin again at the beginning, with the same zest and zeal as if it were their first attempt. Here, indeed, is what we call "the perseverance of the saints."

Our pen has fairly run away with us in this preamble, and we must now tell something of the meeting. A late arrival would have found Miss Macpherson hugging in her arms the boy-baby of the household. With that charming disregard for conventionality, which constitutes a great attraction of these monthly assemblies, our sister might have been heard saying to the admiring throng, "Isn't he a little dear?" When she wants to preach her most practical sermons, like her Master she takes a young child, and sets him in the midst. Her subject just now is "Adoption." "How is it," she asks, with an air of wondering surprise, "that we of the middle classes are almost frightened to death at the thought of taking into our homes another person's child? If we would only do it as to the Lord, we should see what a blessing such a child would be to us, and what a lesson of unselfishness to our own family." Later in the evening an adopted boy is taken to the front for all to see; it needed but a glance to tell that he at least has "fallen on his feet." What a lot of loving-kindness there is in this world after all—if those who have it and those who need it could only be brought together.

These parting meetings have in them an element of sadness as well as of gladness; for no motherly heart can easily brook the idea of letting her bairns leave her, especially after so much care has been expended on them. So Miss Macpherson asked her sister to "give us a word of cheer." Now Mrs. Merry and her husband were going off with this band across the sea, and she naturally thought that she ought to get, rather than to give, the word of cheer. Still, true to her name, she said she had promised one of the children she would not cry, and she would keep her word. Talking of the responsibilities of the work in Canada, she made request for prayer that all needed guidance and wisdom might be given, especially for dealing with the girls and counselling them as to their future life. Before the young people left to prepare for the long journey, Miss Macpherson said that God had been working graciously in the hearts of many of them. They soon disappeared from our sight—boys and girls—but we will follow them, it is to be hoped, with such fervour of desire as shall help to surround them with hosts of shining ones—ministering and protecting spirits specially commissioned from the throne of God.

AT WORK IN THE HIGHWAY.

The children had gone, but London's East-end, with its sins and sorrows, cannot be shipped off in a single night to Canada. So we had statements from Miss Child and Miss Steer, either of which would have been a full evening's fare. Miss Child rehearsed something of God's goodness to her in connection with the work He had given her to do in Ratcliff-highway during the past decade. She was moved to this partly by the presence of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who had a share in the launching of the Gospel ship that has since rescued many a shipwrecked mariner and carried him into the haven of salvation for body and for soul. The latest development of the work at the Welcome Home is "The Christian Lifeboat Crew"—a band of several hundred godly seamen who have joined hands for mutual edification and for united effort in winning their fellows for Christ. They speak in the open air, and every one helps according to the gift that is in him. On the first Tuesday evening of every month they have a meeting at the Welcome Home for prayer, conference, and testimony, and any Christian friends will be gladly welcomed. Miss Child related a somewhat remarkable circumstance. A captain came to her the other day and said, "I want to get a crew from the Welcome Home; I know you have the right sort of men, for I had a crew from here before. Every one of them turned out well, and now I want another." We looked him up a crew, said Miss Child, and one of them was one of Miss Macpherson's boys. This lad was disposed to go elsewhere, but the captain said he would give him a little extra money in order to get him. The upshot was that he gave them all extra wages to go in his ship, because he knew he should have extra good men. "I think," added Miss Child, amid the cheers of the meeting, "that is something to thank God for." Ay, verily. It is the drink, she went on to say, that does the great harm among these men, but thousands of them are now sailing the seas who do not touch the perilous stuff. A captain told her he had been on the ocean for forty years, and it was only quite lately that he had been able to secure a crew, every man of whom came on board perfectly sober. It was a little diverting to hear from her that some of her "Christian Lifeboat Crew" hold meetings on board their ships, where the captains do not like it a bit; but they find they are better men, and so they "put up with it!" Who would not commiserate them! We are of opinion that the Board of Trade should generously subsidise Miss Child, for she and her helpers are doing what no Act of Parliament could effect, in purifying the moral atmosphere around "Poor Jack." If any timid West-end Londoner and stray visitor from the country want to find the way to the Welcome Home, let them go to the Home of Industry, where a guide will conduct them to the Highway, and Miss Child "will give them a sailor to tow them back again."

The story that Miss Steer had to tell was an equally interesting, if a more painful one. Her "country house," as Mr. Radcliffe calls it, is in a side street out of the Highway, and the sisters who have been led into open sin, or those in danger of meeting this fate, are her peculiar care. She felt so thankful, she wistfully said, that those girls going off to Canada will be taken out of this London, across the sea. She never speaks in public about this work now, without laying special stress on the need of effort among the very young. She knew, alas, of many girls about the same age as those who had just left the meeting, whom she would not dare to send to Canada in their present condition. Preventive work is pressing itself on her more and more; some examples she gave of girls found in perilous circumstances in East-end lodging-houses showed the crying need of this. It is inexpressibly sad to think that even the baby lispings of some of these children are so terrible as to be a grief to hear. Miss Steer truly said that the fight she is waging is often a hand-to-hand conflict with the devil, and it needs a terrible expenditure of spiritual strength to get the evil spirit exorcised. Workers in this field, above all others, need and ought to have all the sympathy and cheer their fellow Christians can give them.

FROM HAVRE TO BIRD-FAIR.

An interesting sketch followed from Mr. Hermann, Sailors' Home, Havre, of the origin and growth of the work in which he is engaged. It, too, is a much-needed effort, because of the temptations that beset the sailor in that gay and wicked seaport, and the absence of any other place of safe resort. Then the scene shifted from Havre to Bird Fair, where, said Miss Macpherson, the sailor friends come up from the Highway and help. No need to make temperance speeches; the shining, happy faces and the rejoicing song of these sturdy sons of the sea are more convincing than any lecture. On the previous Sunday, in addition to two preaching stands, assisted by the Stratford Mizpah Band, they had a royal procession through the ten thousand men of the fair. Three men were there who had formerly been bird fanciers; they told their old mates that they had come to the Fair scores of Sundays to plan bull-dog fights and to carry them out. Now they boldly invited the traders to inspect their homes and see the change that the Gospel has wrought. Miss Macpherson invited all who have ample leisure on Sundays to spend some of it in earnest prayer to God for a rich and saving blessing on the masses who congregate in the fair to traffic on his holy day.

MR. RADCLIFFE'S ROUSING TALK.

Mr. Radcliffe is fond of going back to Old Testament times to see how in distressful circumstances God Himself wrought deliverance for his people. To-night he read from 1 Sam. xiii., describing "the miserable plight" in which the children of Israel were, when there was not even a smith in the land to make for them sword or spear. It has been something like this (said Mr. Radcliffe) in Christian England, and it is for us to encourage ourselves in God to-night. We pray "Lord teach me," but it is sometimes better for us to pray, "Lord unteach me." Let us pray that He will strip off the rags of teaching that we have been brought up in, and the lukewarmness, and the cumbrous way in which we set about getting at the masses, whether in Africa or in Whitechapel. If God would but strip us and make us willing to be children and willing to obey the Captain of our salvation, then He will gain a glorious victory. I have never heard that He has lost a battle yet, and I do not believe that He ever will.

Wellington said at Waterloo, "Up guards and at them!" and it was something like this that Jonathan said to his armour-bearer when they climbed up the rocks on their hands and their feet, and the Philistines fell before them. They had no dynamite, or cannon, or gunpowder; they hung only upon the living God. Let us try if we cannot climb upon our hands and our feet, and see what the Lord will do for us. We read here of certain Hebrews who had been with the Philistines, but who joined the hosts of Israel in that day of victory. Have we not many Christians living in the world—half-hearted, backsliding ones, both in the East-end, and in the West-end? Oh that they may come out of their drawing-rooms, where they are following the fashions of the world; that our Christian business men who are held fast by their love of gain, and whose hearts are set upon their treasure, may be extricated. "So the Lord saved Israel that day."

Oh, that we might unlearn; for the time is short, and the masses are perishing at home and abroad, whilst we are waiting to be untaught. Is it not an awful thing to come here and listen to Miss Steer speak of these babes of debauchery—the lisping of horribly obscene words, even before they can speak plainly? We do not read of a more awful thing in Sodom and Gomorrah.

straight to God and take our orders from Him. People ask me, "Are you not glad to see a revived interest in the Churches with respect to the heathen?" Yes; but it is only a little thing—something, as it were, on the tips of our fingers. We are verily asleep with regard to the heathen. Our missionary societies are only playing at it; our Churches are asleep. And are we not sleeping over a volcano as to the masses of our population at home, not in the East only but in the West? That part of our society that calls itself "Society" is becoming more and more corrupt. Our rich men rolling in their wealth; able to purchase anything that will minister to their vices; debauching our young children; and the poorer classes imitating the rich—an awful stench of corruption going up from Christian England into the nostrils of the living God. Do we not, in the beautiful words of the Anglican Service, need to have "the thoughts of our hearts purified by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost," so that with one accord we may come to God and receive a mighty blessing?

We want to have a revolution in many things. We must not go on as we have been going. There are not too many children on the earth. We are not going to be taught by Chinese mothers that there are too many children, and that many of the female children must be strangled. The world is full of riches in plenty, as we have seen in Canada; and the word of the Lord has never been repealed:—"Increase, and multiply, and replenish the earth." We have got sadly out of joint. I wish some of you young women especially would think about this thing. Thousands of our maiden women should be pressing forth from this place to Canada and other countries, where young farmers and others want them as wives. Here we have a disproportion of the sexes the other way. There are a multitude of women not wanted here. Their brothers go to foreign lands, but the daughters do not go. Perhaps one in a family gets married, and other three or four remain single. Would to God that He would teach us to reverse this thing. Then we would see, if maidens were scarce, that our young men would respect them, would venerate and almost worship them. As everything that gets out of proportion is undervalued, so our maidens in England to-day are not valued and placed upon the pinnacle where God's Book places them.

This is only one thing that we do in our ignorance, and that I feel sure we want unteaching about. Let us ask God to teach us, and, if we are spared to live another seven years, we may see that this work of Miss Macpherson's is only in its little infancy. Oh, let us not regard difficulties, but let us look straight to God, and see if He will not send such a flood as shall bless England and Canada and the whole world.

WITHIN FOUR DAYS OF ENGLAND.

Great is the receptive capacity of the sympathetic heart; for, notwithstanding all that we had heard before, the meeting listened with the profoundest interest to Mr. Lamb's too short statement about Christian effort in Algiers, whither he went some three and a half years ago, in connection with the Kabyle Mission. The needs of the land are great, and many more workers are wanted. He said he was returning soon, and two lady helpers would accompany him. Algiers is within four days of England, and there is a beautiful climate. There are sixteen millions of Mohammedans, not counting Europeans and Jews. Women are sorely needed to visit their Mohammedan sisters, who are inaccessible to any but women, by the modes of their life. Mr. Lamb would have said more, if time had permitted, about the unhappy condition of the young women. They are simply bought for money, and if a husband gets tired of his wife at the end of a few months, he sends her back to her father's house. Nothing will change this state of things but the Gospel. Who will go and take it to them? If we had the love of Christ burning in our hearts like a consuming fire, we should not need Mr. Hudson Taylor or Mr. Radcliffe to come and stir us up to our duty. This in brief was Mr. Lamb's message. When he had ended, prayer was made, as it was at various periods of the evening, for the workers at home and abroad, and for the safe conduct of Mr. and Mrs. Merry's party across the Atlantic Sea.

Mr. James Merry, who has been at Stratford, Canada, for some time, is now happily restored to health, and has come to this side to help in the work. Friends will like to know that this season Miss Macpherson does not purpose visiting Canada. The acquisition of the new premises in Bethnal Green and the task of fitly furnishing them for future use will keep her at her post in the East-end. Let those who go away for rest and change not forget to share her burdens in this extended enterprise.

A VILLAGE SPRING FESTIVAL.

What vast influences may hang on one godly life, and that life an obscure one! This reflection forced itself on the mind while attending the anniversary of the Bell Bar Mission-room the other day. Probably not one in a hundred of your readers know where Bell Bar is. It is part of the parish of North Mimms, in Hertfordshire, and is situate about two miles from Potter's Bar Station on the Great Northern Railway. At Brookman's Park, in this parish, is a coachman, by name James Cheeseman, who, having experienced the pardoning love of God, sought to benefit the scattered population by telling out this same love from house to house, and in the open air. These efforts attracted the attention of his master, who built him a small iron room. The Lord was pleased to bless the efforts of this coachman, and soon the iron room had to be enlarged.

As with other Missions, an anniversary is a necessity. Sometimes a tent is used for the tea, while at other times a barn serves this purpose. This year the cart-shed did duty. The earth floor was strewn with sawdust, canvas hid the more unsightly portions of the structure, snowy table-cloths covered the rough boards, and choice flowers shed beauty and perfume all around, while the cheerful hum of conversation, and the contented and happy faces of the guests, lighted by the evening sun, might have been envied by many a more pretentious and fashionable gathering.

But it was in the crowded iron room afterwards, that the influence of this good man was more clearly seen. He made a modest statement showing that souls had been gathered to the Saviour during the year, and that these gathered ones had from their small earnings contributed to the funds of several missionary and other societies. Hearty words of cheer were then spoken by the vicar of the parish (Rev E. M. Batty), by a neighbouring squire (Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard), by the village schoolmaster, who shares the preaching with the coachman, by a town missionary from Hertford (Mr. Hudson), and by the secretary of the Open-Air Mission (Mr. Kirkham), all of whom had come to fraternise on this auspicious occasion. How different would it have been had this coachman been a mere worldly or wicked man. God be praised for this good work, a type of hundreds of similar efforts throughout our land.

A SUMMER RESORT.—May I direct the attention of those who wish to spend their summer holidays on the Continent to the Mission-house in Blankenburg. It is situated in one of the most beautiful parts of Germany, in the heart of the Thüringen Forest, amidst the bracing air of its pinewoods. It offers, on very reasonable terms, a comfortable home and Christian society; it will be especially attractive to those who take an interest in evangelistic work, as it is a centre of missions. Miss von Weling, a devoted worker, whose name is well-known in Mildmay Park, is at the head of the house; she speaks English, and is well acquainted with the requirements of English people. As one of the trustees of the place, I beg to recommend it. Apply to Miss von Weling, Blankenburg, Schwarzathal, Thüringen. May I also ask prayer for Münich (Bavaria), where I intend to labour during the next months. H. P. ZIEMANN.

"FISHING" AT BILLINGSGATE.

The other day Billingsgate Fish Market was a scene of unusual excitement; and that is an extraordinary remark when applied to the ever-excited salesmen who ply their trade in this salubrious part of the City. The market was "flush," and the men were excited over some bold move to crush a monopoly. A large steamer had just arrived, having brought nine hundred boxes of mackerel from the Irish coast at two and sixpence per box carriage. The carriers who were being fought charge nine shillings per box. The undue excitement is therefore accounted for.

But why mention this? Mainly because the Billingsgate Christian Workers' Association may deduce inferences from the events of that day which should cheer them. At the very time when their monthly meeting was commenced the excitement was at its highest, consequently doubts arose in the minds of many, whether the men would attend in the Subscription Room to hear the Gospel proclaimed. These doubts at one time seemed feasible. The meeting opened by the few who were present singing heartily, "The crowning day is coming." The windows in the Subscription Rooms look out upon the river, and the men on the steamers about to return to the North Sea for a fresh cargo, caught the sound of singing and looked up from their work. It was heard above the hagglings, shoutings, and din, in the market below. The strains of that well-known hymn struck upon the ears of many who by reason of the excitement had forgotten their resolution to attend the Gospel meeting. Then they began to gather one by one until the room was fairly full.

Undoubtedly the Billingsgate men are hearty in their religion as well as in their calling, for there was a tone of deep earnestness in the meeting, and a robustness in the way they sang the hymns. Old men sat there swaying to and fro, their eyes speaking their belief. Young men who had "just dropped in to see what was going on" evidently realised the depth of meaning in such a meeting. Mr. William Noble gave the address, and appealed to the men by illustrations which touched their sympathies. "If a man's religion does not teach him to leave off selling stinking fish, it's not much good to him;" they appreciated the hit. The meeting closed after the Secretary had obtained a promise from Mr. Noble to visit them again.

As a group of the workers swerved round a corner of the market, a merchant who was seated upon a tier of barrels with his men around him, his silk hat well back on his head, and seemingly benefited by the morning's transactions, saw fit to chaff those who were leaving the meeting. A sneer sat upon his rubicund face, as he said, "Halloa, been fishing for mackerel?" "Ay, sir, golden mackerel?" returned a member of the band, as the merchant subsided behind the barrels. "Q."

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN'S birthday was on the first day of May, and she hoped to celebrate it on the plains of Jaffa, by erecting there the first Gospel tent, in which her brother would preach in Arabic, Mr. Levinsohn (of the British Jews Society) in German, and herself in English.

THE STORY OF A PICTURE.—Mr. Gawin Kirkham began the nine hundredth explanation of his "Broad and Narrow Way" picture, by showing it at the Earlswood Asylum for Idiots, Earlswood, Redhill, Surrey. These poor afflicted ones manifested considerable interest in the exposition, and the majority evidently grasped the leading features. The singing displayed great attention both to tune and time, and the knowledge of Scripture was very marked. In addition to ordinary mixed audiences, Mr. Kirkham has now lectured on the picture to soldiers, sailors, policemen, postmen, railway-men, foreigners, Jews, Y.M.C.A.'s, Y.W.C.A.'s, day-schools, boarding-schools, colleges, Sunday-schools, ragged-schools, shoeblacks, to the inmates of convalescent homes, military hospitals, military prisons, and workhouses, and to strange audiences at races, fairs, boat-races, and other gatherings.

Spring Anniversaries.

MISSION TO DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

(Exeter Hall, May 18.)

SELDOM is Exeter Hall so gay with flags as Mr. Mather, the Director of this Mission, had made it for these meetings, afternoon and evening. Seldom is there a more interesting subject, or one more calculated to awaken sympathy, submitted to an Exeter Hall audience. In a series of word pictures drawn by the various speakers, besides a number of the Mission skippers fresh from the sea, and finally illustrated by a series of dissolving views, a vivid impression was given of the life of these hardy men who fish the North Sea in all seasons and all weathers, of the dangers encountered, of their utterly neglected state, both moral and spiritual, before the work was commenced, and of the vast improvement that has taken place in their condition since.

Sir Andrew Clark, the worthy chairman of the afternoon, in the course of a lively address, expressed the hope that, in order to foster a spirit of independence among the men, some system of life insurance should be organised by them. Mr. Miller said a floating ship used to be called a floating hell, but now, in many cases it is a floating Bethel. He spoke of one scene he had witnessed in the North Sea, which was better than any Exeter Hall meeting. It is a beautiful sight, when the flag is flying which tells that a service is about to be held on the Mission ship, to see one little boat after another put off from the fishing smacks, to witness the hearty greetings with which the men are received, to join in the singing and prayers, and to listen to the personal testimony of the men. Speaking as chairman of the council, he said, what they are earnestly striving for is to have a Mission ship attached to every fleet. For this purpose five more are wanted, there being seven already at work. Mr. Treves asked all to picture to themselves a floating population of 500 men. This is about the number with each fleet, with no means whatever, apart from the Mission, of obtaining medical help. However seriously a man was injured, he must be carried on board the steamer, his clothes in all probability saturated with salt water, and in that state he had to remain two days or more before he could reach England. It is very different where there is a Mission ship, for the skipper is qualified to give medical and surgical relief, and there is not that delay which has cost many a man his life. Mr. H. Smethurst (Mayor of Great Grimsby) said fishermen do not carry about with them a sentimental or negative Gospel. They want a positive Gospel.

An interesting incident of the meeting was the presentation by Lady Clark of certificates of proficiency in medical and surgical knowledge to several of the Mission skippers. The announcement made by Mr. Mather, that a gentleman (Mr. Pirie) had called at the office that day, and presented to the Mission his steam yacht, which recently cost £4000, was hailed with great acclamation.

Mr. Gray, one of the assistant secretaries of the Board of Trade, presided over the evening meeting. He bore witness to the great improvement that has taken place in the character of the fishermen during the past few years, and spoke of the help the Mission has been in raising their condition. The feature of this meeting, however, was the testimony given by several of the skippers. Of these, one must suffice as to a great extent characteristic of several others. Skipper Rose, of the smack Rover, said: I bless God that ever the Mission came to the North Sea. I was forty-two years old before I knew there was a God, and hundreds of my brethren are in the same condition. When I came to see the free salvation offered to a poor fisherman like me, I cannot sufficiently thank you, but God will. What joy it is to know my loving Saviour is watching and guarding me wherever I am! When I was first told about the loving Saviour, I said, "No, not for me; not for such a worthless blasphemer as me." But at last I felt that his loving, tender arms were about me, and that He had saved me. And now I and others with me will try to get all our brother fishermen to know this loving Saviour. While these testimonies were being given, the striking pictures of sea life, shown by the dark lantern, were thrown upon a screen and created much interest among the large audience that had assembled.

HOME TEACHING FOR THE BLIND.

(Exeter Hall, May 16: Viscount Midleton, Chairman.)

THE society which undertakes this good work had a most cheering report to present. There are about eighty branches in the various towns of Great Britain and Ireland, and in the Metropolis there are eleven districts under regular visitation. In London alone there are over 2200 blind persons under daily visitation and instruction in the reading of God's Holy Word, and of these over 1500 can read in Moon's embossed type, and have an abundant supply of books lent them.

Sir Joseph Pease, M.P., claimed for the poor the same amount of sympathy and the same help as is extended to the rich suffering from this affliction. He mentioned the case of one fisher lad who is able not only to take his part on shore in mending the nets and baskets and to read to his companions, but acts as stroke oar, and is as handy at sea as any. The Chairman pointed out that thousands of blind persons who would have been absolutely dependent on others but for the aid of the Society had been brought into a position of light and comfort, in which in many cases they were able also to maintain themselves. Mr. Wm. Hibbard, who has been a teacher for fourteen years, in that time has paid 30,000 visits, and has taught three hundred persons to read; five of his pupils are now teachers, while many are enjoying scholarship at the Royal Normal College for the Blind. Dr. Armitage and Rev. Alfred Dove spoke, dwelling on the unique character of the work.

MR. SPURGEON'S COLPORTEURS.

(Metropolitan Tabernacle, May 16: Mr. G. Williams, Chairman.)

THREE of the colporteurs having reported some of their experiences, difficulties, and rewards, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon gave an address. The work, he said, was forced upon him; but, as he looked back upon what has been accomplished through this instrumentality, he felt very thankful, and knew it was of God. It is one of the best possible agencies for the spread of the Gospel. There is greater spiritual destitution in many country places in England than at the East-end of London. In many villages the Gospel is not heard at all, for that cannot be called the Gospel where the sacrament is exalted above Jesus Christ. What the city missionaries are in London, the colporteurs are in the country, visiting the cottagers, speaking to them in a way that they can understand, and telling them plainly and simply the message of salvation, and of the love of God in Jesus Christ. Then the colporteurs are freely encouraged to preach, which some of them do three or four times a week, besides Sundays. They are all temperance men, heads of Bands of Hope, tract distributors, and they regularly visit the sick and dying. Mr. Spurgeon claimed for this Association that it is unsectarian. He explained that this did not mean smoothing away individual beliefs until a kind of universalism was reached, but every man, Baptist, Wesleyan, or Episcopalian, carrying out and acting upon his own convictions. He did not want anyone to go sneaking about, afraid to say what he really believed, but to hold fast to his own convictions, while allowing others to do the same. That was his view of being non-sectarian, and the chief aim of all is to win souls for Christ. He looked upon the colporteurs as supplementing the work of the Bible and Tract

These men often make a person buy what he thinks he does not want, though he really does; for there is no need in human nature so deep as the need of Christ.

The report states that the sales during the past year have exceeded those of any previous twelve months by £75, and amounted altogether to more than £9600. Eighty-seven colporteurs sold over 32,000 Bibles and Testaments, and nearly a million and a half of other publications, besides conducting nearly twelve thousand religious services and a large amount of house-to-house visitation.

A few warm words of congratulation from the Chairman rounded off a pleasant meeting.

PEACE SOCIETY.

(Finsbury Chapel, May 17: Sir J. Pease, M.P., Chairman.)

THE Chairman dwelt with sorrow on the millions of armed men now to be seen in Europe, and on the bitter ill-feeling engendered by wars, and said even statesmen are beginning to ask whether such large armaments are actually needed. The Peace Society, he added, believed in arbitration as a remedy, and that it could be adopted. The principle of arbitration is, he thought, growing in favour. Professor Stuart, M.P., in speaking of the subject in its economical aspect, said that ten shillings in every pound of the taxes went to pay for wars past and present. The Society is working to produce peace not only in this country, but all over the world, and to bring about the true brotherhood of peoples. Mr. Handel Cossham, M.P., Revs. Dr. Hoopell and R. F. Horton also spoke.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

(Regent's Park College, May 19.)

PRIOR to the formal meeting, the guests, as usual gathered in the dining-hall of the College for tea and coffee, over which mutual greetings were exchanged. There was a large company present. Viscount Bangor took the chair. He remarked that while they heard much of alliances in the present day, the one great need of the age was an alliance with Christ as the Head.

Canon Woodward, of Liverpool, read a brief paper on "The presence of the Lord Jesus Christ, the source of the believer's fidelity in service and victory in conflict." He said the atoning sacrifice of Calvary was not preached half so much as it ought to be. Man could only find his true rest and being in conscious union with God, and in all times the manifestation of God's presence had been the help of his creatures. To a man, however, who was vitalised by grace, Christ was everywhere present, and he endured as seeing Him who was invisible. It was only by the Lord's aid that they were fitted for service, for had He not said, "He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do"? They lived in a day of compromise, but by the grace of Christ his servants would be kept faithful unto death.

In introducing Rev. A. W. Clark, of Prague, to this meeting, the Chairman reminded his hearers that the liberty which Christian workers had in Austria was owing to the exertions of the Evangelical Alliance. Mr. Clark, in his address, acknowledged the great debt he personally owed to the Alliance, and then went on to give a deeply interesting account of his labours in Bohemia. Of late years they had been limited to house worship by the authorities, and so they had fitted up their hall as a dwelling-place, and thus were able to have larger gatherings than were possible in private houses. After a great struggle, they had succeeded in establishing a Y.M.C.A. in Austria, and that was the only movement in the country at all appsoaching the broad basis of the Evangelical Alliance. Sunday-school work was being carried on with success, and a society had recently been started for the Pastor Roger Hollard, of Paris, gave an excellent little address, in which he pointed out that the light which Jesus Christ gave penetrated the hearts of men, and began a new paternity of God towards his creatures, and a new fraternity of man with man. God's blessing could only rest upon united Christian work. Pastor F. Fliedner, of Madrid, and Count Paschkoff, of Russia, also addressed the meeting.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY.

This Society does yeoman service to the cause of truth by its open-air lectures, by lectures on the relations of science to religion, delivered by scientific men of the first rank, by examinations in Christian evidences, and in other ways.

The Chairman said those who would deal with scepticism must adapt their reasoning to the minds of the people. But the holiness of a Christian life is the greatest argument for Christianity, and nothing can stand in the place of that. The Bishop of Sydney mentioned that a Christian Evidence Society had been founded for New South Wales very much on the lines of this Society. In the course of an eloquent address, he showed that such work is most effective when the positive truths of Christianity are put forward, and not presented in a controversial spirit. Rev. Dr. Stevenson and Professor Balfour Stewart, in addresses of much ability and well-sustained reasoning, dealt with different aspects of the assumed antagonism between religion and science. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes said his experience of the working classes was that infidelity among them is only skin-deep. Real, downright Christianity excites their admiration everywhere. Their most trusted leaders are for the most part actively engaged in Christian work, and Mr. Bradlaugh himself would have ten times more influence as a Christian than he now has. The changed lives and happy hearts of thousands of people afford the best possible proof of the power and truth of Christianity.

VERNACULAR EDUCATION for INDIA.

(Willis's Rooms, May 13: Lord Northbrook, Chairman.)

The noble Chairman emphasised the importance of sound Christian vernacular literature in India. The spread of secular education has awakened a spirit of inquiry, and has led many to throw off old superstitions without affording them a new faith. No more effective means of meeting this state of things can be found than the wide circulation of the literature this Society publishes.

Rev. Henry Seeley said there were upwards of a hundred students in the training institutions, and the Society had sent nine hundred native teachers into the mission field. The number of pupils on the rolls is 7166. The Christian inspectors employed by the Society, not only teach in the schools under their care, but they are, in some instances, preachers of the Gospel. Another important branch of the Society's operations is the issue of school books and general literature.

Sir Robert Phayre seconded the chairman in commending the Society. Rev. H. U. Weitbrecht said the demand for literature had enormously increased of late, and had created a supply, plentiful enough, but sadly pernicious. Rev. J. Whitney gave an interesting account of the village schools of Bengal, of which there are about fifty thousand, and showed how this Society is providing Christian and efficient teachers and inspectors, and introducing the Gospel. Mr. H. M. Mody, a Parsi Christian gentleman, spoke very strongly of the need of Christian literature amongst his people. A young Christian Brahmin followed on the same lines, pleading eloquently and forcibly for well-chosen, well-written Christian books and papers. Rev. J. Murray Mitchell added, from his long experience, some telling facts bearing on the importance of the work carried on by the Christian Vernacular Society for India, and Dr. R. N. Cust pleaded for increased liberality and prayer on behalf of this important work.

WORKING MEN & THE LORD'S DAY.

(Exeter Hall, May 19: Lord Halsbury, Chairman.)

The Chairman spoke of the observance of the Lord's Day as a national duty, and pressed home the question, What would be the religious, and social, and material life of the nation without it? After pointing out two dangers which beset the work of the Association—that, on the one hand, created by those who, while professing regard for the Lord's Day, would open museums and picture galleries on that day; and that, on the other, of a too strict enforcement of the secular law for the observance of the Sabbath—he said the command received is to observe principles, leaving details to individual consciences, so far as the necessities of civil life are concerned. If the law were repealed many persons would feel obliged to open their shops in consequence of competition. Whilst the principle which their great Master enforced should be adhered to, they should not endeavour to do everything by Government, but leave something for the individual conscience. Rev. Canon Fleming urged the necessity of the Day of Rest upon the grounds of health, morality, and religion. Referring to the 500,000 barmen and barmaids employed in this country, he said if these were polled a large majority would be found in favour of Sunday closing.

SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY.

(Exeter Hall, May 19: Mr. George Williams, Chairman.)

Mr. Williams, in his opening address, gave an interesting summary of the Society's work during the past year. There are now ten Bethels and Sailors' Rests, and at that in Ratcliff-highway seven English or foreign services are held every Lord's Day, A mission boat and a Bible carriage are material aids to the work, which is carried on by fifteen missionaries and about one hundred voluntary workers. Fifteen ports are regularly missioned, besides others visited from time to time. A large amount of work is done on board ship, and it is simply impossible to estimate the amount of comfort and blessing which this Mission has been to a large number of persons.

Rev. G. J. Hill (the secretary) gave a very encouraging account of progress at the several stations occupied by the Society. There are stations at Liverpool, Fleetwood, Whitehaven, Wokington, Maryport, Fowey, Charlestown, Isle of Man, and in Ireland. Upwards of 100,000 seamen have attended the religious services held at these various places. A good work has been done in supplying libraries to foreign-going ships, in correspondence with seamen, and considerable relief has been given to destitute seamen. The Gospel Temperance meetings held at Ratcliff-highway resulted in 450 pledges being taken. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, referring to some features of the work, and especially to the large number of service visits paid to ships coming into the Cornish ports, said it was a matter for deep thankfulness that so much good work is being done, far more than Christians are generally aware of. As illustrating the power even of one text, he mentioned that a sailor had told him that during seven years' absence from England he was kept from yielding to the temptations to which he was exposed in foreign ports by these words, "How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" which were impressed upon him before he left. This was before his conversion; but it was ever before him, and made him resolve he would do nothing dishonouring to God, or that would grieve his mother. Mr. H. W. Maynard pointed out that the great object of the Society is to bring sailors to the Saviour. Rev. Dr. Clifford gave an earnest address on "Our duty to the Sailor for the Saviour's sake, and our duty to the Society." The sailor is continually exposed to peril, and it is the duty of Christians to do all they can to promote his happiness. In their outspokenness and honesty there is that which, if they were Christ's, would make them splendid missionaries. As in the centuries immediately preceding Christ's first coming there was a great Jewish dispersion, so now there is going on a great British dispersion; and if, instead of dissoluteness, the sailor, wherever he went, was a messenger of the Gospel of peace, what an untold influence for good he would exert. Mr. John Bell also spoke in sympathetic terms of the work, which he commended to the prayers of all.

RAGGED CHURCH & CHAPEL UNION.

(Exeter Hall, May 20: Mr. Geo. Williams, Chairman.)

Rev. Burman Cassin read the report, from which it appears that in the halls affiliated with the Union one hundred services are held every Sunday, with a total attendance of over ten thousand persons. There are also about the same number of week-night services. There are fifty Sunday-schools, with a weekly attendance of ten thousand children, in the one hundred stations to which grants are made.

The Chairman dwelt on the great spiritual needs of the Metropolis, with its ever-increasing population, by immigrants from other places. Mr. George Holland said he was deeply grieved to know that this Society was cramped in its operations for want of funds. Those who know anything of the back-slum people of the Metropolis know how important it is to have a church or chapel nestling in some retired street, where the simple Gospel can be preached. This work pays. Precious souls have been won to the Lord. He gave several striking examples of conversion.

Mrs. Evered Poole followed with a sympathetic address, overflowing with touching incident, and showing that the desire to save others is the first instinct of the saved. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., and Mr. Joseph Peters also warmly advocated the truly Christ-like work carried on by the Union.

Y.M. FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOC.

(Aldersgate-street: Mr. Geo. Williams, Chairman.)

The annual report, read by the hon. sec., Mr. A. L. Hall, referred to the work of those members of the Society who had already gone out into the mission field, one to South Africa, who had started a Y.M.C.A. at Algoa Bay, and several to China in connection with different societies. The members in training have been increased by six volunteers during the year. The home work of the Society, which is far from being the least important, was very satisfactorily reported on, addresses having been given at many of the metropolitan branches of the Y.M.C.A. and several prayer-meetings being well attended. A missionary shelf had also been added to the library at Aldersgate-street. The Peckham Y.M.C.A. had started a missionary association, and now had four members in training as missionaries.

The Chairman said all the Young Men's Christian Associations trained young men in such a way that they were likely to become missionaries to the heathen. He hoped the great missionary societies would find plenty of men of the right sort, who would go anywhere and do anything. He advocated the establishment of collecting societies in all our great houses of business. Rev. W. H. Barlow gave from his own experience, a few tests for candidates for missionary work. Mr. Hudson Taylor said the man whose piety is not evident at home is not the man for India or Africa or China. Let them get a note-book, make a note of one or two unconverted men they knew, and begin to pray for their conversion, and it might be that the Lord would surprise them. He concluded a deeply interesting and instructive speech by wishing that a persecution would arise to scatter English Christians after the Apostolic method. Rev. J. Chalmers, New Guinea, urged intending missionaries to learn the language thoroughly. Mr. Hudson, Mr. Minifie, and Mr. Stevens, three members of the Society who were in training to go out, spoke well and simply.

EVANGELICAL CONTINENTAL SOC.

The experiment was tried this year of holding two meetings, one in the North of London (Stamford Hill) and the other in the South (Brixton), and with success. The place of meeting was in each case a Congregational church, as the Society, though perfectly unsectarian as regards the constitution of its committee, and also its operations abroad, is mainly supported by Congregationalists. The chair at each was taken by the pastors of the respective churches, Rev. B. Vaughan Pryce and Rev. Dr. Stevenson.

The report contained a review of the past 50 years of the work in Europe and of the changes that have done so much to open the way for the entrance of the work, and also many interesting facts relative to the labours of the Society's agents during the past year. The balance-sheet showed that more than £3,000 had been actually expended in promoting the work of God in Belgium, France, Italy, Spain, and Bohemia, but it was stated that the regular income of the Society continues to decrease. At the first meeting the adoption of the report, &c., was moved by the treasurer, Mr. John Cunliffe, and seconded by Rev. T. Baron Hart. At Brixton the same resolution was spoken to by Mr. Evan Spicer and Rev. J. P. Gledstone. The following foreign brethren were then introduced and addressed the meeting:—Pastor Roger Holland, of the Luxemberg Chapel in Paris, as representative of the Free Churches of France; Rev. A. W. Clark, from Prague, a missionary of the American Board; Pastor Fliedner, from Madrid, and Pastor Appia, from Nessouvaux, in Belgium. Each speaker reported progress in many directions, but the conditions under which the work is carried on in Austria and Spain contrasted strongly with the perfect liberty enjoyed in France and Belgium.

EVANGELISATION AT MARSEILLES.

In 1879 the Evangelical Society of Geneva commenced Christian work amongst the Italian population of Marseilles, which is very numerous, and in a very degraded condition. The work is in charge now of M. Augustus Lensi, an evangelist, who carries on a regular system of visitation amongst the families. The Bibles received from the Society for the free distribution of the Scriptures, have proved the means of blessing in many cases. Some meetings, in French held during the winter were much appreciated, but through the opposition of a bigoted Roman Catholic, who employed a considerable number of the attendants at the meetings, they were discontinued. Another branch of the work, and a most interesting and promising one, is the "Sunday"-school held every Thursday, this being a universal holiday for school children in France.

A hall is very much needed for the extension of the work, and the better accommodation of the little flock. Communications may be sent to Pastor Monod, 94, Rue Grignan, Marseilles.

"THE OFFICER'S DEFEAT," which appeared in our last, may be had of Mr. R. Holmes, Ballybrack, Dublin, price 2d. per dozen. The writer is Mr. J. C. Rainey, of Paignton, Devon.

A BACKWOODS MISSION.—In January, 1884, you inserted in The Christian an appeal from Wm. Robertson, a missionary in the Backwoods of Canada, for books, tracts, and periodicals, for the use of himself and his flock, who were all poor. Many responded to his appeal, and the papers, magazines, and books sent were much valued in a place where literature was not to be had. He was cut off last January after three days' illness, at the age of forty-six. I lately received from his widow a request that I would intimate his death, and beg the friends who have helped in this way to continue sending the tracts, &c., to her, and she will distribute them to those who will value them highly. Her address is still Front Lake P.O.,

SACRIFICES IN PALESTINE.

A lady missionary in Palestine says in a recent letter to a friend:—

I paid an interesting visit to Nablous, the ancient Shechem. The last day of my visit I rode to the summit of Mount Ebal, which commands a most extensive view of the surrounding country, and in the afternoon of the same day we went up Mount Gerizim to see the "sacrifice of the Samaritans." These are a community of about 200 people living in the midst of a Moslem population; they possess the Pentateuch and live by its laws, and as their fathers did (John iv. 20) worship on Mount Gerizim.

We reached the top about 5 p.m. and at sunset they slaughtered seven lambs. When killed they were presented to the high priest to see they had no blemish. Then all the entrails were burned, and the blood collected in a basin, a man going round to sprinkle each tent. There were thirty-seven tents besides the tabernacle, for they live here seven days. I saw a mother come out of her tent, dip her finger in the blood, and put it on her child's forehead. When prepared the limbs were tied to a pole, head downwards, fastened to a short piece of wood laid across the pole, so that it really was like a cross. They were then lowered into a furnace, and a grating placed over the top. The Samaritans then went into the tabernacle for prayer until midnight, when the lambs were taken up and eaten in haste with unleavened bread and bitter herbs, each Samaritan being girded and having a staff in his hand.

MISSION AT SHEPHERD'S BUSH.

An Evangelistic Mission in Avenue-road Church, Goldbank-road, Shepherd's Bush, conducted by Mr. W. Spencer Walton, was concluded on Monday, May 16. It commenced by the evangelist and a number of Christians, members of the church, meeting for prayer on Saturday morning. The Divine presence felt in this meeting gave confident expectation of coming blessing. That blessing commenced the following afternoon in connection with the address to children and young persons. Many were deeply affected, and several confessed Christ. In the evening Mr. Walton preached in Avenue-road Church to a large congregation. Many were deeply convinced of their sin; and in the after meeting several professed to find peace by believing in Christ. On Monday afternoon much blessing was realised in a large meeting of mothers, and again at the address in the church in the evening. After this meeting and after each of the evening meetings during the week from thirty to forty anxious inquirers retired to the Lecture Hall in connection with the church, and were directed to Christ by earnest and enlightened Christian workers. From Tuesday to Friday, Bible readings were given each afternoon, which were much blessed to Christians.

The mission ended in a meeting for praise, attended by about six hundred persons. When all who had received blessing in the meetings were asked to rise, it seemed as if more than half the congregation immediately stood up. In addition to Mr. Walton, Mr. Spencer, of the Railway Mission. addressed this meeting in wise and earnest words. In this mission more than two hundred anxious inquirers, whose names and addresses we possess, were spoken with, most of whom we hope have found Christ. This made the praise-meeting one of intense gratitude and joy. C. Graham.

PERSECUTED JEWS.

An important meeting of the "Society for Relief of Persecuted Jews" was held on Wednesday last week, at the house of the president, Lord Brabazon. Mrs. Finn, in a powerful address, gave facts and statistics worthy the attention of those who desire to understand this pressing question. "The vast majority of foreign immigrants into this country," she said, "are Germans, not Jews, but any Jews who remain in England become valuable subjects of the British Empire. They are thrifty, sober, industrious, and law-abiding." The British Jews, besides maintaining their own poor, assist the majority of the refugees.

This Society provides work and wages, and in Palestine gives them agricultural work and training on some land near Jerusalem, acquired for the purpose. To the aged and sick, food and clothes are given. Interesting cases were cited of whole families helped to emigrate who are now prosperous, and letters were read of deep gratitude for the help given at the critical moment when it was needed. Mrs. Finn, The Elms, Brook-green, W., will be glad to hear from any lady willing to lend her drawing-room for a meeting.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Birmingham.—We are now having some grand work for the Master. Fifteen souls have been converted this last week, including some very bad characters. J. Stead.

Evangelical Mission, Bordesley.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken has been conducting a mission at Clopher (Ireland), the influence of which has been felt throughout a very large country district. Those who profess to have received spiritual help might be counted by hundreds.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Douglas have left Ryde in the Isle of Wight, and are now in Scotland seeking further restoration of health. Prayer is asked that the Lord may be pleased to bless the means used and to bring his servant forth again to labour in the vineyard.

Bath Races.—The effort put forth on the occasion of the Bath Races by Mr. Stephen T. Crocker, of the Open-air Mission, in conjunction with the Bath public-house missionary and the members of the Y.M.C.A., was greatly blessed. Crowds listened attentively to the preaching of the Gospel, and readily received the tracts offered them.

Mr. Charles Inglis has concluded a most successful fortnight's mission in Belfast. The circus, holding 3000 people, has been filled to overflowing, and many were unable to gain admission. Fully two-thirds of the audiences have been men, many of whom came out on the Lord's side. The last Sunday night Mr. Inglis preached in the circus will long be remembered by those present. Many were broken down, and not a few professed to pass from death to life before they left the building. The Bible talks each day have been much enjoyed, and have proved a time of great refreshing to those who attended them.

HOSPITAL FOR SPEZIA.—An intimate friend of mine, who is well acquainted with the facts, wishes me to lay before the Christian public the need that exists for a Protestant hospital in this increasing city, whose famous gulf and arsenal are Italy's greatest naval centre, and where a great work is being done for our Lord. Quite a considerable number of Protestants are now to be found amongst its vast population. For some time our brethren and sisters labouring there have been feeling the need of a Protestant Hospital, as all Protestants are shamefully treated in the local hospitals by the priests and nuns. Some of them are allowed no rest, and their last moments are embittered by repeated demands that they should confess to the priest and receive the rites of the Church. Suitable premises are now offering which, with the necessary expense of maintenance, will cost £400 per annum, and the promoter of the enterprise, Mr. A. A. Coates, who is managing partner of Croce de Malta, and who is recommended by Mr. J. S. Anderson, of Spezia, is very anxious to secure the help of English Christians before embarking

PIONEERING in NEW GUINEA

By JAMES CHALMERS, of New Guinea.
With a Map, and Two Portraits, and Illustrations, Engraved by E. Whymper, from Photographs.

"A very instructive volume. Mr. Chalmers has been at work for many years in New Guinea as a missionary, and probably no white man is better known there, and certainly none is more loved and trusted by the natives. He has done much to smooth the way for our protectorate, and Sir Peter Scratchley spoke of him in the highest terms. His book is one that should interest both the student and the ordinary reader. Mr. Whymper's numerous illustrations add greatly to its beauty and its value."—The Times.

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

THE THIRTIETH ANNUAL MEETING of this Institution will be held (d.v.) at the Homes, Parsons Green, Fulham, on Saturday, June 11.

THOS. SALT, Esq., M.P., will take the chair at 3 o'clock.

Mrs. FRANK BEVAN will open the new Training Home for 50 Friendless young girls.

A Choir of 50 young girls will sing a selection of JUBILEE HYMNS.

Friends desirous of inspecting the arrangements of both the Homes at Parsons Green, may do so on presenting cards of invitation for the Meeting (to be obtained at 200, Euston-road) from two to three o'clock on the day of the Meeting, and also after the termination of the Meeting.

Tea will be served at 5 o'clock in a Marquee, under the shadow of the venerable old mulberry tree, as on former occasions.

There will be a SALE OF USEFUL AND FANCY ARTICLES, many of which will be made by the Inmates of the Institution. LADIES ARE INVITED TO SEND CONTRIBUTIONS OF WORK to be sold on the occasion.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALE, and the contributions received on the day of the Meeting, will be applied to the proposed extension of the Open All-Night Refuge, which has been so pre-eminently blessed of God in saving young women and girls.

Since the establishment of this Asylum in 1867, more than 13,000 POOR YOUNG CREATURES have been sheltered.

God's merciful providence has already supplied about £500 towards the proposed extension.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION—CASE OF Mrs. E. BRASH, of EDINBURGH.

This patient (a widow lady) applied to me first in the Winter of 1884—5. Her mother had died of chest disease. Her own case was of eighteen months' standing. The physicians of the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary had done the best for her. She gradually became worse, but reading accounts of my treatment in The Christian, she gathered hope, and determined to consult me.

The cough, and shortness of breath, with which her complaint first came on, had become most distressing. Half-a-pint of expectoration, partly purulent, sometimes mixed with blood, was brought up daily. The pain she described as being under the left breast, and through to the back, and very severe. There was sleeplessness, hectic flushes, and chills; no appetite for food. "I have lost flesh (she says) all over my chest, and my strength has gradually declined."

Twelve letters of advice were written, spreading over nearly two years. At one time there was derangement of the stomach, and pain after food, for which some special medicine was directed. The patient, during the last year, has only taken medicine occasionally, as a preventative and precaution.

Writing me February 23, 1887, she says:—"I feel I must write and thank you for the very kind interest you have taken in my case. I have now been four months without your medicine at all, and have passed the winter well. Although we have had fogs, such as I have never seen in Edinburgh before—and I am a native of it (fifty-five years old), by God's blessing on your means, I am in a new world. I spread the knowledge of it far and wide. God bless all your efforts to do good.—Yours gratefully, E. Brash, 10, Rose-street, Edinburgh."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

The Book World.

The Joy of Her Home. By Lizzie Joyce Tomlinson. 9d. Woolmer. A beautiful story of the home life of three orphan children, and of the affectionate devotion which bound them together and made them strong to do nobly in the struggle for life.

Our Angel Children. By Rhoda. 1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Beginning with a simple account of her own loss, "Rhoda" seeks to comfort that numerous company who have lost infant children. From Scripture and experience she offers many true consolations.

Occasional Poems. By L. J. Elliot Stock. This is a pleasant little volume of verse, and the subjects chosen are of such varied and world-wide interest that they will be sure to meet the sympathy they court, from many readers. A gentle spirit and graceful thoughts pervade the little book.

Autobiography of William Dunn. J. E. Hawkins. Sixpence expended on a copy of this touching life-story to be given to a boy could not be better invested. But the book will have a keen interest for all readers who watch the ravages of the drink-demon, and seek to elevate the working-classes.

Verona, and Other Poems. By L. Ormiston Chant. 5s. Stott, Oxford-street. Mrs. Chant is a very effective speaker on the platform, but she does not excel as a poet. Her aims are good, however, and some of the sonnets—always difficult writing—are excellent. The price of the book strikes us as extravagant.

The Treasury: A Companion Tune Book to "Psalms and Hymns for Public, Social, and Private Worship." Compiled and edited by Joseph B. Mead. 3s. 6d. 25, Bouverie-street, E.C. In the preface to this work the compiler says:—"It is hoped that the tunes selected will be found 'capable of embodying the purest thoughts and noblest aspirations of both religion and art,'" and certainly it is one of the best collections of tunes in use, besides being one of most catholic range. The trustees are to be congratulated on their choice of a compiler.

Special Unbelief, England's Greatest Sin. By A. S. Lamb, barrister of Inner Temple. 1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Mr. Lamb thinks, and, we fear, too truly, that "justification by faith" is little understood by vast numbers of professing Christians in Protestant England, and too little preached by ministers belonging professedly to an Apostolic Church. He shows how the doctrine may be evaded and diluted, as it was among the Galatians. He rightly ascribes much of the present loose teaching on holiness and sanctification to unscriptural views of justification.

Social Arrows. By Lord Brabazon. 1s. Longmans, Green & Co. This cheap re-issue of a work calling public attention to some of the evils resulting from our high but unequal civilisation should do effective work at the present time.

The Child's Pictorial 2d. S.P.C.K. With this pleasant little monthly a well-executed chromo portrait of the Queen is given.

Life's Vicissitudes, by Mrs. C. M. Dimsdale (1s. Nisbet & Co) is a very pleasantly-written book, illustrating the reward of faith.

Woman's Public Testimony for Christ (6d. per doz. Shaw & Co.) is a little tract in which the ministry of the Word by women is abundantly vindicated.

How I was turned Inside Out (2d. Marshall Bros.), relates how a once brutal man was led by the remark of a Christian, that he was "under the curse of an unredeemed heart," to seek the Saviour and to rejoice in deliverance from the curse of sin.

Miss Skinner (5, St. James's-square, Bath) has published in the French language two of her "Friendly Letters." They are addressed to factory girls, and to hotel and lodging-house keepers. Travellers on the Continent will find them very useful for distribution.

Fifty Years a Queen (1s. Bemrose & Sons) contains nine portraits of Her Majesty, and one of each of the Royal family, besides other fine engravings. It takes up most of the important events of her life and reign, and gives an account of all the events of special interest in the inner history of the Royal family.

Mr. Kensit (18, Paternoster-row) sends us three pamphlets: "Who is your Priest?" (1d.), "Why I left the Church of Rome," by Father Chiniquy (2d.), "Reforms in the Church of England" (1d.). The latter is deservedly strong on the subject of the Ritualistic practices now so prevalent. There is also a card printed in chromo, entitled "Protestantism and Prosperity." 1d. each, or 6s. per 100.

LEPERS IN INDIA.—Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, secretary of the Mission to Lepers in India (17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh), writes:—Kindly make known to the many friends of our poor lepers that I have now returned from my tour in India, where I have been greatly encouraged by what I have seen and heard, and shall be very happy to address meetings, and give information regarding the progress of the work. All friends wishing a copy of our last report, or other information of this work, should address me as above.

STAR VILLA ORPHAN HOME.—Friendless orphans or other destitute children of tender age, in danger of being cast upon the world and exposed to temptation and vice, are here provided with a shelter, where they may be plainly educated and trained in the fear and knowledge of God. There are now twenty children in the Home, which is quite full, though others are waiting to be admitted. The children are trained in various branches of domestic work, and generally leave the Home at the age of fifteen. There has been a season of trial lately through a visitation of measles, &c. An effort is to be made to build a larger Home, the need of which is much felt. Mrs. Henri W. Willis, Napier-road, New Brompton, Kent, is the hon. superintendent.

Y.M.C.A. CARDIFF.—The report presented at the annual meeting shows an addition of 100 names to the roll-book during the year, the total number being—members 150, associates 255. The average attendance at the Sunday afternoon Bible-class has been between 45 and 50. About 500 persons attend the Sunday evening service, and these are for the most part gathered from the streets by the Association workers. Several free breakfasts have been given to poor children, and a home for poor boys' shortly to be established in Cardiff is the outcome of this work. An evangelistic and village mission, begun in the autumn of last year, has also led to the formation of an evangelistic training class, which has proved very helpful to the members.

☞ To prevent delay in the execution of orders, it is specially requested by the Publishers that all business letters may be directed to the firm (Morgan & Scott). Also that personal letters for either partner may be so marked.

☞ If this paper is not kept for reference, readers are requested to give it away, or send it to any minister, Sunday-school teacher, or other Christian, or to a workhouse, hospital, infirmary, or ship. Do not let it be made waste paper.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give a portrait and sketch of the late Hon. Ion Keith-Falconer.

☞ With our next issue, the date of publication will be changed from Thursday to Friday. One reason is that at present the Bank Holiday necessitates our going to press six times a year much earlier than at other times. By the alteration this inconvenience will be obviated. There are other advantages which we need not specify. We believe the change will be a convenience to many of our readers, and, we trust, an inconvenience to none of them.

Now that there is a Government inquiry with respect to Sunday labour in the Post Office, it would be interesting to learn also what proportion of the Telegraph work on Sunday has relation to racing and betting.

The sermon by the eloquent Bishop Carpenter, at Westminster, last Sunday before the House of Commons, was not unworthy of the occasion. He had to deal with the lessons of the Queen's Jubilee, and some of his words deserved to be remembered by legislators and the depositaries of power everywhere:—

> The true glory of a nation is in the diffusion of that spirit of high reverence for gift and power which makes men scorn to use them basely or unfairly.
> Christianity has revealed the sanctity of power, the duty of service, and the brotherhood of man.
> Nothing tests men so much as the way in which they receive power when put into their hands.
> Garfield could say, "I had rather be beaten in right than succeed in wrong."
> It is possible that the mind may be so fixed upon the mechanism of legislation, that the ideals for which all these things exist are forgotten; it is possible to mistake the passing of a measure for the welfare of a people, and to imagine that the triumph of a party is the progress of the land.
> No legislation can take the place of earnest self-culture and self-discipline on the part of the people.

Of course these wise words may be variously interpreted, according to the prepossessions and convictions of individuals and parties; but no legislature that honestly cherishes the spirit they embody, ought to go very far astray.

Russia has, according to The Times, "a living armed line 1150 miles long." Germany has just committed herself to an extraordinary expenditure, within the next few years, of over £17,000,000 for military purposes. Truly, "war's a game, which, were their subjects wise, kings would not play at." But from this point of view at least, Carlyle's dictum that England contains thirty-seven millions of people, mostly fools, must be extended to the nations of the Continent with interest.

Mr. Hiram Maxim, an American inventor of an automatic machine gun, has had an audience of the Czar, who asked him why he had left his own country and come to England. Mr. Maxim replied, "that as his business was to make weapons of destruction, it was necessary for him to take up his abode in a Continent where the business of destruction was the chief occupation of mankind. In the New World they have something else to do than to kill each other. Therefore he came to the Old World, where instruments of slaughter were in request."

We quote the following significant statements from The Pall Mall Gazette. They will not appear so strange and singular to those who are familiar with prophecy as they may to others:—

> WHAT THE CZAR WANTS.
> A French traveller in the East has discovered, according to The Wiener Tagblatt, the ultimate aim of the Czar's policy. He would be glad enough to obtain Constantinople, but the real object of his ambition is to become "the Pope of Jerusalem." The war of 1854, the French observer remarks, had its germ in the quarrels over the Holy Places in Palestine, and was a continuation of the conflict between East and West which the Crusades left still unsettled. "Every step of the Russians toward Constantinople," says he, "is a step toward Jerusalem. It is of great significance that the Emperor Alexander III. confides much more upon the power of religious enthusiasm than either of his predecessors did." He wishes to procure a more official and ostentatious consecration of his religious authority, and to have his position emphasised as the supreme protector of the Eastern Churches and the Orthodox Faith, and so rally all the Greek-Oriental Churches and peoples around the person and office of the Czar as the Constantine and Justinian of the modern world. This bold project has been long in preparation, is never lost sight of in any diplomatic movement, and no sacrifice of money is thought too great to secure this end. "Numbers of settlements of Eastern monks, of apparently harmless and unpretending character, have been and are being founded, and Russia finds the money for the purchase of the land. Aid and counsel are always to be had from the Russian authorities. The European Powers restrict their attention too one-sidedly to the movements on the Bosphorus and ignore the extraordinary but quiet movements in the Holy Land." Two of the Vienna papers—The Politische Korrespondenz and The Wiener Tagblatt—appear to put some faith in the Frenchman's observations and predictions. The latter has no doubt that the Czar would hold a coronation on the site of the Holy Sepulchre of the world's Redeemer to be the highest possible consecration of his authority. "Many imagine that Alexander III. reckons much upon being crowned Emperor of Asia in Samarkand; but to have the crown of Asia set upon his head in the mother city of Christendom corresponds much more to his character and to the thoughts which he cherishes in the stillness of Gatschina."

It is not impossible that the present Czar may realise this "highest possible consecration of his authority." But Ezekiel xxxviii. R.V.) seems to point to another visit of the Prince of Rosh, or Russia, to the Holy City, for a darker purpose, and with a very different result.

> To finer minds, few things are more welcome and hopeful, in this Victorian era, than the growth of tolerance and the change which has come over the spirit of criticism. After ages of uncharitableness and hate exercised towards those who have differed from this or that party in the Church or in the State, we have at last arrived at the conviction that personal worth is the exclusive possession of no sect or party," &c.

Thus commences an article in Great Thoughts on Cardinal Manning. The statement is couched in general terms, but as prefacing a sketch of the Cardinal, it must be taken specially to refer to Popery and Protestantism, and can only be justified by the assumption, either that our Reformers were wrong in their protest, and fools in their suffering, or that the Popery of the Victorian era is an altogether different system from that of the era of Mary. None of our readers will accept the former; as an answer to the latter, see the letter on page 23, from a Member of the Catholic Church.

"The study of door-bells and the human nature that lives behind them is as fruitful for pulpit suggestion as the study of laws, and language, and literature." This is the ripe experience of Dr. Macfadyen, of Manchester, whose successful pastorship entitles him to speak with authority upon a much neglected department of the work of the ministry.

The Scottish Presbyterian Assemblies are now in session. The sermon with which Dr. Somerville closed his memorable Moderatorship of the Free Church was marked by an elevation of tone which, it may be hoped, will tinge the proceedings throughout:—

> Were the Free Church, from the Solway to the Pentland, from the Hebrides to the German Sea, to be swept over by the spirit of thankfulness, and were such an outburst of gratitude to issue from our people, such as has not been since the days of John Knox, might we not anticipate that an overflow of blessing, more wondrous and beneficent by far than that of the Nile, would cover our land with spiritual harvests and yield a revenue of glory to God?

Principal Rainy, the new Moderator, in his opening address, looked at the movements of opinion in our day from a Christian standpoint. Specially notable was the emphasis laid on the truth that, amid the changes of theories, Christianity is the unalterable fact. The report of the Committee on the State of Religion and Morals, and the speeches on it were interesting, as showing how God's Spirit is at work in various districts. One minister happily said this Jubilee year should be a year of spiritual jubilee in the North of Scotland. We hope to give some notes of the meetings next week.

A foreign correspondent requests us to state that the postage to all places within the Postal Union is 2½d. per ½ oz. for letters, and ½d. per 2 oz. for books, &c. He finds it a continual tax to have to pay double postage on insufficiently paid letters, often containing only printed matter, which could be sent for a halfpenny.

We have received requests to insert a list of missionaries who do not receive THE CHRISTIAN. This we have not space to do, but, as we have often announced, we shall be happy to forward names and addresses of such, to any friends who will write expressing their willingness to send one or more copies regularly. They should state if they have any preference as to the Society, or the country they would like to send to.

A paper on "Class Mortality," read at a recent meeting of the Royal Statistical Society by Mr. Humphrey, contains some interesting figures with regard to the duration of life in various sections of society, and there is much food for thought in some of its statistics. What, for instance, shall we do in face of the fact that while the annual death-rate among children, in the poorer ranks of life, under five years of age, is 66 per 1000, the "upper-class" children's rate is only 28, and that this difference is kept up during all the age periods. Of course much of this excessive mortality is due to unhealthy surroundings; it is, therefore, not difficult to sympathise with Mr. Humphrey in his appeal to those who have influence and power, to control, in any degree, the present wide range between the death-rates of the rich and the poor. This waste of life is a national sin, seeing that most of it is traceable to causes which are not creditable to our Christianity.

Since the Act of Disestablishment, and up to the end of 1885, the Episcopal Church of Ireland has contributed £204,568 to foreign missions. In the last year the returns for which have been completed, the subscriptions and donations amounted to £16,015, and it is believed that the sum for 1886 will be even larger. Taking into account the depression which is seriously affecting most occupations and pursuits in Ireland, these figures are eminently pleasing.

A priest in Limerick lately commenced an agitation against "English light literature," and the other evening there was a public demonstration in connection with the movement. Thousands of people walked in procession after an effigy of Satan, and a banner with the inscription, "Burn immoral literature." The local papers state that a large number of "penny dreadfuls" and other publications were committed to the flames, and that strong feeling was evinced towards the only two newsvendors in the city who have not declined to cease selling the objectionable papers. It is to be hoped that the movement will spread; but it should be remembered that the "penny dreadful" is not the worst form of noxious literature. In many instances the expensive three volume novel is quite as impure, and quite as dangerous.

A thoughtful paper entitled "The Parisian Sabbath," which appears in the current number of The Herald of Mercy, should be circulated broadcast among the working classes. We have always urged that those who are agitating in favour of the secularisation of the Sabbath are enemies and not friends of the working man; we would commend to their attention the remarkable statement that "there is no old stonemason, no old shoemaker, no old carpenter, no old painter, no old artisan, in Paris;" and that "a Sunday to play in, proves to be a Sunday to work in." For the working man, the abrogation of the Lord's Day rest would simply mean seven days' work for six days' wages.

A Society paper states that on a recent Sunday afternoon "an army of fashionable people went to the American Exhibition to witness a private performance of the Wild West Show. At night dances were given in several houses, and entertainments of various kinds at a number of clubs." Surely these "fashionable people" might find time during their week of idleness to visit shows, and so allow, at any rate, the poor Indians to keep the fourth commandment.

We recently defended the women who in the Lancashire and other coalfields work at the pit mouth against certain charges which had been brought against them. Legislation is now proposed which will have the effect of shutting this avenue of employment for women, and we are far from satisfied that it is called for. The occupation may not be a very womanly one, but no right-minded person, who is familiar with the state of the female labour market, can view with anything but anxiety the passing of an Act which must necessarily restrict the field of honest and virtuous industry. There are much worse things than hard, physical labour, and, if nothing better can be offered to these toiling sisters at the pit mouth, it is, at any rate, well to keep them from worse. The deputation of these women workers which visited London last week appear to have convinced the Home Secretary, at least, that no change should be made.

There is another side to the question. The employment of women tends to throw men out, and to reduce their wages. But the pit-brow women do not seem the most fitting workers to begin with in any change in this respect.

There is a thought in Canon Liddon's sermon on "Pauperism and the Love of God," which, in our days, deserves very careful consideration from those who are fond of laying stress on our Lord's words, "The poor ye have with you always:"—

> In virtue of causes which operate everywhere, and at all times, property always tends to concentrate itself in the hands of the relatively few; and thus the larger number can only support themselves by daily work, and often with some difficulty. But our modern pauperism means a much more serious thing than the existence of an unpropertied class at the base of society. It means an absence, not of the comforts, but of the necessaries of life; it means a despairing acquiescence in want as something inevitable by large numbers of men, it means the creation of a class which feels itself disinherited, so incapable of the duties as to be deprived of the rights of human society, and thus it means, in the long run, not merely class misery—misery vast and untold—but general disorder.

The fact that this pauperism is year by year "keeping pace at one end of society with the growth of luxury at the other," separates it entirely from the poverty which to some extent is an inevitable element in national life. It is well we should remember that, although there were poor in our Lord's time, there were no paupers; probably because those economic causes which to-day are so potent in creating destitution did not exist. We certainly cannot shelve our responsibility in these matters by quoting and misapplying a passage from the New Testament. For Christians the Incarnation has, as Canon Liddon says, "linked the love of God and the love of human kind together, and a division between the love of God and the love of man is just as impossible in Christian morals as a sundering of the Divine and human nature, eternally united in the person of Jesus Christ, is impossible to Christian faith."

Before domestic servants, under the attractions held out, emigrate to Texas, it would be well for them to read a terrible warning against such a step which appeared in The Christian World of the 12th inst.

Both at the meetings of the Baptist and the London Missionary Societies attention was properly drawn to the grave hindrances to missionary labours which are created by Christian nations. Drink introduced by merchants from Christendom; demoralising traffics which find protection and encouragement on the part of England, and which pull down the heathen and new converts to their old degradation as with both hands It is time that an unsectarian and adequate action against these abominations were taken up and came to the front.

The tone of the anniversary meetings of all the great religious societies has this year been eminently practical. Difficulties have not been evaded, nor discouragements concealed. The strain of jocularity which, in some speakers, offended devout persons a few years ago, has been happily absent. The report as to funds has been in one or two cases—notably of the Church Missionary Society—very gratifying. We somewhat miss, however, in most of the speeches that enforcement of Scripture statement and obligation which can alone sustain missionary enthusiasm.

It is at once pleasant and painful to read that Hindoos will travel fifty, and even eighty miles to ask for a teacher, and that in South India whole villages are moving towards Christianity, and pleading in vain for missionaries. The mission in the northernmost part is in the hands of the London Society. One of its friends offered £250 per annum, for ten years, towards a new station, with a European missionary and a colleague. The state of the funds compelled the directors to decline the offer. It were to be wished that a second John Angell James could have arisen and founded on the facts fervid appeals that would have aroused the conscience of the represented churches. To have been working for such results, and to be unequal to them when they come, is a serious matter to the Church of Christ.

Professor Sayce's Hibbert Lectures on Babylonian religion, just concluded, suggest an invaluable lesson, and a very weighty argument. The fragments of Babylonian hymns, quoted by the Professor, abound in puerilities and inflated exaggerations of absurd mythologies. Magic, blind chance, avenging deities, are invoked, and religious duties enjoined which violate social decencies. Contrast all this with the hymns of the Hebrews which were composed at the same time. The difference is enormous, and forbids all comparison. The Hebrew Psalms are a fountain of instruction, consolation, hope, and elevation for man. Nothing but Divine inspiration can account for such a vast difference in a contemporaneous people.

With great sorrow we receive the following from Mrs. Grattan Guinness, and confidently commend her request to the affectionate and prayerful sympathy of our readers:—

> We have had very serious tidings from our dear son, and want to ask the earnest intercessions of all his friends on his behalf. His dear young wife lies dangerously ill and delirous in fever. They are on board a French steamer in the Levant, the telegram which has just reached us being despatched from Mersina, the port of Tarsus.
> Join us in the earnest prayer that this sickness may not be unto death; that this precious young life, which is so full of rich promise of distinguished usefulness in the service of God, may be spared, and that our son may not be called to endure the crushing agony of losing his sweet bride on their wedding journey. The will of the Lord be done, whatever it be, for that will is always best. But we may pray, we should pray, and our tender heavenly Father will surely hear and answer our united supplications. Oh, ask your readers, all who know our son, his wife, or us, to help together in prayer at this time of sore anxiety and trial.—Faithfully yours,

REV. W. HAY AITKEN, assisted by Rev. J. Stephens and Mrs. Crouch, will conduct a mission at Thorner, near Leeds, May 22 to June 3.

Among the Churches.

⁂ We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Episcopalians of Australia are proposing to establish a mission in New Guinea.

The Newport and Isle of Wight Conference recently held was well attended, and was a time of much spiritual blessing.

The Bishop of Qu'Appelle (the Hon. A. J. R. Anson) is now in this country striving to extend Church work among the scattered population of his diocese, where a field is being opened for emigrant families and young men.

Great success has attended the meetings of the Church Army at New Southgate. "Numbers of stalwart men, navvies, gipsies, coachmen, and others have sought pardon, and are now—many of them—helping in the work."——The Church Army has been at work for three years at St. Thomas's, Preston, with great blessing to many.

Canon Gregory, at a recent meeting of the English Church Union, exposed a horrible scandal. A friend of his had occupied a prebendal stall which brought him in £5000 a year for sixty years. In return for this he had to preach two sermons a year—a task which was done for him by a minor canon for a guinea a sermon!

At the meeting of the C.M.S. Lay Workers' Union last week, a discussion was opened by Rev. E. A. Stuart on "Methods of Foreign Missionary Work, and the qualifications requisite for young men engaging in it." Mr. Stuart advocated the employment of unordained men, who might do much of the work that presses on the missionaries, and also be helpful in itineration among villages.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. Stalker, late of Kirkcaldy, was introduced to his new charge at St. Matthew's, Glasgow, on Sunday last, by Dr. J. H. Wilson, of Edinburgh, under whose ministry he sat in his student days.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, of Somers Town, has concluded a week of successful mission services at the King's Cross Theatre. There was a very large number of inquirers, and thirty-five have already applied to join the membership of the church.

Miss Rainy, who recently visited the mission stations in India at the invitation of the Free Church of Scotland, says there is much more fruitful missionary work done in India than people at home realise. One thing which struck her on visiting the Zenanas was the number of little boys who got Bible lessons.

SALVATION ARMY.

A good work is being done amongst the children at Bethnal Green.

During the seven weeks the Army has been working amongst the slums at Brighton, ninety-five persons have professed to find salvation.

At Bristol, during the last five months, several persons have professed salvation through the officers visiting them in their own houses. Many fighters, pigeon-flyers, &c., are telling in their own language what God has done for them, and scarcely a week passes but some of their old chums turn to the Lord.

At Swadlincote, though the corps has only been established three months, between four and five hundred miners have confessed Christ. Those formerly the most desperate in wickedness are now as earnest for God. The churches and chapels for miles around have received blessings through the Army.

METHODIST.

The Wesleyans at Belfast reported at the recent district meeting an increase of 255 members.

A jubilee meeting of Dr. Bowman Stephenson's Children's Home was yesterday held in the Albert Hall.

Principal Edwards is engaged upon a series of expository lectures on the Epistle to the Hebrews.

A very successful mission, at New Lambton, Houghton-le-Spring, has been conducted by Mr. B. Cawood, district evangelist.

Mr. O. L. Heatley has concluded a mission in the South Molton Circuit, and nearly one hundred souls have professed conversion.

A public reception was given to Rev. Mark Guy Pearse when he reached Toronto on the 20th ult. On the following day Mr. Pearse preached to large congregations in the Metropolitan Church.

At Linkdean (Cheltenham) lately the minister held a meeting in the open air instead of the usual afternoon service, and then went to every house in the village inviting the people to the evening service. The result was very encouraging.

A great United Nonconformist Mission will be held in Norwich next October, at the close of the Triennial Musical Festival. It will be conducted by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, whose labours in that city in 1884 were so acceptable, and resulted in large accessions to several of the churches.

At the annual meeting of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Lay Home Mission, Rev. C. Garrett said the Church would have to face the question of England's condition more resolutely than she had yet done. The drink traffic must be suppressed, and society should deal with the selfish capitalists who own property not fit for human tenants.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A Friends' Colony is being formed at "Los Angelos," southern California; fifty families will soon be there.

There is a good Sea-side Mission in Jamaica, where Blue Ribbon work prospers. Several Friend missionaries are in the island, and the Gospel is being received by many.

The Midland Adult Sunday-school Association recently held a Conference in Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, and was able to report over 100 schools and 22,000 members connected with it.

The Friends have inaugurated Christian work in Sura, Mexico, which is the centre of twelve meeting-places. The Roman Catholic bishop is thoroughly opposed to it, and La Verdad is greatly enraged at the recent establishment of a Friends' Church and school at Antiguo Morelos. The Presbyterians and Friends are in perfect accord, and show a united front to the amazed and superstitious population.

BAPTIST.

Thirty-four members have been added to the Church at Wynn-street, Birmingham (Rev. Mr. Wood, pastor), during the past year.

Rev. F. C. Spurr, pastor of Long-street Chapel, Cardiff, has commenced a mission to the discharged prisoners in that town.

Special services, in connection with the Baptist Tabernacle, Hull, have been held. The congregations were good, and several inquirers came forward.

Rev. D. Gracey, Principal of the Pastors' College, has returned from his voyage to the Cape, so much benefited in health that he is expected to resume his duties as tutor immediately, to the great satisfaction of the students.

There are few churches in Liverpool more abundant in good works of every description than the Toxteth Tabernacle, a Baptist church under the pastoral care of Mr. W. P. Lockhart. In addition to large Sunday-schools, several mission stations and reading-rooms for the working classes, open every evening of the week, there is in the church itself a membership of over 700; yet Mr. Lockhart is engaged all the day in business, and has only his evenings at liberty for the many duties of his large pastorate.—British Weekly.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Maynard Wodehouse Currie, rector of Hingham, Norfolk.—Rev. W. K. Hamilton, formerly minister of Stonehouse Free Church.—Rev. John Mearns, at Aberdeen, Wesleyan minister.—Rev. James Hutcheson, of the East parish, Greenock, for many years clerk of his Presbytery.—Rev. George Divorty, secretary of the Scottish Reformation Society, for many years pastor of a flourishing church at Yarrow, Victoria.—Mr. William Watson, late sheriff-substitute of Aberdeenshire, founder of the first industrial school in Scotland.—Rev. A. Bromwich, Methodist minister, after only two months' labour on the Gold Coast.—Mrs. Rayson, of Swineshead, near Boston, for fifty years a constant member of the Wesleyan body.—Mr. John Smith, of Padiham, the oldest member and official in the Circuit.—Mr. W. Billing Odgers, for many years a prominent member of the Congregational Church at Portscatho, Cornwall.—Mr. Joseph Stancliff, deacon, and one of the secretaries of Wycliff Chapel, Stepney.—Mrs. Morris, widow of the late Rev. V. Morris, of the Baptist Church, Whitchurch, aged 94.—Mr. John Peck, locally known as "Bishop" Peck, who for over fifty years was a local preacher in the Ipswich and contiguous circuits.—Mr. James Murray, a prominent member of the Evangelical Union church of Carlake.—Mr. John Somervell, of Kendal, who for years paid the expenses of the chair of practical theology, when it was occupied by Dr. John Kirk.—Mr. Benjamin Greenacre, for fifty years a local preacher at Caister, Great Yarmouth.—Laurea Victoria, wife of Mr. Frederick T. Snell, evangelist.

HONAN, CHINA.—This province has a population of fifteen millions, and thus far but one missionary has entered that field. The natives are said to be superior alike in physique and intellectual capacity. To this field the eyes of the Presbyterian Church in Canada have been directed, and it was decided to send Mr. Gosforth (who graduates this year from Knox College) as the pioneer missionary. Mr. Goforth is to be supported entirely by ministers in Canada who have graduated from Knox College.

BONNY, WEST AFRICA.—For three years past quarrels among the chiefs of Bonny have much interfered with missionary work. These have now been put an end to by the interposition of the Consul in virtue of the British Protectorate. A leading chief, the same who visited England, and was supposed by the newspapers to be "King of Bonny," has been degraded and heavily fined. King George, who is a professing Christian, is now restored to his throne, and complete religious liberty has been proclaimed.

BARBERTON, TRANSVAAL.—Rev. W. J. Underwood, writes from Barberton, Gold Fields, to The Wesleyan Missionary Magazine:—A great change for the better has come over Barberton in the last few weeks. If there is as much wickedness, it is not so bold as it was; and now from two or three quarters of the town there may be heard the voice of praise and prayer, and of them that keep holy day. The town has sprung up almost like a mushroom, and though only nine months old, it has a population of more than two thousand, while about three thousand building stands, or sites are leased from the Government, and the town is still growing with startling rapidity.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

A plebiscite on the liquor-traffic is to be taken in Aberdeen on June 9.

The communion wine question is receiving considerable attention in Scotland.

Parliament has decided to insert in the Truck Act a clause prohibiting the payment of the wages of farm labourers in drink.

A meeting to consider "the drink-traffic and the demoralisation of native races" was held in the Mayor's Parlour, Town Hall, Manchester, May 18.

Dr. Cameron's Bill for earlier closing of public-houses (Scotland) has been read a second time. The Government approved subject to amendment in committee.

The annual meeting of the Central Hall Gospel Temperance Mission, Newcastle-on-Tyne, was held recently. Six hundred meetings had been held during the year, and 2000 pledges taken.

Canon Stephenson, of Weymouth, says he firmly believes that he has more drunken women in his parish than men, and strongly condemns the grocers' licences which give facilities for sly drinking.

Rev. Quince Noble, of Jamaica, Presbyterian minister, lately said that he had not found so many drunken people in that island during the eight years he had been there as in one Saturday in Scotland.

The Lancet approves the restriction to be placed on the sale of medicated wines. Many, it states, are simply ordinary foreign wine, with a little medicine added, and they have been used for the sake of the stimulant.

During the past year Miss Weston's "Rests" provided 1000 beds gratis to drunken and friendless seamen; 2000 seamen, marines, and boys were entertained to free Gospel and temperance teas; 70,000 sailors were boarded and lodged.

The weekly meeting of Carrubber's Close Mission, on the 14th inst., was devoted to the rendering of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's song service, entitled "John Tregenoweth: his mark." The musical selections were admirably given by the choir, and the readings by Mr. Brown. Many new members were enrolled at the close.

FOREIGN.

The new liquor law of Maine makes the penalty for selling a glass of sweet cider for drinking purposes, imprisonment as well as fine.

Owing, it is said, to their temperance work, the Society of Friends, Buffalo, Kansas, have had their meeting-place blown up by dynamite.

In Ceylon, in six weeks, 16,000 signatures were obtained to the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union against the drink-traffic. The natives eagerly signed.

Miss M. W. Leitch states that in Jaffna, Ceylon, the chief liquor shop is kept by a prominent member of a Christian church. Mahommedans use him as an argument against turning Christian.

Rev. J. H. Bateson, Wesleyan Army Chaplain at Mandalay, Burmah, writes, that he "must try to start something in opposition to the canteen." Had he the means, he would gladly establish a Soldiers' Home.

At a great temperance meeting in Halifax, Nova Scotia, resolutions were passed urging Christian women to organise against the drink-traffic, and claiming for women, who are ratepayers, the suffrage, with the same object.

Mr. Spensley, formerly M.P. for Central Finsbury, was present, lately, at the opening of a railway in New Zealand. The entertainment was strictly teetotal, and Mr. Spensley was "rejoiced that the health of the Queen had been drunk in tea."

No fewer than twenty-one States in the American Union have been discussing the drink evil during the present season, and in nearly everyone something has been done to check the growth of the saloon. "Never before," says The New York Observer, "has the feeling against the liquor-traffic been so deep, so widespread, so earnest, and so determined as now."

BERLIN increases at a rate of 50,000 a year, but churches are not being built. Moabit, the N.W. suburb of Berlin, has now over 50,000 souls, with only one small church, built over fifty years ago, to accommodate 500.

DAMASCUS.—The convener of the Presbyterian Mission to the Jews has recently made a very interesting report with regard to the work in Damascus, from which it appears that never before was the labour of the missionaries in that place so successful. The Sabbath-school is attended by 350 children, and the day-schools by 730; 405 natives attend the Sunday services, 131 of them being communicants. Another missionary being required, the eldest son of Dr. Crawford, himself a missionary, has offered himself and been accepted, and as he is perfectly familiar with Arabic, he can take up work at Damascus at once.

ARABIA.—General Haig gives, in the C.M.S. Intelligencer, a very interesting report of his tour in Arabia and the Soudan. He tells of increased freedom in some respects, though at Jeddah his copies of the Scriptures were seized by the Customs and sent on to head-quarters at Mecca. "The Hedjaz," he says, "appears to be still closed against any direct attempt to introduce the Gospel." He states that the Peninsula of Sinai would probably form an interesting field of labour for any small society, or any individual wishing to devote himself to the evangelisation of the Arab races. As to the state of the Soudan, General Haig's report is not very couleur de rose, but he suggests that missions should be begun at Assouan and Suakim; by and by Berber and Khartoum might be reached.

Demonstration at Exeter Hall.

LICENSING OF SIN IN INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

"I BLUSH to think that I am an Englishman." These were the humiliating words in which a London clergyman expressed himself, in responding favourably to an invitation to the great meeting at Exeter Hall last Friday evening. And they were the sombre keynote of the many words spoken at the meeting itself. In point of numbers, at any rate, the gathering was an immense success, and must have well rewarded the efforts of the conveners. By eight o'clock the great auditorium was crowded; while on the platform was a representative array of men and women who are in the front of the world's stern battle, such as one seldom sees even in that famous place of concourse. The speakers having filed into their seats, Mr. ALFRED S. DYER rose, and announced that the advertised Chairman, Mr. F. W. Crossley, of Manchester, had been unexpectedly called off to America. He therefore moved that the chair be taken by Mr. GEORGE GILLETT. It was through the personal efforts of this gentleman (coupled, we may add, with those of Mr. Dyer himself) that the Continental traffic in young Englishwomen was unearthed some eight years ago. Mr. Gillett had lately been assisting at a presentation to the Queen; he would now assist in removing that which constituted one of the foulest blots on Her Majesty's reign. Mr. Gillett having taken the chair, prayer was offered by Rev. B. Waugh. The Chairman said he rejoiced to see before him such a representation of the feeling aroused by the facts that Professor Stuart had extracted from the archives of Parliament. These papers show that in over seventy places in India alone the Government has established the regulation of vice. Moreover, it is a great effrontery that the system has been set up in Burmah since the repeal of the C.D. Acts at home. It is important to remember that the Acts are established and enforced in those remote regions against the will and wish of the natives themselves. India and the other colonies are not directly represented in the House of Commons, therefore this nation is peculiarly responsible for the continuance of the evils. It is nothing more than common justice that our fellow-subjects abroad should be treated as the House of Commons has treated the English people in regard to this question. Lord Derby said on one occasion that the regulations could not well be repealed abroad while they were enforced at home. They have been abolished here; let such a voice go forth as shall compel the Government to sweep them away in India and elsewhere.

The first resolution submitted to the meeting was as follows:—

> That this meeting, representing all sections of the Christian Church, regards with indignation and shame the fact, revealed by recent Parliamentary returns, that the British Government, instead of directing its administrative efforts to the discouragement and repression of vice in our Crown Colonies, and Possessions, has introduced the system of licensed or regulated impurity into almost every part of the world under British rule, including (besides our great Indian Empire), Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbadoes, Fiji, the Straits Settlements, Labuan, Gibraltar, Malta, and Hong-Kong. That such action is an outrage upon the most cherished convictions of the Christian Churches of this land. That this meeting, therefore, calls upon the Government to immediately issue orders for the total abolition of the said system in all our Crown Colonies and Dependencies.

In moving it, Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES began by saying that we had been in too great a hurry to abolish our organisation of repeal, and now we have to undo that mistake. The Government to whom we must make appeal are in this matter largely in the hands of unknown permanent officials. In the present Government there are honourable and Christian men who must entirely sympathise with the object we have in view, and it is our business to strengthen their hands in dealing with those who desire a continuance of the national disgrace. Such enactments as the regulation of iniquity in order to make it safe, are the very masterpiece of hell; nothing more abominable has ever been done in the history of any country. Horrible as the system was among ourselves, it was modified by the presence and protests of such terrible people as Mrs. Josephine Butler, of whom the permanent officials were mortally afraid. Only a few days ago, on this very platform, Sir Charles Warren declared, from his own experience, that Englishmen abroad belong to two distinct classes. There are some of high honour and Christian character, but others are utterly unchristian and immoral, and it is such people who desire the enactment of this evil legislation. In Hong-Kong, to which the resolution refers, we have it on the authority of Sir John Pope Hennessey, late Governor of that Colony, that the Chinese women placed on the Government register detested the life they were compelled to lead. Yet the then head of the Colonial office, Lord Kimberley, insisted that the regulations should continue. I hope the day is not far distant, exclaimed Mr. Hughes, when such men will be driven out of any British Government. Turning to the case of India, he referred to the barefaced character of Government action in referring to this evil traffic as a recognised "business," and the regulations were expressly made "by the authority of the Empress of India!" This statement was met with hissing and cries of "Shame," which were repeated when the speaker went on to denounce, in the name of God and man, the hateful mockery of placing the building where the Government periodical inspection in Madras is carried on, in the very heart of all the mission buildings in that city. A large map was hung in the hall representing this. Another huge map showed, by a series of red crosses, the seventy-two places in India where the regulation system prevails. Mr. Hughes drew special attention to the circumstance that these crosses were most numerous in the hill country, where Englishmen go to recruit their health! He felt deeply ashamed at the fact that native Indian gentlemen were on the platform who had come to protest, in the name of their countrymen, against the doings of the English people. Has it come to this that Parsee gentlemen in Exeter Hall rebuke the actions of a Christian country?

Mr. Hughes alluded to a statement made that missionaries in Fiji had expressed themselves in favour of the regulation of vice in that island. As a Wesleyan, he was deeply interested in Fiji, which is one of the jewels in their missionary crown. He completely demolished the libellous assertion by quoting from letters he had received from two Fiji missionaries, Rev. J. Nettleton, and the veteran Rev. James Calvert, expressing the utmost detestation of the C.D. Acts. Mr. Calvert said (and no man can know better):—"I do not believe that any of the missionaries in Fiji have any sympathy with these shameful violations of right." We must repeal those enactments, continued Mr. Hughes, in self-defence. They were once repealed at the Cape, under the rule of Sir Bartle Frere, but were afterwards reimposed. There are not wanting those who would reintroduce them again in our own country, and, therefore, we must destroy the system, root and branch, beyond all possibility of revival. We must have no truce; no compromise. We must say, as Bunyan has represented Jesus Christ saying to the devil when he asked permission sometimes to have possession of some small portion of Mansoul, "Never, and not an inch!" Mr. Hughes, in the close of his rousing speech, referred to an article in The Pall Mall Gazette of the previous day, which maintained that empire is not consistent with morality; in other words, that England must not expect those whom she sends to India to serve her there, to lead moral lives. The writer admitted that the new democracy, of which he said Mr. Price Hughes was the incarnation, are to be the future rulers of the country. Mr. Hughes said he claimed no such distinction as that which the writer had accorded him, but he did humbly claim to be enthusiastic about this—that every converted Englishman should be determined that the home and foreign policy of his country shall be brought into harmony with the teaching of Jesus Christ.

The resolution was seconded in a strong address by Mrs. BOOTH. She said she had lately learned a good deal of the conditions of life that surround women in India, and her heart went out in strong sympathy towards them, while her soul burned with indignation and grief. Referring also to The Pall Mall article, she passionately denied the doctrine assumed in it, that, because our soldiers in India are mostly enforced celibates, they must necessarily be immoral in their lives. Whether India had really benefited or not by English rule she did not care to argue, but at any rate we profess to govern it for its advantage. How does this profession agree with the fact that we sacrifice thousands of its women to a horrible life, and do not allow them the opportunity of complaint? She denounced the hell-manufactured doctrine of the necessity of vice. It is nothing less than a farce that we should pretend to call ourselves a Christian nation. Better call ourselves a nation of gold worshippers and fornicators. The sooner that we drop the title of Christian, and make haste to redeem our character, the better for our credit. Let us demand that an inquiry, by persons who are above suspicion, and free from any alliance with the workers of iniquity, shall be made into this question, and the results published to the world. Talk about our boasted civilisation! As for Christianity, she would decline to drag that sacred name into this filthy alliance. She was ashamed of her country and her governments, for all the governments are alike. And the greatest shame of all is that these Acts have been passed and enforced during the reign of a woman! As far as the dignity of human nature is concerned she would rather be a Hindoo or a Zulu to-day than an Englishwoman. What can the natives of India and our colonies think of us? How can they help coming to the conclusion that our creed tolerates wholesale vice and crime? They cannot discriminate. What effect will all this have upon them? They are not fools. They are acquiring all kinds of knowledge, and they see how we are treating their people, and training up their children to such lives. It is said that whole villages are set apart for the rearing of Indian children to minister to the passions of British officers! Will they not remember these things, and will they not teach their children to remember them, and to join in cursing the Shimeis of this nation? Will there not one day be a terrible retribution for us, and for our country? We may shut our eyes and go on in this cruel and godless legislation, but the eyes of these millions are wide open. Oh, the hideous mockery of marching our soldiers to church on one side of the street, and on the other side marching the "Queen's women" (it makes one blush to use the term, and it ought to make all England blush) to the place of inspection, to receive the devilish certificates of harlotry! There must be a day of vengeance getting ready. It is no use for us to throw the matter on to other shoulders. While we maintain and patronise the British army in its present conditions we are responsible for the vice and crime attached to the system. Let us insist on the eyes of the nation being opened to the facts, and then see what England is prepared to do.

We want to save these people. Let us show to them what real Christianity is. Let us not tell them of a religion that has no power to subdue men's evil passions, or say that, because we who profess to be Christians do not attain to the Christian standard, therefore it is not a true one. In the face of these terrible lessons that they are learning, let us teach them that there is a Saviour who can deliver from all the temptations which beset men and women alike. Let us show them, by our own lives of self-sacrifice and daily suffering for their sakes, that the Christ whom we love and follow is a real Christ. Then they will see the difference between a mock Christianity and the real Christ embodied in human flesh.

The resolution having been passed, Mr. J. B. Wookey made an earnest appeal for help in carrying on this crusade. We want a young man, he said, who has sufficient love for God in his heart and who will be willing to go over to India without any prospect of earthly reward, and work with our comrade in the fight there, Mr. Gladwin of Bombay. Then we want several ladies, with sufficient means to pay their passage, to go and work amongst the poor Indian girls. We only ask those to volunteer who are prepared to go for the love of Christ and souls. In appealing further for money to supply the sinews of war, Mr. Wookey said, that the meeting had been arranged entirely by voluntary workers. The large maps hung in the hall were made by a friend who lives down in Whitechapel. Every penny that is sent to the Hon. Secretary of the Gospel Purity Association (31, Paternoster-square, E.C.) will be used in obtaining the repeal of these Acts in India and the Colonies. The collection was then taken, and a generous response was made by the meeting, amounting to nearly £100.

The terms of the second resolution are as follow:—

> That this meeting learns with astonishment and grief that the system of licensed impurity has been established by British authority in over seventy places in India (including the principal centres of population), where we rule over more than one-fifth of the human race. That this official "covenant with death" and "agreement with hell" tends to bring shame upon the Christian name among the 257 millions of India, and is a great and grievous obstacle to the success of the missionary effort which the Christian Churches of Great Britain so strenuously support in that largest field of missionary labour. That it is an act of injustice to maintain among the unrepresented populations of India and our Crown Colonies, and Dependencies, a system which, in a less obnoxious form, has been abolished by Parliament within the limits of the United Kingdom. That this meeting therefore respectfully demands of the Government such steps as shall at once put an end to the licensing of impurity in our Indian Empire.

Its mover was Rev. Dr. J. Clifford, who said: Grave and most important business is before us. Not only are imperial interests, but human and Divine interests are at stake. We recollect the great gatherings held here in connection with clearing our own statute books of the C. D. Acts, and now we must go forward on behalf of our fellow-subjects abroad. When God delivers his oppressed people from Egypt, it is that they may be the deliverers of all mankind. The triumph that God has given us was the prophecy of another not far off in a wider field. Let us remember we are dealing with indisputable facts. We may be called enthusiasts; we admit the charge, and are proud of it. But we have the witness of these facts by those who have seen the evil. Our apathy in the past has been largely the child of our ignorance. Now we know the naked fact, and it is the legalisation by the State of harlotry in our British possessions. In the same way that we weigh out so many pounds of meat for our army, we number out so many prostitutes. Is not this iniquity, and shall we not rise up against it? When we think of the entire meaning of these facts, we must be filled with astonishment and with grief. To show the ramifications of this demoralising system, Dr. Clifford told of a fire which happened in a suburb of Calcutta. Some poor women living there were burnt out of their homes, and a subscription was raised on their behalf. The distribution of the fund was given into the hands of the police, who were authorised to give certificates to those who were to receive help. It was discovered that, in some cases, they actually put into the hands of these women, not a certificate for relief, but a paper issued for the official certifying of prostitutes! This was found not to be the result of a blunder, but either for the purpose of extorting money from the people, or from the still worse and baser motive of placing them in circumstances that would enable them afterwards to be regarded as belonging to the regulated class! Here the speaker introduced with effect some extracts from Mr. R. C. Morgan's letter from Gibraltar, in these columns last year, describing the system of legalisation in force there. Dr. Clifford said he had wept in his study that day as he read story after story of this dreadful description. Turning to India, he said, he had been told by those who know well, that in a district of Calcutta occupied by natives they had positively rid themselves of the infamous system, and now it is only among the most degraded Europeans that it is found to operate.

What does this system mean? It means the importation of German girls. He saw a letter from a missionary's wife who had worked in Calcutta for forty-three years, and she said the most painful side of the whole business was this importation of German girls for evil purposes. Surely we have reason for astonishment, and for grief, and for indignation. But we must take care to convert those sentiments into action. The resolution calls it "an affront to Christianity"; who can doubt it? All along the history of mankind, the religion that promoted ethical inward personal purity most effectually, has been the one victorious religion. Whether Tory or Liberal or Radical, the new democracy must be represented by pure men. (Prolonged applause.) If not our democracy will be our damnation. Therefore, we must not appeal so much for men who are eloquent, or men of statesmanlike genius, as for men of spotless character, and men who have an enthusiasm for social purity, which, I fear, many of our present legislators have not. Let all aspirants for Parliament know that they must keep themselves clean; if not, they will never have the Church of Christ on their side. We must have the whole of our forces engaged in this enterprise. It is a temperance as well as a profoundly religious question, therefore we want all the teetotalers with us; and all the philanthropists. Then, as we go up against these Government walls of iniquity and blow our trumpets, the walls of this accursed Jericho will come down, and we shall go forward to victory.

The audience rose to its feet to greet Mrs. Josephine Butler with a hearty cheer as she took the stand and proceeded to support the resolution. They were not prepared to accept her opening remark that her speaking days were over; but she redressed the balance somewhat when she said there was still work for her to do. She had been working hard, she said, all the week, and she looked weak and worn, but the fire in her heart burns as brightly as ever. "I am going to tell you one incident," said she—"to bring one of my fellow-creatures before you, whose blood speaks from her grave where she lies murdered." Then she described how these foreign iniquities were only discovered in 1879, and that almost accidentally, by the action of Sir John Pope Hennessey, the friend of afflicted and outraged women in Hong-Kong. A Chinese woman in that city was fined 100 dollars for some breach of the regulations imposed on those unhappy sisters. She actually sold her boy for 40 dollars, to obtain part payment of the fine; the balance she borrowed from another registered woman with whom she had to reside, in order to pay back the loan from the wages of her shame. To that house came a Government inspector, on some errand relating to an alleged infraction of the accursed rules. This inspector paid subordinates with Government money to entrap Chinese women into sin, and then to hand them over to the tormentors (a remark which caused Mr. Price Hughes to ejaculate, "Diabolical!"). When the inspector went to the house, the two women, in order to escape from his clutches, clambered on to the roof of the house, ran along the roofs of other houses with the officials in pursuit, and ultimately fell down into an open space paved with stones. One woman was killed on the spot, and the other died three days afterwards. A coroner's inquest was held, and then for the first time these hideous facts became publicly known. That was no exceptional case, but one of many like it. In her eloquently impressive peroration, Mrs. Butler said: "An outraged and murdered woman stands for ever as the central figure of this world-wide system of iniquity called the State Regulation of Vice. She was hounded to death by a human bloodhound, paid out of the taxes of the people. The taxes paid and the fines extracted go to swell the British exchequer. It is a blood tax; it is the price of souls."

A brief speech followed from Rev. G. Newport, of Madras; he said he stood there as the representative of all the |Christian missionaries of India, who look upon these Acts with the deepest abhorrence. He only wished that some missionary's wife were on the platform to represent her sisters; every woman of them would condemn the Acts. Mr. Newport went on to say that prostitution existed largely in India apart from English influence. Allied to the temple services there were in 1881, according to the census, in the Madras Presidency alone, nearly 15,000 women devoted to this horrible life. But this only strengthens the case of those who condemn the Acts, because it is the more incumbent on us as representatives of a Christian nation to bear witness against the native vices and show a higher example. Mr. Newport spoke very weighty and serious words about the temptations that surround young Englishmen in India, and to which they too often fall a prey, to their utter ruin physically and spiritually.

A third resolution, pledging the assembly to unceasing effort, "till the black blot of licensed impurity no longer stains British rule in any part of the Queen's dominion," was briefly moved by Professor Stuart, M.P., who said he wished that the agitation should strengthen the hands of those in Parliament who are endeavouring to uproot this evil. Mr. R. C. Morgan remarked on the fact that so many Christian people have no enlightened or awakened conscience with respect to those Government enormities. The first thing for every Christian who believes that these Acts are of the devil, is to instil into other Christian minds the same belief. Rev. W. T. Moore, of The Christian Commonwealth, urged in a few sentences that the meeting should not be content with passing resolutions, but should translate them into action, especially by returning to Parliament men of probity and purity of life.

During the proceedings telegrams of sympathy were read from Gainsborough and Edinburgh; it was stated that some 300 ministers of the Gospel in London had written expressing cordial agreement with the object of the meeting, and that several foreign missionaries now in this country had done likewise. For a complete report of the proceedings we refer our readers to a special issue of The Christian, to be published in a few days; full particulars will be given in our next.

DR. PENTECOST, of Brooklyn, writes to us, on May 11:—I shall not be on your side this summer, as I expected. I am having most blessed times, and a hundred times more work offered than I can possibly do."

UNION HALL MISSION.—Mr. Robert Bilke writes:—I am preparing to erect several tents during the present summer, if means are forthcoming, in poor and needy localities, where little or no evangelistic work is being done. In past years we have had great success, many precious souls having been led to Christ each year. I have already had applications for three tents.

M. TENZ'S MODEL OF ANCIENT JERUSALEM.—This model, representing Herod's Temple and the Sacred City in the time of our Lord, is now on view at 81, Mildmay Park, close to the Conference Hall. It is constructed according to the descriptions given by Josephus, and is the result of many years' study and labour. As a work of art even, it possesses considerable interest, but this will be greatly enhanced to students of Bible history, and to those especially who love to think of our Lord's presence in his Temple, and of the greater glory "of this latter house."

COSTERMONGERS' COTTAGE MISSION.—More suitable premises having been found for this Mission (of which Lord Kinnaird is treasurer), they were inaugurated last week by a tea and public meeting, when addresses of congratulation and exhortation were delivered by Mr. Gawin Kirkham who presided, Rev. T. C. Webster, vicar of St. Mark's Old-street, in whose parish the Vinegar-ground is situate; Mrs. Crickmay, who conducts the mothers' meeting; and Mr. Walter Penrose, the superintendent. These new premises are still in the Vinegar-ground, just off the City-road, and in close proximity to the late Mission-house, where the work has been carried on for some years past.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MAY 29.—PSALM CXIII.

"From this Psalm to Psalm cxviii. is the Hallel which is recited at the three great feasts. In the family celebration of the Passover night, it is divided into two parts, the one half, Pss. cxiii., cxiv., being sung before the repast, and the other half, Pss. cxv.—cxviii., after the repast; to which the words, 'When they had sung a hymn' (Matt. xxvi. 30) may refer."—Delitzsch.

2.—Blessed be the name of the Lord.—"By mentioning the name the Psalmist would teach us to bless each of the attributes of the Most High, which are, as it were, the letters of his name; not quarrelling with his justice or his severity, nor servilely dreading his power, but accepting Him as we find Him revealed in the inspired Word, and by his own acts; and loving Him and praising Him as such. We must not give the Lord a new name, nor invent a new nature, for that would be the setting-up of a false god."—Spurgeon.

7.—He raiseth up the poor out of the dust.—Verses 7 and 8 are almost word for word from the prayer of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 8.

9.—He maketh the barren woman to keep house.—"The barren woman was Hannah, while Peninnah was the fruitful one. The barren woman appears also in Isa. liv. 1—3, as a type of the Church of God. It is all the more natural to contemplate the Church under this emblem as Sarah, Rebecca, Rachel, Manoah's wife, Hannah, whose long continued barrenness was removed by Divine interposition, are manifestly types of the Church."—Hengstenberg. Hannah's case may be a lesson to any part of the Church of Christ in particular, where spiritual barrenness is a cause of mourning. All may go well with the outward and visible Church (Peninnah), whose numbers may increase, and outward prosperity abound, while the spiritual Church, the work of grace (Hannah), may be barren; but though "her adversary may provoke her sore" on this account, let her "pour out her soul before the Lord" (1 Sam. i. 15), and many "Samuels" will be the result.

MONDAY, MAY 30.—PSALM CXIV.

"The deeds of God at the time of the Exodus are here brought together to form a picture in miniature, which is as majestic as it is charming. There are four stanzas of four lines each, which pass by with the swiftness of a bird as it were with four flaps of its wings."—Delitzsch.

2.—Judah was his sanctuary.—Delitzsch is rightly followed by R.V. in rendering this "became his sanctuary." The reference seems to be not so much to the subsequent dwelling of God in Jerusalem, as to Judah's leadership of the nation, in consequence of its being destined in Jacob's prophecy (Gen. xlix. 10) to be the ruling tribe. In virtue of this, the standard of Judah went first in the march through the wilderness (Num. x. 14), and so here practically represents the whole nation.

4.—The mountains skipped like rams.—The literal reference is to Sinai (Exod. xix. 18), but the spiritual lesson is "Nothing is unmovable but God Himself: the mountains shall depart and the hills be removed, but the covenant of his grace abideth fast for ever and ever. Even thus do mountains of sin and hills of trouble move when the Lord comes forth to lead his people to their eternal Canaan."—Spurgeon.

8.—Which turned the rock into standing water.—"The same almighty power that turned waters into a rock to be a wall to Israel (Exod. xiv. 22), turned the rock into waters to be a well to Israel."—Matthew Henry.

TUESDAY, MAY 31.—PSALM CXV.

Delitzsch calls this "a prayer of Israel for God's aid, probably in the presence of an expedition against heathen enemies." Ewald conjectures that whilst the Psalm was being sung, the sacrifice was proceeded with, and that in ver. 12 the voice of a priest proclaims the gracious acceptance of the sacrifice.

1.—Not unto us, but unto thy name give glory.—"This is not a doxology, but a prayer. Not for our safety or welfare so much as for thy glory, be pleased to deliver us. Self and God are the two things that come in competition. Above all forms of self God must have the pre-eminence."—T. Manton.

3.—Our God is in the heavens.—"Where He should be; above the reach of mortal sneers, over-hearing all the vain janglings of men, but looking down with silent scorn upon the makers of the Babel. This God is our God, and we are not ashamed to own Him, albeit He may not work miracles at the beck and call of every vainglorious boaster who may choose to challenge Him."—Spurgeon.

13.—He will bless them that fear the Lord, both small and great.—"This is a sweet cordial for those who are little in faith, and own themselves to be mere babes in the family of grace. There is the same blessing for the least saint as for the greatest; yea, if anything, the 'small' shall be first; for, as the necessity is the more pressing, the supply shall be the more speedy."—Ibid.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1.—PSALM CXVI.

1.—I love the Lord.—The Hebrew is literally "I love, because the Lord hath heard," &c. "Most translators so turn it as if this title, 'Lord,' were to be joined with the first clause. I deny not that the sense is made somewhat the more perspicuous, and the words run the more roundly; yet are they not altogether so emphatical. This concise and abrupt clause 'I love' declareth a more entire and ardent affection than a more full and round phrase would do."—W. Gouge (1650). The correct reading of 1 John iv. 19 is an exact parallel. "We love, because He first loved us" (1 John iv. 19, R.V.).

3.—The sorrows of death compassed me, &c.—"The very opening, and, still more, the progress of the early part of the Psalm, reminds one of Psalm xviii., and becomes an important hint for the exposition of the Psalm."—Delitzsch. As Psalm xviii. has for its subject Christ's resurrection, so has this.

7.—Return unto thy rest, O my soul.—The word "rest" in the Hebrew is plural, thereby signifying "full complete rest as it is found only in God."—Delitzsch.

9.—I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living.—If this be the language of the head, it is that also of the members as accepted in Him. "Present yourselves to God as alive from the dead," &c. (Rom. vi. 13, R.V.).

10.—I believed, therefore have I spoken: I was greatly afflicted.—"The whole second part of the Psalm is occupied with the thanks, as the first part is with the salvation. 'I believed' is absolute as in Is. vii. 9. 'I did believe, for I did speak,' which is a sure proof of the presence of faith. In 2 Cor. iv. 13, Paul, following LXX, reads 'therefore' instead of 'for,' without any material alteration of the sense."—Hengstenberg. The reference to this passage in 2 Cor. iv. 13, is not only to the words quoted, but to the whole context and spirit of the Psalm as identifying the believer with Christ in his death and resurrection.

11.—I said in my haste, all men are liars.—R.V. is better: "I said in my haste (alarm, marg.) all men are a lie," or as Bishop Horsley renders it "the whole race of man is a delusion."

15.—Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.—The Hebrew of the last words is peculiar. "Instead of the genitive we have the preposition Lamed, 'belonging to.'"—Delitzsch. It will then literally be "the death belonging to his saints," and in keeping with the whole tone of the Psalm might refer to "the precious blood of Christ" (1 Pet. i. 19), or his "sacrificial" death considered as "belonging to" them. It is interesting to remember that these words were sung by Him before his own death.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2.—PSALM CXVII.

"This is the shortest of all the Psalms, a 'Hallelujah' addressed to the heathen world. In its very brevity it is one of the grandest witnesses of the might with which, in the midst of the Old Testament, the world-wide mission of the religion of revelation struck against, or undermined, the national limitation. It is stamped by the apostle Paul, in Rom. xv. 11, as a locus classicus for the fore-ordained participation of the heathen in the promised salvation of Israel."—Delitzsch. Hengstenberg considers it a supplemental conclusion to cxvi.

1.—Praise the Lord, all ye nations.—It is worthy of note that this verse is quoted in Rom. xv. 11, along with one from Ps. xviii. 49, showing how parallel this supplement to Psalm cxvi. is to the close of that Resurrection Psalm. In both the extension of salvation to the Gentiles is based on Christ's resurrection.

2.—His merciful kindness is great towards us.—"Is great" means also "is strong." "It is not only great in bulk or number; but it is powerful. It prevails over sin, Satan, death, and hell."—A. Clarke. The truth of the Lord endureth for ever.—It should not be overlooked that the reference to this Psalm in Rom. xv. is not only to show its recognition generally of the call of the Gentiles, but to justify the assertion (ver. 8, 9) of Christ's being a minister "for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers, and that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy." Whilst mercy and truth form a common ground for praise to both Jew and Gentile. Praise for truth more befits the Jew; praise for mercy, the Gentile.

FRIDAY, JUNE 3.—PSALM CXVIII.

"My dear Psalm, the beautiful cxviiith. This, I say, is my Psalm, for I love it; for although the whole Psalter and all the holy Bible is dear to me, and is, indeed, my only comfort and life, yet I am specially indebted to this Psalm, for it has often done me very great service, and has helped me out of many and great difficulties, so as no Emperor, King, Sage, Saint, or prudent person could help me, and it is dearer to me than all the honour, wealth, and power of Pope, Turk, Emperor, and all the world, so that I would not exchange this one Psalm for them all. When I make this Psalm mine, I do not take it away from anyone else. Christ is mine, and yet the same Christ belongs to all the saints likewise. I will not be stingy with my Psalm; would to God that all the world would lay claim to it, as well as I."—Luther.

"This is the last of those Psalms which form the "Hallel," which the Jews sung at the end of the Passover."—A. Clarke. "It is the concluding portion of the hymn which Christ and his disciples sung before going forth to the Mount of Olives."—R. H. Ryland.

10.—All nations compassed Me about.—"For of a truth in this city against thy holy Servant Jesus whom Thou didst anoint, both Herod and Pontius Pilate with the Gentiles, and the peoples of Israel were gathered together" (Acts iv. 27, R.V.).

14.—The right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly.—"Therefore, being by the right hand of God exalted" (Acts ii. 33).

20.—This gate of the Lord.—Better in R.V., "This is the gate of the Lord." See John x. 9.

27.—Bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar.—Probably sung by our Lord and his disciples just before going to Gethsemane, where this binding took place.

SATURDAY, JUNE 4.—PSALM CXIX.

Much too long a portion for one day. It is impossible to do more than point out some of the general features of this Psalm. "In each verse of the Psalm (except 122) reference is made to God's word, or law, or revealed will. The words employed are law, testimonies, ways, precepts, statutes, commandments, judgments, word, promise, faithfulness."—Kay.

"The prominent characteristic marked throughout is a love for the Word of God, which is brought before us under no less than ten different names, thus to conciliate from the view of its inexhaustible fulness a more attentive regard to its authority, and adding fresh strength to the obligation to read, believe, love, and live in it."—C. Bridges.

The Psalm begins by describing under the highest aspect those whose experience forms its subject. They are "undefiled in the way," their habitual standard of walk is "in the law of Jehovah." The Psalm closes with a recognition of the wandering from God, to which even such are liable; but their plea is that as they still do not forget his commandments, He would come after them like the Good Shepherd, and restore them to the fold. Between these two are to be found the utmost varieties of Christian experience.

"What a comfort it is to find that the Bible saints, who now shine as stars in the firmament of heaven, were men of like passions with ourselves! They were not always saints: they sinned, and murmured, and rebelled—as we do. Heaven's rarest blades were not wrought of finer metal than that which is within our constitution. God's choicest vessels were not turned from superior earth to that of which we are made. The jewels which now lie at the foundation of the new Jerusalem were once obscure, un-named men of no finer texture than ourselves. Look to the quarry whence they were hewn, and the hole of the pit whence they were digged, and say if there was much to choose between their origin and your own. And then, take heart; for if God were able to take up such men as Jacob, and Simon Bar-Jona, and make of them princes and kings, surely He can do as much for you. The discipline may be keen as fire; but the result shall be glorious; and all eternity shall ring with the praises of Him who raises up the poor out of the dust, and lifts up the beggar from the dunghill, and makes them kings and priests unto God."—Extract.

INVALIDS AND PUBLIC WORSHIP.

Dear Sir,—After many years of Gospel preaching, I feel strongly that a great difficulty in getting some to hear the word preached would be overcome, if every mission-hall, chapel, room, &c., had in its possession a Bath Chair; old people and invalids might then be "compelled to come in" by willing workers who would be ready to fetch them.

The advantages of having such a thing attached to the place, to be used in the Lord's work, are very numerous and I need not add words to explain them. Also, some of the Lord's dear children who never get out could be cheered now and again by the ministry of the word and the fellowship in the Gospel. We owe much to many of those who are "prisoners of the Lord," who stay at home and pray for the preacher, obliged to do so, for they cannot get to hear by reason of sickness and various weaknesses.—Yours in the Gospel,

Herbert R. Francis.

"A MIGHTY FACTOR."

"The Catholic [Roman meant] Church is still a mighty factor for good in the affairs of men."—Pall Mall Gazette, April 13.

More than fifty years ago a Christian, a scholar, and a man of a certain social position, was banished from his country (Switzerland) for his courageous defence of the Gospel. He took refuge in France, and there studied the Roman Catholic Church. His verdict upon it was: "False, base, and immoral," and he added, "No one can ever know what the Roman Catholic Church is, without living in a Roman Catholic country."

The writer having lived for fifteen years in South America, on the east and west coasts, and afterwards for twenty years in Spain, can confirm from personal experience the opinion of his friend, who, at the ripe age of more than ninety, is still a witness for truth on the earth.

The Catholic Church was a mighty factor for good in the affairs of men, but since when has the Roman Catholic Church been such a factor? Has she been such in the Roman Catholic countries of Europe? Ask France, Italy, and Spain; ask Mexico, Brazil, and the South American Republics. It is impossible for a Protestant Englishman, whose family life and family ties are respected as sacred, to know the iron which enters into the soul of the Roman Catholic in his family life and family ties, be he rich or poor, peer or peasant.

No country in Europe has suffered so deeply from the wicked despotism of the Roman Catholic Church as Spain; and it was, therefore, quite logical that at the glorious Spanish Revolution of 1867, all over the country should be raised the cry of "Religious Liberty," by which the people understood, not liberty for all religions, but that they were to be set free from the yoke of Rome, that the power of the priest for interference in their conscience, in their family life, in their social life, in their professional or business life, &c., was for ever to be abolished. Alas for Spain that it was not so.

A sincere Protestant writer, looking at Roman Catholicism as it is in free England,* may speak of the Roman Catholic Church as "a mighty factor for good in the affairs of men"; but the poor Roman Catholic knows, from a bitter experience, that, for him and for his, it has been a factor for woe and suffering, for degradation, mental, moral, and spiritual, individual, and national. Ask him what the priest of the Church of Rome has been in his family, and tales will be told that curdle the blood.

No society can prosper in which the Roman Catholic system is dominant. The reason is very plain. God has built up society on family life; the man the head; the woman sharing authority with him, and responsible with him; the children in complete obedience to their parents. Under such discipline generations can be trained to be obedient, faithful, and moral citizens. The Church of Rome breaks up God's beautiful arrangement and substitutes its own. She introduces into the family life the priest, whose authority over the wife is more than that of the husband, and over the children more than that of the parents. For the result, consult the history of Roman Catholic countries in the past and in the present.

Rome is the mother of infidelity to a very great degree; infidelity, the negation of rights Divine, in its turn has given to Rome a grand-daughter, modern socialism, which is the negation of rights divine and human.

Terrible indeed is the outlook for the Roman Catholic countries where the Romish system is dominant. The Spanish martyrs of the sixteenth century understood this perfectly. Some of them were men of high position, standing on the very steps of the throne. They were true patriots, and saw that the only hope of deliverance for their country was in the overthrow of the Roman Catholic system. For this they prayed, and laboured, and suffered, and died; but not one of them was ever accused of disloyalty to his king. Where God has spoken his opinion, it must be dangerous for man to express a contrary one, and those who do so, tread on slippery places, specially if Protestant writers. Here is God's opinion: "Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of the harlots and of the abominations of the earth." And if this be God's estimate of the Roman Catholic system, how can it be a mighty factor for good in the affairs of men? Thank God, the Catholic Church has been, is, and will be while time lasts the salt and light of the earth, a mighty factor for good in the affairs of men.

BAPTISM AND CONVERSION.

Dear Sir,—In answer to "A Constant Reader," who in your issue of May 12 asked "some clergyman to explain why conversion is needed if, as the Church of England teaches, we receive the Holy Spirit in our infancy," I very briefly answer that although our Church teaches that, as in the Jewish Church, infants are admitted into covenant with God, and are recognised as his children, yet, as the Church Catechism very clearly explains, they are required when arrived at years of discretion to fulfil the conditions of baptism. These conditions are repentance and faith, and because infants by reason of their tender age cannot perform these conditions, "they promise them both by their sureties; which promise, when they come to age, themselves are bound to perform." Now repentance and faith are also the conditions of conversion, which is consequently needed if baptism is to be of any avail.

Then with regard to confirmation, to which reference is made; if "Constant Reader" will look into the Prayer-book, he, or she, will find that Confirmation is only intended for those who have fulfilled the conditions of baptism, or, in other words, are in a converted state. May I add that the Church of England should not be judged by the teaching, or by the practice, of its ministers, or its members, but by its authorised formularies; by its standard of doctrine, found in the Thirty-nine Articles of religion, and by its book of Common Prayer.—Very truly yours,

Richard Brent.

Holmside Vicarage, Lanchester, Durham.

Dear Sir,—"A Constant Reader" describes his own conversion as the "experience of a thorough change of heart," when he was "led to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation," and in this he finds his only ground for "indulging the hope that the precious gift is his now."

And let every man speak according as He has received of the Lord, but there are thousands whose spiritual course has been very different from this. They have no remembrance of any thorough change of heart; they do not know when they did not trust in the Saviour.

And such cases should not be exceptional but usual: the service for baptism of infants in the Church of England is evidently framed with this in view. Godly persons (for only such are considered as can give God thanks that they have "been brought to the knowledge of his grace and faith in Him") are encouraged to ask great things for the little ones, even that God would give his Holy Spirit to them that they be born again, that He would receive them and release them of their sins, that He would sanctify them with the Holy Ghost, and give them the kingdom of heaven and everlasting life.

It is a lifelong, an eternal gift that is asked for, the fulness of the blessings of the Gospel of Christ, and those who pray are encouraged to believe that their prayers are heard, and to offer thanksgiving as for blessings bestowed. In this sense the Church teaches that infants receive the Holy Spirit in baptism, but it is evident the glowing words of the service are intended for the encouragement of faith, not of formalism.

W. F. Kimm.

Dear Sir,—It is truly an important question that one of your correspondents has raised in The Christian as to the relation of conversion to the gift bestowed in baptism.

The particular phrase quoted—"The gift which was given you at Holy Baptism"—is a very frequent one in the teaching of one section of the English Church; but I sometimes question whether if one of that school were asked to give a clear exposition of what it means, backed up by clear, passages of God's Word, as proofs of his teaching, he would be able to do so. He would, no doubt say, the gift is the Holy Spirit, and quote as proofs of this, Luke xi. 13; John iii. 5; Acts ii. 38; viii. 12, 13, 17, and thus try to show that this gift is attached to baptism as the divinely appointed means of conveying that gift. But if this is the true teaching of God's Word, then away with the evangelical teaching of the absolute necessity of conversion for all men, "baptized and unbaptized"; for the difference between the believer and the unbeliever lies in this, that the one has the Holy Spirit dwelling in his heart, and the other has not.

Now those who accept this teaching start with the notion that baptism is absolutely necessary to salvation, and therefore the whole Bible is read in the light of that idea; but they fail to see the fallacy of their position, for:—

(1) They take for granted that being "born of water and of the Spirit" means the outward rite of baptism.

(2) That the inward grace of which baptism is the outward sign, is always given with the outward sign.

(3) That we become believers by a mechanical act without any conscious assent on our part: in other words, that the act of the Church through its minister in baptism, is the way by which we become "children of God, members of Christ, and heirs of the kingdom of heaven."

Now if we test these three points by the Word of God, we find:—

(1) No satisfactory proof that our Lord was referring to baptism with water in his conversation with Nicodemus. In fact it is quite evident that he was not referring to baptism at all, but to the new birth; for he was to some extent blaming Nicodemus for not understanding the meaning of the words, "Ye must be born again" (= "born of water and the Spirit"), when He said, "Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?" And baptism was not then instituted as a Christian ordinance, so that it could not be this that He referred to.

(2) That the inward grace is not necessarily connected with the outward sign is plainly proved by the case of Simon Magus in Acts viii. 13—23. He was baptized, but Peter said of Him after his baptism, "I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity," i.e., still an unbeliever. No saving efficacy had accompanied his baptism.

(3) The Bible in no place ever gives us the slighest ground for believing in any opus operatum way of salvation. Each man must believe for himself. It is by each one's own faith that he becomes a member of Christ. "As many as received Him (by a deliberate conscious act) tothem gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them which believe on his name; which were born not of blood (natural descent), nor of the will of the flesh (works), nor of the will of man (ordinances), but of God" (John i. 12, 13). If so, then I need not give up the teaching that everyone needs conversion in the true sense of a change of heart before he can enter heaven. And I can still hold and preach "Except a man be born again (= converted) he cannot see the kingdom of God." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit (= converted) he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

But says one: Does not the baptismal service itself teach the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, and hence overthrow the need of conversion, except when there has been a departure from baptismal grace? For example it prays, "Give thy Holy Spirit to this infant that he may be born again, and be made an heir of everlasting salvation," before the act of baptism. And again, "Grant that this child now to be baptized therein, may receive the fulness of thy grace, and ever remain in the number of thy faithful and elect children." Then, after the act, it pronounces the child to be regenerate, and thanks God "that it hath pleased Thee to regenerate him with thy Holy Spirit, to receive him for thine own child by adoption, and to incorporate him into thy holy Church:" and further speaks of him as "being dead unto sin, and living unto righteousness."

True, the service says all this; and because it does say it, it is a real difficulty to many a godly sands of cases. And so he tries to explain it on the principle of hypothesis: supposing the conditions fulfilled, such would be true. But, as he is not able to read the hearts of those who come for baptism, he must take them on their profession, even though he feels morally certain that it is otherwise. One thing, however, may be said, that the whole service was drawn up for Christian parents, and no one else has any right at all to it. If worldly people use the service, and bring their children for baptism, the whole ceremony is a farce, a mockery in the sight of God.

* Rather say as it appears, for the infamies and cruelties of the Middle Ages are not unknown in Eng-

But, as for the minister himself, in regard to the service, he may feel uncomfortable about it, and wish it were altered; but till that can be done he is obliged to use it. Still he has the sixth article to stand upon, which tells him that whatever is in the Liturgy, which cannot be proved by the Word of God, he is not required to believe or accept. And if the two, the Liturgy and the Articles, hontradict each other, he is not responsible for that. And, therefore, he can fearlessly go on in faith with his work of preaching the Gospel of Christ, and the necessity of a change of heart through an intelligible trust in the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation for everyone without exception. And every captious adversary who wishes for sacramental teaching and a sacramental way of salvation, and says he is contradicting his Prayer-book, he can refer to that article which sends him directly to the Word of God; and there he finds it written, "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out"; "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." And Jesus Christ says to any human priest who would attempt to put sacraments or anything else in the way of the sinner coming to him, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me"; "Look unto Me and be ye saved all the ends of the earth"; "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life."

CHRISTIAN LIFE IN ACTION.

DEAR SIR,—A paragraph in your issue of May 12, relative to a paper called "Brotherhood," opens the way for a few remarks on a subject somewhat difficult, but one, I believe, very pressing at the present time, viz., the right attitude of Christians towards the social and political problems of the day. In that paragraph you say you "think that time is lost in advocating drastic theories with regard to land and capital, and the distribution of wealth," and that the development of the Christian life must necessarily include the practice of duty to the neighbour. This last is quite true if we have clear ideas of what is our duty to our neighbour.

Most of the land and the wealth of this country belongs to professing Christians, and a great deal is owned by real members of the Church of Christ. Therefore it is absolutely impossible for all Christians to pass by such questions as, "What is my duty to my neighbour as an owner of land and wealth, not only in respect of that part of my income I can spare after satisfying my own needs, but as to the way I employ my land and invest my money?" Has not the time come, in the face of all the sad results of our industrial system, for Christians to inquire for themselves, instead of taking it for granted that the maxims and teachings of the world are the only practical ones on this subject. Let us see to it that we are not parties to a system which violates the moral law; but this we are unless we find that the system of land ownership, and the conduct of business affairs which prevails, is in accordance therewith.

I believe that were we to carefully study the political economy of the Bible we should be surprised at the far-sighted wisdom of the laws there laid down to regulate man's dealings with man in the material gifts and resources which result from labour in conjunction with the natural forces given for our use by the Creator of all things. If at the same time we studied the history of our present industrial development we should be equally surprised at the very recent adoption by the Church, at any rate, in theory, of many of the practices of the world in these matters. The world looks to Christians to make their faith manifest in their conduct, and then judge of our religion more from the conduct of those who profess it than anything else. They see that we point the sinner to Christ as his Saviour, but do not sufficiently emphasise by our life and teaching the precepts He taught as applicable to every-day business life. We virtually confess that we cannot see how we can in business matters apply the teaching of Christ as we find it. So general is this that it seems as if the enemy of mankind has taken advantage of the leaven of worldliness which too often gets into the Church after repeated revival of sections of it, to deceive her as to her duty in this respect, knowing full well that our failure will be a terrible bar to winning souls for Christ.

We are learning more and more that disease and death follow without fail the neglect of natural laws, and, as He who made the world and all things therein also gave us the Bible and sent his Son to die for us on the Cross, and to teach us how we should live the new life He thus purchased for us, we may be sure that his moral teaching is adapted perfectly to the world He made, and that its violation will utimately result in material failure and catastrophe. THOMAS FARDON.

ON PREACHING GLAD TIDINGS TO ALL PEOPLE.

SIR,—I do not know that my style of extempore speaking lends itself very kindly to the practice of publishing in separate paragraphs detached sentences. Few speeches that are worth making can be fairly represented, like cheeses, by a fragment excavated in any direction. Hence there is some desire in my mind to supply the connection, out of which your brief paragraph of last week was excavated.

In a recent brief address in the Theological Hall at Edinburgh, I was dwelling on the fact that we are in greater danger from GNOSTICISM in the Church (or pretending to know the right way of teaching Christianity better than the Apostles) than from AGNOSTICISM outside it, the one generally leading to the other; so that it had become absolutely necessary for all young preachers to decide whether St. Paul's claim to teach with absolute Divine authority in the Church (a claim made directly or indirectly in nearly two hundred places in his history, and in his Epistles) was to be accepted as valid or not: since such a claim could not simply be passed over with indifference or neglect, inasmuch as tremendous results in eternity were alleged by him to follow the preaching of "any other Gospel than that which he preached," even the awful Anathema, which signifies eternal perdition (Gal. i. 1—14).

This led me to the representation of this "Gospel," as summed up in the brief form, "Forgiveness first, through the Atonement of Christ, and thorough Amendment afterwards;" the power to amend coming after the enjoyment of pardon. "We love Him, because He first loved us." All other religions, both of the East and of the West, were religions for respectable people; but Christ's Gospel alone offers a religion available for the "wicked." "I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." And then I added, that I feared many professed preachers of Christianity in our time (not referring to Congregationalists exclusively) were not preaching a religion which could give any hope of immediate forgiveness to a wicked man or woman, because the study of the Holy Scriptures, the only source of such a religion, was too much neglected; and if this fear was well grounded there was great reason for such teachers to dread the execution of the awful threatenings in the Bible "against false prophets." With this explanation I abide by the drift of your representation.—Yours truly, EDWARD WHITE.

OBITUARY.

ADMIRAL FISHBOURNE.

WE regret to record the death of Admiral Edmund Gardiner Fishbourne, C.B., which happened recently at his residence in Hogarth-road, Kensington. He was for many years honorary secretary to the Royal Patriotic Fund, and to the Naval and Military Bible Society. His death has removed one of the most active and energetic Christian men of his day. We were often compelled to differ from the views he held and expressed, but we cordially recognise his fidelity to conviction, and his warm-hearted support of every good work.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—The annual meeting of this Mission to be held to-day (Thursday) at Mildmay Conference Hall, afternoon and evening, will be one of special interest. Missionaries from South Western, North Western, and Central China will speak, besides Rev. J. H. Taylor, and Revs. J. Stephens and Thomas Champness.

MR. VARLEY at TUNBRIDGE WELLS

A MEMBER of the Committee writes:—So fa as numbers go the success has been complete Never did I see such an audience of men as sa and stood on every available space to hear th address on "Chastity." It was wisely an powerfully delivered, and must have done muc good. The mass of men listened to it wit great candour and appreciation. One of th Episcopal churches (Rev. L. S. Tugwell's) ha been opened every morning for Bible-readings which have been very valuable.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.

AN excellent display of saleable articles, con tributed by many sympathisers with Mrs. Hi ton's work among the children, was to be foun at the bazaar in Cannon-street Hotel, opened o Monday last by Viscountess Lymington. In a address to her ladyship, Mrs. Hilton describe the features of the institution, and said the clas of poor mothers who are benefited by it are thes who wish to bring up their families well, but ar hard pressed in the struggle of life. The Vis countess expressed much sympathy with the wor of the Crèche, in which, we, believe, she ha taken a personal interest from her very earl years.

A number of the girls from the Home in con nection with the Crèche, clad in their blue cloak and hoods, were present, and sang prettily durin the opening ceremony. It is hoped that this sal will give a much-needed replenishment to th exchequer of the institution.

CALCUTTA.—Miss Gardner writes in The Missiona Link:—My new school for higher education is going be a success in time. It is growing slowly, but it growing, and everybody is interested in it, and says it just what we need. I went lately to a large school Calcutta supported by the Government, with 150 of t brightest and most intelligent looking girls I have se for a long time. But, alas! they were getting the education with nothing of our blessed religion in it, most of the girls were Brahmo-Somaj. I have an tense desire to give this class of girls education on solid foundation of Bible instruction, for it is to the that the women of India, as a mass, in their darken

THE NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS AND RAGGED SCHOOLS.

OUR HOLIDAY HOME.—Fourth Season, 1887.

COUNTRY AIR FOR DROOPING LILIES.

Ada's Country Change, and how she got it.

It was a Sunday afternoon last month, and the children were sitting round their teachers, in one of our Mission Schools in East London. Many interesting faces were eagerly turned towards the Superintendent as he passed through the classes, marking here and there a more delicate form. One of these was Ada M——, whose father died about a year ago, and whose mother is now bravely fighting under her severe burden to maintain herself and her family of little ones by laundry work, aided by a small parochial allowance.

Ada is one of a delicate family, and her quiet expressive face bore deeper traces of suffering than usual.

Upon enquiry we found she was attending the parish dispensary and finding her medicine could be enlarged to serve for a longer period, we took her away a day or two after to our pleasant Country Holiday Home.

Three weeks were spent under its hospitable shades, and ere their close the tinge of health again mantled the cheek, and returning strength gave back again the buoyancy of youth. We need be at no pains to describe the mother's joy, nor how the widow's heart sang for gladness over the regained health of her beloved fatherless child.

But there are hundreds more dear fatherless and motherless children about in our path, and hundreds more sharing the homes of want and care abounding in East London just now—children of the very poor, sorely needing a country change, whose parents could not possibly provide even the few shillings required by some other "Holiday Homes" to secure the advantages sought. There are about 1,500 children in our Six Mission Schools alone.

Indeed, such were the condition of several now sharing our Country Home on Brigadier Hill, that we had to clothe them and shoe them before we could take them under our care. But it is a glorious work, and the poorer the children are whom our visitors look up the more pleased we are to take them. What a privilege, then, to help in any way in this Christ-like work—one we feel sure our Christian reader will not be slow to improve.

We gladly say about 5s. pays board and fare for one child for a week, 20s. gives two children a fortnight, £5 the same joys for ten, and £10 the same to twenty. Our Holiday Home accommodates about twenty-five at a time. We are wanting to add another "Home" this Season if funds permit. Friends desiring may have a neat collecting card sent.

We need scarcely offer assurance of our concern for the best interests of their soul as well as their body. We have letters occasionally from children who have received spiritual good while staying at Elm Lodge during former seasons.

We often wish our friends and contributors could all share the joy of a visit to the Lodge and its surroundings on a summer's day, and hear the happy voices of gladsome little hearts warbling in unison with the voices of Nature. We are surrounded by beautiful country, while Pine Trees skirt the woods that fringe our large garden. Fragrant roses in abundance are also a feature of our flower-beds.

But far from here, with nothing to cheer,
Do the lily-pale faces live ;
'Mid festering smells, where gloom ever dwells,
Oh, who would not hasten to give?

We may further add that the "Home" has proved a merciful shelter throughout the whole of the past severe winter. It was our frequent experience to meet with the most sorrowful instances of grief and destitution. In one case six little children were weeping round the corpse of their departed mother, with no food and no other bed in the room. We took them away from their bitter surroundings, and many more from circumstances nearly as sad. We cannot endure to think how we should have toiled on through the scenes we did, had we not such a "harbour of refuge" in a time so dark.

We gladly mention how largely the contributions of the readers of The Christian, in past years, have contributed to the maintenance of our happy and successful "Holiday Home."

Contributions would be gratefully received, if sent to the Editor of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or to

Yours most respectfully,

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION

(INDIAN FEMALE NORMAL SCHOOL AND INSTRUCTION SOCIETY),

In co-operation with the Church Missionary and other Protestant Missionary Societies in India. Established 1852.

JUBILEE FUND FOR CHRISTIAN MEDICAL WORK AMONG THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

The Queen's Testimony.

Her Majesty said to one of our medical lady missionaries, who had the honour of an interview in 1881, "We should wish it generally known that we sympathize with every effort made to relieve the suffering state of the women of India."

In addition to its Evangelistic and Educational work, the Society has a Hospital and Dispensary for Women at Lucknow, where their Medical Missionary, Dr. Alice Marston, is at work.

In 1886, she reports:—

2,943 new cases.
100 patients in the Hospital.
131 patients treated in their own houses.
6,920 total attendances at Hospital and Dispensary.

The Committee desire to commemorate the Queen's Jubilee by inaugurating a Jubilee Fund for extending their medical missionary work. They have now three thoroughly qualified medical ladies, two already in India and one on the point of proceeding there. They have three other ladies, students at the London School of Medicine for Women, who will soon have completed their four years' course and be ready to proceed to India.

The Committee APPEAL for FUNDS to enable them to extend their work, and establish Hospitals for Women at Benares, Jeypore, Patna, and Fyzabad.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Sub-Treasurer, at the Society's Office 2, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C. Bankers—Ransom, Bouverie & Co., 1, Pall-mall East, S.W.

"A Charming Piece of Biography."—J. G. WHITTIER.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS:

The Record of the Life of a Beloved Sister.

By FRANCES E. WILLARD,
President of the "Women's National Christian Temperance Union of America."
With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER;
And a Prefatory Note by the Poet, JOHN G. WHITTIER.
CLOTH BOARDS, 2/6; WITH GILT EDGES, 3/-.

"'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS' is most ouching and interesting; so thoroughly natural and unconventional was her life and the expression of her thoughts. It is good to see how, through all he different modes of thought and teaching, and nany mistakes perhaps all round, God draws hearts o rest in Him, and trains characters to serve Him."—Home Friend.

"The young girl whose short life is here portrayed by a sisterly hand was a charming character, and exemplified the graces of a Christian experience. The pages of her diary are a revelation of the writer's bright heart and keen observation of her surroundings: and the portrait and pictures are capital. A delightful biography."
The Christian Commonwealth.

"Miss Willard here traces, with a hand as skilful as the heart that guides it is loving, the life of her beloved sister Mary. It is an American biography, but will be read here with as much avidity, and will excite as intense admiration, as if it were English. . . . Worthy of being selected as a choice gift-book to young ladies."
Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"For elder girls 'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS,' by Frances E. Willard, should be very helpful and stimulating. It is an affectionate record of the singularly beautiful life of the authoress's sister, Miss Mary Willard."
Christian World.

"A book that may be safely put into a young lady's hands, with the assured confidence that it will serve to strengthen and deepen all influences for good."—The Christian.

THE LATE

HON. ION G. N. KEITH-FALCONER.

THE mission field has claimed another martyr. There is something intensely pathetic in the sudden eclipse of any young and ardent life that has been devoted to the most sacred of ends. When the possessor of that life is one so highly gifted, by natural endowment, by the highest learning of the schools, by social influence and ample resources, as the young Scotch nobleman who has just died at his post in Arabia, at the early age of 31, the loss seems beyond all reckoning. We can but bow the head in submission and falter out, "The Lord gave; the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

The tidings that reached this country on Saturday, May 14, of the death of the Hon. ION G. N. KEITH-FALCONER, at Aden, on the previous day, evoked universal mourning in every circle where he was known. "In him," says a sorrowing friend, "the world has lost a man of widely varied gifts, a profound and accomplished Orientalist; an ardent missionary, with a zeal as keen and strong as his favourite hero Gordon, with whom he had many points in common. True missionary, true scholar, true Christian hero, he has left a mark in more fields than one which will not soon be forgotten."

Mr. Keith-Falconer was the third son of the late Earl of Kintore, whose memory is still cherished by many as an earnest evangelist and a promoter of all Christian movements. In his day, the preaching Earl was a well-known figure at conferences in the North of Scotland (where the family seat is), and at the Free Church Assembly meetings in Edinburgh. It was as a missionary of the Free Church that the son went to Aden, and as his death occurred at the opening of this year's session of the Assembly the sad event was specially referred to both by the retiring, and the newly elected Moderators.

(From Photograph by Mr. Vernon Heath, 37, Piccadilly, W.)

He was educated at Harrow, and afterwards at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1878, taking principal honours in Hebrew and Arabic. During his school and college course he became famed in the department of athletics. He had a fine physical development, and was one of the earliest champions in the nascent art of bicycling. We understand he was the first to accomplish the continuous journey on wheels from Land's End to John o' Groat's. At Harrow School he had acquired the ability to write phonographic shorthand, and also became a proficient in that art, turning it to much practical account in his later days. In the midst of his mental and physical studies, however, he did not neglect the spiritual life, as so many of the young men in aristocratic and athletic circles do. His two greatest interests were mission work and linguistic acquirement. Mr. Hudson Taylor is wont to say that the best preparation for the foreign missionary field is mission work at home, and this was the course pursued by our young Cambridge friend. He became an earnest helper and a generous supporter of Mr. F. N. Charrington's work at Mile End; and he helped mission work at Cambridge. His interest in home work did not flag, even when his enthusiasm was evoked in distant fields of service.

Possessing an intimate knowledge of several European languages, he had a special delight in Arabic, and spent a winter at Assiout some years ago, so as to further his practical acquaintance with it as a spoken language. In 1884 he married a daughter of the well-known City banker, Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, and for a time he seemed disposed to settle down in Cambridge, where he was appointed Hebrew Lecturer at Clare College. His thoughts, however, were specially turned in the direction of Aden as a point from which the Mohammedans of Southern Arabia might be reached. It was a comparatively untilled field, and he knew that he had unusual qualifications for the work; to this end he offered himself as an agent of the Free Church of Scotland Foreign Mission Committee, he and his young wife having resolved to devote life and fortune to the spread of the Gospel in this needy, though not healthful, region. The winter of 1885-6 was spent at Aden, and a place some eight miles distant from the city was chosen as the headquarters of a mission. A grant of land, just within the limits of the Protectorate, was secured from the British Government, for this purpose. It is stated that Mr. Keith-Falconer's ultimate intention was to attach himself to one of the largest Bedouin tribes, in order to accompany them in their wanderings through Arabia. The rude hand of death, however, has for ever frustrated this design.

Having returned for a time to this country to arrange for the consolidation of his plans, he was appointed sucessor to Dr. Robertson Smith, as Lord Almoner's Professor of Arabic at Cambridge, and there delivered a course of lectures last October, on the Pilgrimage to Mecca, which were highly appreciated. His scheme included the establishment of a medical mission and hospital, and he secured the co-operation of a young fellow Scot, Dr. B. Stewart Cowen, who had gained considerable repute as a surgeon in Glasgow Western Infirmary. The party reached Aden in December, and at once arranged for the erection of a mission house and dispensary, which are now nearing completion. A small hospital was fitted up in an Arab house where they had temporary quarters, and many Bedouin Arabs and camelmen have visited the place as patients. Mr. Keith-Falconer utilised his knowledge of the language by a frequent visitation of neighbouring villages, selling Arabic Bibles and Gospels. He made himself responsible from the first for the whole cost of the mission, and everything seemed to bid fair for a prosperous and honoured career as an ambassador of the Cross among this ancient people. His recent letters, while dwelling with hopefulness on the development of the mission work, referred to attacks of fever. One of these appears to have taken an unfavourable turn, and, as we have said, a life of rare promise and unusual devotedness was cut short on May 13.

In Scotland Mr. Keith-Falconer was well known and greatly esteemed. Last May he addressed the Free Church Assembly, and in October he held meetings at Edinburgh, Glasgow, and other places. It was natural that his unexpected, and as we might deem it untimely, death should call forth remark at this year's Assembly. The following touching tribute to his work and memory was given in Dr. A. N. Somerville's sermon as retiring Moderator :—

> It is a peculiar providence that on the very eve of the opening of the General Assembly, tidings should have reached us of the unexpected death of one of the most chivalrous, distinguished, and beloved of our young missionaries, who, amid the burning heats of Aden, at the early age of 31, has fallen under the power of that mysterious malady which has borne from the Church on earth so many of her noblest and most devoted sons. The blow that has descended is one which will be keenly felt throughout every district—I may say, in every family connected with our Church; nay, throughout the country at large. The young Christian hero was present with us at last Assembly. His noble parentage, high intellectual qualities, brilliant attainments, but above all his self-sacrificing devotion to the highest of all causes, invest his death with a power which will influence our minds during all the proceedings of this Assembly.
> What may be the beneficent result which God may educe from this calamity, we know not. This, however, we may venture to hope for, that the death of this noble young man may prove the means of awakening attention, greater than has ever been directed, to all Arabia's provinces, and tend to give a lasting wound to that fatal system of Mahommedanism which has so long blighted the souls of millions. What Christian Scotchman, with qualities in any way resembling those of him who has passed away, will stand forth to raise the banner of the Gospel in the place of the gallant warrior who has fallen?

In his opening address as Moderator, Principal Rainy took up the strain :—

> Whatever becomes of the mission of Ion Keith-Falconer, we have now the memory only. But it is a very profitable and admonitory memory. Very visibly he gave to the cause and kingdom of our Lord Jesus all he had. His University distinction, his Oriental learning, his position in society, his means, the bright morning of his married life, I may add his physical vigour—for he had trained body as well as mind—he brought them all to the service. He did so the more impressively because he did it with no fuss about it. We need not doubt that his free and complete gift was accepted. It was well that it was in his heart. Suddenly, to our thinking, the Lord has been pleased to take him up higher. We might think that had he been spared his life might have been fruitful, not only as a force abroad, but as an example at home; for he was the first in our Church's experience who was at once able and willing to inaugurate this special type of dedication to mission work, and his life might have been a standing appeal to others. But shall his death have no force as an appeal? Who comes next? Who will come with youth and trained mental faculties, and proved success in study and acquirements, and with position and means that make him independent, and give them all to the service? Or if all these cannot be so equally combined, as in our lamented friend, who will come with the measure of those gifts they have, giving all they have? It is sad that he is gone. But it will be a great deal sadder if it should turn out that his example fails to raise up a successor from among the young men and young women of our Church.

Since the foregoing was written we have been favoured with an interview by Major General Haig, who returned from his tour in the East last week. He informed us of the fact, in which we were naturally interested, that it was through reading a notice in The Christian, that Mr. Keith-Falconer was led to devote his life to Arabia. General Haig wrote a circular several years ago, strongly advocating the evangelisation of that country, and a brief summary of his views was inserted in our columns. This paragraph attracted the notice of the young Cambridge scholar; after a lengthened conversation with General Haig, the resolve was taken to commence work at Aden, with the results that we have already stated. When General Haig visited Aden in February last, he spent a very pleasant time with the little band at Shaikh Othman; he found a considerable portion of the mission enclosure wall erected, and the building of a dwelling-house was about to be begun. The last afternoon he was there was devoted to talking over the affairs and prospects of the mission, and all were looking forward to years of happy and successful labour for the Master. General Haig had just come down from Sanaa, in the mountainous region of the interior, and Mr. Keith-Falconer was so interested in what he heard of the people, that he purposed taking a journey thither himself.

It will not be out of place to state here that General Haig thinks the Arab peoples generally are ready to listen to the Gospel message. On the western side the Turkish Government are an obstacle, but on the eastern side and along the greater part of the Persian Gulf, that difficulty does not exist, as the Sultan of Muscat, who rules the country of Oman, is an independent prince, and somewhat under British influence, so that probably there would be an open door for Gospel effort.

Any reader who would like to get further information as to this part of the mission field can find it in the articles by General Haig, now appearing in The Church Missionary Intelligencer.

MEMORIAL SERVICE AT GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

On the evening of Sunday week a special service was held in memory of the deceased, who had been such a staunch friend to the work that Mr. Charrington is carrying on in the East-end. In the course of the service, Mr. E. H. Kerwin said: As I have been looking through some of the letters he has written to me from time to time, I cannot but feel what a valuable life has been lost to the Church of God. At the age of seventeen, now fourteen years ago, his venerable and beloved father, the late Earl of Kintore, brought him down into our midst. In one of his letters, he says, writing from his seat in Aberdeenshire, while his parent was lying dead in the house—"It is sweet for me to remember that it was my beloved father who first introduced me to Mr. Charrington and his work, and I shall ever praise God that He brought me into connection with the Tower Hamlets Mission." Some ten years ago, while he was staying at Mr. Charrington's house, I happened to take up his Bible, and on the fly-sheet I read this motto, which he had inserted with his own hand—"Henceforth, Lord Jesus, I wish to be wholly given up to Thee, that in walk and in life I may glorify Thee every day." I think if any man carried this out our brother did, even to the last moments in his life.

Mr. F. N. Charrington said: The dear brother who has passed away was my best and dearest friend on earth. In him we had not only an example of one who gave up his life and labour for the Lord, but of one who gave freely of his substance. His noble gift of £2000 to the Great Assembly Hall showed us that he truly gave as in the sight of God.

Mr. Keith-Falconer was hon. secretary of the Tower Hamlets Mission, and one of the trustees of the Great Assembly Hall, in which he conducted many services. As a preacher, he was a great favourite among the people of the East-end.

The Cambridge Review contains a deeply interesting notice of Prof. Keith-Falconer, by his intimate friend, Rev. R. Sinker, the learned librarian of Trinity College. Mr. Sinker gives strong prominence to his friend's missionary zeal and devotion in his vivid and loving picture of his life and character, and says :—

"There lies before me as I write a printed copy of his last public utterance in Scotland on the subject of his mission....He addresses those 'who, having the cause of Christ at heart, have ample independent means, and are not fettered by genuine home ties. Perhaps you are content with giving annual subscriptions and occasional donations, and taking a weekly class. Perhaps you think you are meant to remain at home and induce others to go. While vast continents ...... suffer the horrors of heathenism or of Islam, the burden of proof lies upon you to show that the circumstances in which God has placed you were meant by Him to keep you out of the foreign mission field.'"

LOWESTOFT SAILORS' HOME.—The words "Sailors' Home" are its own best commendation. They tell of comfort and rest, with the addition of surrounding good influences, for men who, when ashore, need such help. In this Home during the year seventy-eight shipwrecked men have been received, while nearly six thousand visits have been paid to the reading-rooms, and four hundred men have been accommodated with beds. The Home is also a depôt for the sale of Bibles, tracts, &c., and in this and other ways the men have been very largely benefited. The manager is Mr. William Johnson.

The past year has brought, if possible, into clearer light the immense difficulty of mission work in Italy, and the absolute necessity of direct and Scriptural methods of presenting the truth.

Here, where Christianity triumphed over Paganism, and Paganism then corrupted Christianity, the Gospel had strange work to do. Here the forms of truth clothe the anti-Christian spirit. The messenger of darkness is clothed with light; he is sprinkled and anointed, mitred and haloed, and speaking great things, so that it needs quickened spiritual senses to discern the cloven foot, and to hear the growl of the lion, and power from God to strike to the quick. This, however, is being done by the keen-edged, divinely pointed Word of Christ.

Two great facts are now being accomplished in Rome. The material city is being rapidly transformed; so also is society, and especially clerical society. The latter, like a cloud on a mountain convulsed by earthquakes, is adapting itself to the former. New streets are running in all directions, new bridges over the Tiber, new boulevards, new suburbs, new quarters, new societies, new passions, new ideals based upon a new public conscience. In a very little while there will be half a million Italians, heating, melting, fusing, in this great Roman crucible. The Pope is digging moulds into which the seething mass is to run, and form, and cool. Catholic schools are springing up in all directions, colleges, hotels, banks, monasteries, nunneries, and churches. Catholic money from all parts of the world is being invested here in the purchase of property. Each country sends a contingent of priests. The British are to the front. We have three English Catholic preachers, English monks, English nurses, English nuns to beg at our doors, to do our washing, to spy our doings, and an Anglicised Jesuit, who, according to his own account, has converted no small part of England, and who is now converting back to Popery persons who have never left the Papal Church.

All this means that the Pope is fully aware of the importance of Rome to the Catholic system. Hence he follows its development with the deepest concern, and is taxing the resources of the whole Catholic world; subjecting its interests and bartering its votes to save the city from what he calls Revolution; but what in last analysis is really Protestantism. In this Leo XIII. is wise, because Rome is the keystone of the Catholic arch, and disintegration here means Catholic collapse, a cosmopolitan unfrocking of the friars, and the waning of lamps on every Papal altar.

The persistence and vitality of Protestantism in Rome has not only called Catholic energy and resource to the centre, and made Rome the first mission station of the Propaganda, but it has also lowered the pretensions of the Vatican. Its intrigues all over Europe are no longer directed to bring about the restoration of the temporal power, so much as to secure the Church against the molesting light of Biblical truths. And should it fail to gain its ends by means of the ruling class, it will seek them among the socialistic and atheistic population which it has created in its own image and for its own purposes. This is its desire, and will probably be its doom.

Popery must not be allowed to trample under foot the will of God in his own Word, or the blood of Christ in the consciences of God's elect in Rome. She has been politically hurled across the Tiber into her own inquisition, and if Protestants were only as determined against the Spiritual, as Italy was against the Temporal, power, the Vatican, ceasing to be a temple, would become a prison indeed, and finally a tomb; the tomb of the most subtle heresy in philosophy, in politics, in religion, that ever desolated the thought, the moral sense, or the conscience of man.

The facts and figures [given in The Christian for April 14] furnish us with ground to believe that the triumph of the Gospel in Rome is only a question of "attempting the great thing," and expecting "the great thing," in answer to persevering prayer, obedient sacrifice, and untiring manifestation of the truth in Jesus. Why not have rooted in our hearts as firm a purpose to bring Rome over to the Gospel, as the committee of the Propaganda have to bring the neck of London under the Papal hoof? Does not the present religious state of Europe suggest this? Are there not tens of thousands in our churches who pray for this? Would anything help the evangelical churches and Christian missions throughout the world so much as this?

The need of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in all our words and doings is increasingly felt by the brethren in Rome. May the churches at home be stirred up to wrestle with God in prayer, that we may look steadily to Him, and to Him only.

PLYMOUTH SEAMEN AND SOLDIERS' BETHEL UNION.—There were over sixty thousand attendances at the various meetings of this Union last year. Besides the services in the new hall every Sunday morning and evening, open-air services are held on the Barbican Pier, and much tract distribution is done amongst the ships and fishing boats. Gospel temperance and Band of Hope meetings are regularly held, and the latter numbers over two hundred members. Mothers' meetings, Sunday-school, and other agencies are also at work, with good effect. The missionary, Mr. Norrie, gives a very encouraging report of visitation on board ship. The hon. secretary is Mr. T. W. Hoppins, 42, Southside-street, Plymouth.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—An important meeting of this Society took place at its house, 7, Adelphi-terrace, on Monday, May 16, when Rev. W. Arthur read a paper full of powerful, logical argument, and showing a full knowledge of the latest advances of science. Aided by such materials, he demonstrated in language simple, and thoroughly to be understood, the utter untenableness, want of reason, and wholly unphilosophical character of modern atheistic arguments. The modern atheist may scoff at the Bible, but if the paper in question does not shame him out of his folly, and do a grand work for the Church of Christ, we are much mistaken. The Society which has given this paper to its members—and these are to be found in every part of the world now—deserves all encouragement, and we hope many will join its ranks this summer.—Record.

ABORIGINES' PROTECTION SOCIETY.—The fiftieth anniversary of the Aborigines' Protection Society was recently held. The report referred to various efforts made by the Society on behalf of the natives of Zululand, of British Columbia, of Western Australia, and other countries, and stated that the Society desired especially to promote, by every means in their power, the protection of the native races against the demoralising influences of the trade in ardent spirits. The Chairman (Sir Wm. McArthur) spoke of the remarkable advancement made during the past fifty years in regard to the uncivilised tribes brought under British influence. He characterised the recent persecution in Tonga as the greatest barbarity inflicted upon any people since the days of the Spanish Inquisition, and a disgrace to this country, having been instigated by an Englishman. Rev. James Chalmers, missionary from New Guinea, also spoke.

A SONG OF JUBILEE.

"The ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."—Isaiah xxxv. 10.

Lift up, O earth! thy voice and sing!
  Rejoice ye heavens! and thou, O sea!
Let mighty hallelujahs ring,
  For the glad year of Jubilee:
Till far and wide the world around
Is heard the silver trumpet's sound.

The year of God's redeemed shall dawn
  In splendour—for the orb of day
Shall rise most glorious on the morn,
  When mists of ages roll away:
Sorrow and sighing swiftly flee
Before the light of Jubilee.

O happy year of Jubilee!
  Ye captives in far alien lands,
Lift up your heads, for ye are free;
  Return where Zion's temple stands.
Ye ransomed sons of God, proclaim
Redemption through the Saviour's name.

Your harps take from the willows down,
  For "they shall sing in Zion's ways";
Joy everlasting is your crown,
  Lift up on high sweet songs of praise;
Your Father's home ye soon shall see,
For 'tis the year of Jubilee.

Then shall the universe resound
  With hallelujahs to the King,
And from creations farthest bound
  Back shall the hallelujahs ring—
He comes to reign! O Prince of Peace,
Thy kingdom nevermore shall cease.

THE BIBLE IN FRANCE.

We have many times alluded to the work of distributing the Word of God done through the agency of the Crystal Palace Bible Stand. It is not so generally known how much is being accomplished in France by means of the Bible-carriage, which for many years has been going up and down throughout that country. M. Pointet's work, we are glad to say, has been its own reward. Since the Bible-carriage began running, over a million portions of Scripture have been scattered right through France, and wherever he takes up his stand he is sure to collect a large and eager audience, many, of course, listening for the first time to the Word of God, which he proclaims with great boldness. "France," he says, "is still in profound darkness. I can truly say I do not meet, in the course of a twelvemonth, ten persons in the hotels and inns at which I stop who believe in a future life." Yet there is not only great readiness to receive the Scriptures and to listen to the story of the Cross, but the seed sown remains, and often the fruit is found after many days. It is no uncommon thing for a person to produce some Gospel portion given years before, and treasured and read in the interval. M. Pointet visits the markets and fairs, and, speaking of one occasion, he says, "It was a memorable day to see the thousands eagerly accepting portions of God's Word, as well as buying New Testaments." Since the work was begun in 1869, besides the large number of Gospels freely distributed, nearly 80,000 New Testaments and Bibles have been sold.

M. Pointet's letters, contained in the report of the work of the Crystal Palace Bible Stand, give a graphic account of the reception met with in various places, of opposition sometimes encountered, and of progress. The account gives also much evidence that in the conflict with darkness and superstition the Word of God is all-powerful. The remark of one gentleman to M. Pointet, "We want a man like you at the corner of every one of our market-places," will be readily endorsed by all who understand how gross is the darkness in a land which is practically without the Bible.

Communications should be addressed to Mr. Hawke, Bible Stand, Crystal Palace, Sydenham.

CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS.

(BY AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The following appeared in The Christian of May 19, in the columns of "Notes and Comments":—

> A friend writes:—"I wish you would write some papers in The Christian really hot and heavy, on the prostitution of the churches and chapels to worldly amusements—theatricals, raffles, comic entertainments, &c. You ought to raise a trumpet voice against it. No doubt there will be a great howl in reply, but that won't matter. It seems to me that the Church of God is dying for want of some burning witnesses to tell her of her sin. The state of things is really scandalous. In many cases I do not hesitate to say it is abominable."
> Meeting another friend a few days later, he referred to the same subject, in very much the same terms.

I fear the matter to which this passage refers is more serious than the writer conceives. Such strong words of remonstrance as he recommends have already been heard. The Christian, among other journals, has frequently pleaded against the new methods which have come in. They have been sorrowfully referred to in ministerial addresses and in religious conferences. There has been a hopeful impression that to terminate the scandal nothing more was needed than the protesting entreaties which drew attention to the matter. There is, however, a persistence on these new lines which painfully indicates a purpose of defiance, and about which there must manifestly be more determined action on the part of devout persons in Christian communities. The evil is becoming so discreditable to religion as to demand very solemn consideration on the part of spiritually-minded men and women in Christian communities.

The present state of the communicants of Christian churches may be thus indicated. There are first the out-and-out godly, who read their Bibles, aim in all things to obey Christ whom they love and trust, and who are forward in time, money, and labours, to sustain the cause of religion and philanthropy. There are, secondly, the lukewarm, whose names are on church rolls, but who, beyond a Sunday attendance on the sanctuary of God, take little apparent interest in the furtherance of the kingdom of Christ. There are, as a third class, those who, according to prophetic announcement of the last days, have "a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof." Customs which formerly made entrance to churches unnecessarily strait, now make it broad. Where there is rarely heard in the pulpit a reference to the Scripture teaching of the "birth from above," it naturally follows that evidences of regeneration will not be sought in the case of those admitted to church fellowship. I once heard one of the most eminent and honoured Nonconformist ministers aver that he feared one half the members of the churches of his order had never been converted to God. Since his day the very doctrine of conversion is tacitly denied in professedly evangelical communions, and where this is not so, the door of admission to churches has been thrown all but indiscriminately open. Just now there is nothing under the sun more fallacious and utterly misleading than the setting forth in figures those received into Christian societies, as proofs of spiritual prosperity.

It is chiefly this third class of persons, often young and inexperienced, who are responsible for the introduction of utterly worldly entertainments in edifices built for religious uses. Some of them have taken up what they call advanced Christian thought. They are fond of speaking of those who protest against the union of light and darkness, and the chosen fellowship of the followers of Christ with those who repudiate his claims, as "pietists," "croakers," "old-fashioned," and "puritanic." They have imbibed the current notions of a so-called liberality in religion, by which is meant, in the majority of cases, the rejection of the authority, and the denial of the spirituality, of the New Testament Scriptures.

Among these persons are often those who hold some official position in connection with church and chapel societies, and Sunday-schools. According to their light, they are anxious for the welfare of the people. They imagine that to minister to the happiness of outsiders, and of young people, is to attach them to religion. They have no conception of the root-malady of the world's evils, but seem to believe that to amuse people is to do them good. They find that the congregations to which they belong possess buildings admirably adapted for secular entertainments. These buildings, moreover, have the marked advantage over public halls that their use is not paid for. Hence you often find that the boast is made of the cheapness of these amusements, and of a balance on the right side at the end of the year. Probably the entertainment, on starting, had some thin connection with religion. There was an opening prayer, or there was sacred music introduced in the programme. But such engagements mostly proceed on a sliding scale, and the descent is inevitable. The opening prayer is found to be incongruous. The persons who are to be entertained do not tolerate the elevating.

I watched, twenty years ago, the history of the "Penny Reading" movement. It was a well-intentioned effort to draw the people from evil resorts. It soon appeared, however, that audiences fell off if the readings were of an improving nature. The price of catering to those who only cared to be amused was for the readings to descend to a lower and yet lower level of comicality and vulgarity. Sensible men saw that to draw from the doubtful in one direction, by fostering the craving for it in another, was to leave the people unbenefited. They withdrew from the movement, and it almost everywhere came to an end. The moral was unmistakable, that you could not elevate by simply entertaining men, and that entertainment without an improvement in the sentiment of those who were attracted, would be inexorably mastered by a vitiated taste, and would become, instead of a blessing, an offence.

How rapidly this deterioration has gone on in professedly church entertainments is obvious by the following from a writer of our period, who knows that of which he affirms:—

> When, for the avowed purpose of providing the ordinary funds needful for the maintenance of the Christian sanctuary and for the conduct of Christ's cause and kingdom, professional conjurors are called in, comic minstrels are employed, lotteries are organised, and the whole paraphernalia of fashionable gaiety is grafted on to the institutions of God's house; and when, with the laudable object of "entertaining" the senior scholars of the Sunday-school, or, as it is phrased, "to please the young people and keep them together," the hired harlequin is brought from the circus to flounce his tinselled trappings in the house of prayer and turn the scene of the week-night service into a dramatic playhouse—is it to be expected that, under such conditions, the work of spiritual conviction and conversion, through the instrumentality of a preached Gospel, should progress and prosper? Can it be a matter of surprise that this open dalliance with the world for the sake of monetary gain, this catering of carnal pleasures to win popular favour, vitiates the moral atmosphere in which our churches live and move, chokes the upspringing seed of Divine truth ere it buds in youthful hearts, lowers the tone of spiritual life throughout the whole neighbourhood, and renders it increasingly difficult to promote any relish for spiritual aliment, any interest in Divine worship, any concern for the salvation of the soul?*

This terrible passage from one who is no sour precisionist, but the very embodiment of all that is genial in life, ought to be pondered by Christian men. Nor is this all. This "open dalliance with the world" threatens in some places to thrust the spiritual life into the background. Not long ago I was told of two places of worship, by those who were associated with them. In one, the minister held a Bible-class at a given hour of an evening. The town was large, but few young people came to the Scripture reading, and it was mostly hurriedly brought to a conclusion, when the room was instantly filled by young men and women who came crowding in to a secular entertainment. In the other, the minister was in protest against the thing, but by earlier compliance had become helpless. At the very hour he was conducting with a few Christianly-minded persons a prayer-meeting, an adjoining church room would be filled by those who ostentatiously made palpable their preference for worldly amusement.

I cannot wonder that the writer, whose words are quoted at the beginning of this paper, should denominate these proceedings as "abominable." The dishonesty is monstrous. The rooms taken possession of by those who are absurdly trying to combine a Christian profession and "friendship with the world" were never built for these purposes. All through the land excellent men are bitterly complaining, and avowing that not a shilling of their money would they have given, had they anticipated that the edifices they so much contributed to raise, would be used to swell the current of worldliness, and to augment the perils into which so many of the young people of our period are blindly stumbling.

Nor can it be pleaded that scholars in our Sunday-schools prefer the secular to the sacred. They will learn the music of a hymn with avidity: that of a song with no such readiness. Nothing delights them more than one of those "Sacred Pieces," with connected readings, which are now so cheaply provided. I have, moreover, witnessed scores of times, in district mission efforts, that sweet Christian choruses and Christian recreations are preferred to secular amusements and theatricals. No words can, indeed, adequately describe the unspeakable poverty in sentiment of the secular songs of our times.

More than this: those indifferent to spiritual religion who are won to attend places of worship by these secular methods will carry with them into congregational life their dislike to the spiritual. Woe to pastors and churches when attendants on the sanctuary are of this order. They will be hard critics of the good, will stand in aloofness from distinctively Christian efforts, and will diffuse their carpings and prejudices like a perpetual miasma of discontent.

As for the outside world, there is no man who goes into factories, workshops, and warehouses, who does not know the contempt awakened by bazaar lotteries and raffles, and by unblushing imitations of music-halls and concert-rooms on the part of the professed Church of Christ. They at least know what these amusements do for their sons and daughters, and the measure of their disdain is in proportion to the correctness of their view of what ought to be the true and only aim of the witnessing Church of Christ.

* The Conversion of Souls to God; with the Hindrances and Encouragements of these Times. By Rev. H. Averell Ramsey. 1d. Darley Perrey, Dewsbury.

The time has come when, cost what it may, spiritually minded men and women must rise in protest. The prostitution of church buildings to carnal ends is little less than a huge sacrilege. From the good men in the churches the deliverance must come. Their silent protest is not enough. They have the power to say: "This thing shall proceed no further. If well meant at first, the experiment has been a failure. It has not added saved ones to the Church of the Lord Jesus. It has been a building raised with untempered mortar. It has been a weakness and a stumbling-block to Christ's cause. Instead of winning senior scholars to Him, it has opened before them a door to frivolousness and careless living. It is a treachery of Satan against a church which otherwise would have been revived in these days; and, God helping us, it shall come to an end. If men and women want to display their gifts of entertainment, and to find evening secularities and amusements, let them henceforth go elsewhere than to the Church of God. It has its rich and satisfying joys, but, so far as we have influence, it shall not go to the worldlings to provide them."

THE GOSPEL IN EGYPT.

WRITING from Cairo, on May 12, Miss E. J. Whately says:—The Jesuits, who have already a school in this city, have just purchased land within a few minutes' walk of my sister's mission schools. They are about to erect a church and schools in this district, which is now a very populous one, and inhabited especially by Syrian families, with a considerable sprinkling of Copts, Greeks, &c. On all these the influence of the Jesuits will be brought to bear, and every attraction used to draw them to their schools. They have unlimited command of agency and money (English influence has obtained for them a Government grant three times as large as my sister receives for a considerably greater number of scholars). They teach foreign languages well, and though intellectual development is not attended to as with us in this country, languages are the chief attraction, and a number of free scholars will be received. The effect of their teaching in this country is to train up those under them in utter indifference to all religion, and often hostility. Infidelity has been greatly on the increase since their work was established in Syria.

The only counteracting influence in this part of Cairo is that of my sister's schools. She has six hundred in daily attendance, of whom about half are free, and all these are thoroughly taught in the Scriptures. But her funds have so fallen off that she is forced to diminish instead of increasing her staff of teachers, which, of course, implies keeping the number of pupils from increasing. If help could be given her to engage even one or two additional teachers, many more non-paying pupils could he received, who, if they do not come to her school, will almost to a certainty be swept into the vortex of the Jesuits, and practically be brought up as infidels, or something very like it. The European visitors, many of them, know and care nothing of what is done for the people of the country, while many seem to think the difference between a Scripture teaching and a Jesuit school of no consequence; thus she must look for help mainly to her English friends if she is to continue her work.

VISITATION IN SCOTLAND.

BY REV. JAMES WELLS.

(From Statement to F. C. General Assembly.)

JUST six months ago, a visitor began in a close occupied by nineteen families. Of the churchless families then in his little parish eight still remain. Two of these had recently come from small country flocks, of which the parents were members; but nothing whatever was done to secure for them a Christian welcome in Glasgow. The apostolic plan of letters of commendation was unheeded. Buried out of sight in a great and strange city, no work to be had, the wolf perhaps howling at the door, what wonder if these lonely exiles forsook the Church which had seemingly forsaken them, and made the lament, "no man careth for, my soul." There are hundreds of such cases, and every one of them is a reproach to somebody. Many fine country families who immigrate to our city are like derelicts on the wide ocean, and became the rich spiritual prize of the man who first claims them; for the solemn emotions of the home-leaving lay a man's spirit hopefully open to the best impressions. The father of one of these families was deeply touched by the visitor's interest in him, and told me that religion was now a new thing to him, and a matter of the heart. Another young father in that close, who had not been in a church for years, was won by his visitor, and has given the most delightful evidence of a sound conversion. His wife, he said, was seeking Christ, though in perplexity. I visited her. She spoke with the most refreshing frankness. I asked what kept her back from such a decision as her husband's. Holding her baby in one arm, and rapping her breast with her knuckles, she replied, "It maun be naething but jist my ain stubbornness here." Another father, and also a widow, in that close are now promising communicants; while a drunken father has become an abstainer, and with his family frequents the sanctuary.

Pass on to the next close. Seven years ago a visitor began there, stipulating that he was to do no spiritual work. He could not, he said, as he often feared that he belonged to the lapsed masses himself. One day he knocks at a door, is asked in, and taken to the bedside of a dying woman. She tells him that she is greatly afraid to die, and implores him to make plain to her the way of life. He forgets his stipulations, quotes texts, and actually prays with her. She seems to receive the Gospel from his lips, suffers, and dies like a Christian. All the neighbours knew the woman, and her fear of death, and how it passed away, and warmly welcome the visitor as a real benefactor. Two churchless young men resolve to worship under the same roof with the man who, as one of them phrased it, had "done a power of good" to his cousin. Both became members and mission workers. The visitor got more than he gave. There came upon him the benediction promised to those who consider the poor. A new life sprang up within him and a new life opened out before him. He began to doubt whether after all he was one of the lapsed masses, for he beheld with his own eyes as remarkable triumphs of grace as are recorded in any book, and these triumphs the seals of his own ministry. Christ's work among our poor is not poor work; see how it enriches and endows the worker.

Crossing the street we come to a house of one apartment, in which the deepest poverty reigns. Here, as in many other districts, a kitchen prayer-meeting has been very successful, and splendid fruit has been gathered. One youth from that district is now a soldier in India. He recently sent his visitor, in token of gratitude, a valuable table-cover of native manufacture, and he kindly remembers his visitor in every letter he sends his mother. Another youth from that corner is a sailor in the East, and he sends his visitor botanical specimens, the seed of which, it is finely added, was first sown in the mission district. This visitor, a student of science, thus concludes his report to me:—"Were it not for this work my religion would sink to a mere system of philosophy, a thing to talk about as one talks about the constitution of matter, or the theory of light. True religion and pure lives are best maintained by Christian work!"

"But surely these are exceptional facts," someone will say. Well, they are facts and every whole-hearted visitor is privileged, I believe, to witness kindred facts, amid which the unpleasing circumstances of poverty are soon forgotten. The Christian annals of the poor might supply the brightest pages in the history of our times, for the incidents here beat those found in your novels and romances. What a pity that thousands spend their leisure hours upon unsatisfying trifles, while this fascinating work lies within their easy reach!

THE BRIGHTON DELUSION.

(From "The Brighton Gazette.")

IT has come to my knowledge that these misguided people who minister at "The Sanctuary of Jehovah," in Edward-street, not content with the converts they have already obtained, are persuading a comparatively young man and his wife, with their child, to leave a comfortable home they have set up in a highly-respectable quarter of Brighton, in exchange for an apartment near the dwelling house of "Lord [King ?] Solomon." This easily susceptible couple have, so I am informed, saved a goodly sum of money.

Really it shows a very distressing state of affairs that these misguided people in Edward-street should be allowed to exert their influence over the minds of poorly educated people to the extent that is obtaining. Already we have had striking examples of the ill effects brought about by the injurious influence which "Lord [King] Solomon" and his lieutenants possess over their subjects. The time would seem to have long since arrived when stronger minds than those of the chiefs at the Edward-street Assembly Hall should intervene, and prevent these proceedings.

One man, Mr. Morley, I believe is his name, who was once under the power of this "Lord Solomon," was reduced to a complete wreck of his former self before he escaped the clutches of the pernicious influence under which he was placed. His frame was literally emaciated, and had it not been for the exertions of Mr. Smith, there is little knowing what direction his malady would have taken. In a similar manner, though, it must be owned, not in so pronounced a degree, this man's wife was affected, and are we who subscribe to missionaries for the spiritual benefit of the heathen in foreign countries to stand quietly by and allow misguided persons in our very midst to afflict the lives of the susceptible and ignorant portion of the community? Such indifference is not right; indeed, this spirit of reticence should not be allowed to continue.

With reference to the young man and his wife whom I have already mentioned, there is time yet for the sacrifice they are about to make by "Lord Solomon's" commands, to be averted. They leave their home next month, and if any charitable people, or sympathising clergyman, with time at their command, should feel sufficiently interested to take the matter up, I am in a position to give those detailed particulars of the case, which for obvious reasons I am obliged to withhold in this column.

BOOKS AND TRACTS FOR SAILORS.—The Plymouth Ladies' Association for supplying bags containing books, tracts, &c., to the crews of merchant and emigrant vessels coming into that port, in their twelfth report state that last year they supplied 900 bags in English and nine other languages. The great liners, with their thousands of emigrants on board, and the sloops of the trawling fleet, are alike supplied. Very gratefully are these bags of books received, and an account of the eagerness and delight with which they were read by both passengers and crew, enables us to follow these silent messengers, and to imagine how potent is their influence for good. The work is superintended by Mrs. Joseph Greaves, 12, Torrington-place, Plymouth.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.

THE SPIRIT AND POWER OF ELIAS.

1 Kings xvii.

Who that have travelled in Switzerland can forget the early mornings, when they have been summoned from sleep to await the dawn? A weird and mysterious hush possesses nature, as a crowd is hushed in expectancy of a king's approach. Then a strange light spreads outward from the eastern sky; at last one of the loftiest Alps is smitten with the roseate flush of dawn, then another, and another, and yet another, till the whole sisterhood of peaks, mantled with untrodden snow, is lit up and transfigured with burning splendour. But during all this time, the valleys below are swathed in mist, and veiled in darkness. And it is only after hours have passed away, and the monarch of the day has climbed slowly towards his throne, that the blessed sunlight penetrates to the tiny hamlets and scattered châlets, or sparkles in the brooks, or casts shadows from the stones and flowers.

This illustration will serve to show the difference between the dispensation which closed with the first advent of our Lord, and that in which it is our happiness to live, and which is to close with his glorious Epiphany. Each has been blessed with the ministry of the Holy Ghost, but it is in this age alone, dating from the day of Pentecost, that He has been poured forth, on sons and daughters, on servants and handmaidens (Acts ii. 17). In the previous age He was bestowed, in his especial grace and fulness, only on the élite of the household of faith. Every lowland valley now, the humblest and the weakest, may be bathed in his Divine and sacred influence; but, in Elijah's time, those only who were Alpine in the elevation of their character knew what his eternal fulness meant. "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." "The prophets searched what the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify." "The Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

Elijah was one of these men filled with the Holy Ghost. This was the universal testimony of those who knew him best. Elisha's one desire was that he should be heir to the Spirit which was so manifestly upon his master (2 Kings ii. 9). The Spirit of Elijah was a familiar phrase on the lips of the sons of the prophets (2 Kings ii. 15). And years after, when the angel of God spoke to Zacharias in the Temple, he could find no better illustration of the presence of the Holy Ghost in his promised child, than by saying it would be the Spirit and Power of Elias (Luke i. 15—17).

The glorious ministry of Elijah was therefore due, not to any inherent qualities in himself, but to the extraordinary indwelling of the Holy Ghost, given to him as to other holy men of God, in the old time, through faith. If, then, we could but have that same Spirit, in an equal measure, we should be able to repeat his marvellous deeds. It is said that it would be possible to gather up the mighty force of Niagara, and, transforming it into electricity, carry it along a wire to drive machinery one hundred miles away; if this should be ever done, it would be a matter of almost perfect indifference, whether the wire were slender or thick; the mighty force could as well travel along the slender thread, and as well perform its marvels, as through an electric cable. So the question for us all is, whether the Holy Ghost is working with and through us in power; if He be, then, though our nature be paltry and weak, He shall effect through us the same mighty deeds as through men vastly our superiors in mental and moral force. Nay, we may even glory in our infirmities, that this Divine power may rest upon us more conspicuously, and that the glory may be more evidently God's.

Now the question arises: May we, ordinary Christian people, living in this nineteenth century, hope to receive the Holy Spirit in that extraordinary and especial measure in which He rested upon Elijah? Of course we have all received the Holy Spirit to a certain extent, or we could never have come to Jesus. All the graces of the Christian character, all our comfort, all our overcomings, are due to his presence.

Every virtue we possess,
And every victory won,
And every thought of holiness
Are his alone.

And yet it is clear that over and beyond this ordinary grace, which all believers must have, there is a blessed anointing of the Holy Ghost which gives special equipment and fitness for service. Elijah had it. Our blessed Lord, as the perfect servant, had it; when, being full of the Holy Ghost, He returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee, and traced his marvellous power to the fact of the Holy Spirit being upon Him (Luke iv. 1, 14, 18). The Apostles had it, from the day of Pentecost, when they received the fulness of the Spirit for witness-bearing, although they must have possessed Him before for personal character (compare Acts i. 8 and ii. 4 with John xx. 22). The Samaritan believers had it, but only after Peter and John had prayed for them, "that they might receive the Holy Ghost"; although it is evident that their previous conversion and joy had been due to his blessed work (Acts viii. 15, 16). The disciples at Ephesus had it, but only after Paul had laid his hands upon them.

This is surely what we want. And this is what we may have. This special anointing for service is not only for men like Elijah, or Paul, or Peter, who soar far beyond us into the azure skies; but for us all, so long as there stands upon the page of revelation these priceless words, "The promise (referring obviously to Acts i. 4) is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call" (Acts ii. 39). We are amongst the far-off ones, and therefore we may claim the promise for ourselves, and receive the fulness of the Holy Ghost, to equip us for our life and ministry.

But there are three conditions with which we must comply, if we would receive and keep this blessed gift.

(1) We must be emptied.—God cannot fill us if we are already filled. It took ten days to drain the Apostles, even though they had spent three years under the immediate tuition of Christ; but the emptying process was an indispensable preliminary to the Day of Pentecost. For Elijah, this process went on beside the drying brook, and during the long and dreary march to Zarephath, and throughout his sojourn there. It took apparently three years and six months. It was a long and weary waiting time but it was well spent, for in proportion as he became emptied of self, and self-sufficiency, and self-dependence, he became filled with the Spirit of Power; so that Carmel itself, with all its heroic deeds, was gloriously possible to him.

Are we willing to pay this price? Are we prepared for God to empty us of all that is in any wise contrary to his will? Are we content to be empty and broken vessels, that the river, in whose bed we lie, may easily flow through us? If not, let us ask Him to make us willing, willing to be made willing. But if we are willing, let us present our emptied nature to the Son of God, that He may fill us with the fulness of the Spirit. Let us also believe that He does fill us, so soon as we yield ourselves to Him. You do not want more of Him more urgently than He wants more of you, and the one is the condition of the other (Jas. iv. 5, R.V.). Grace, like nature, abhors a vacuum; and just as the cold fresh air will rush in to fill an exhausted receiver, as soon as it has a chance to enter, so does the grace of the Holy Spirit enter the heart that can boast of nothing but an aching void. There may be no ecstasy, no rushing wind, no fiery baptism; but, nevertheless, "the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his Temple," in floods of silent and golden light. "Thus saith the Lord, Make this valley full of ditches: for thus saith the Lord, Ye shall not see wind, neither shall ye see rain, yet that valley shall be filled with water."

Many Christians, seeking this blessed fulness, make the same mistake as is so constantly made by seekers after forgiveness and acceptance with God. They look within for evidences of the reception and indwelling of the Spirit, and refuse to believe in his presence, unless they detect certain symptoms and signs which they consider befitting. This is entirely wrong. The reckoning is not of feeling, but of faith. If we have complied with God's conditions, we must believe, whether we feel any difference or not, that God has done his part, and has filled us with the Holy Ghost. When we leave the chamber where we have made a solemn dedication of ourselves to God, we must not examine our feelings to discover whether there is such a difference in us as we might expect; but we must cry, in the assurance of faith, "I praise Thee, blessed One, that Thou hast not failed to perform thy chosen work; Thou hast entered my emptied nature; Thou art in me in power; henceforth Thou shalt have thy way with me, to will and do thine own good pleasure."

The Holy Spirit is so Divinely modest that He never reveals his own presence, or speaks of Himself (John xvi. 13). The surest symptom that He is within is the growing preciousness of Jesus, the fragrance of his name, and sympathy with his purposes. Hast thou these in growing measure? Then dost thou know somewhat of his gracious filling.

A little child was once asked her age, and she replied, "I don't feel like seven. I feel like six; but mother says I'm seven." Here was the reckoning of faith, putting her mother's word before her own feeling. And thus we must refuse to consider ourselves, to diagnose our symptoms, or feel our pulse, but must launch out upon the deep of God's truthfulness, and let down our nets for a draught of power and blessing

(2) We must be obedient.—We have already insisted on this, but it is so indispensable that repeated emphasis must be laid upon it. Christ reiterated his appeals for the keeping of his commands, in almost every sentence of his closing discourses with his disciples (John xiv. 15, 21, 23, 24, 31). He gives the secret of his own abiding in his Father's love in these striking words: "As the Father gave Me commandment, even so I do. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love" (John xv. 10). Instant and implicit obedience to the teaching of the Word, and to the inner promptings of the Holy Spirit, is an absolute condition of keeping, or increasing, the store of sacred influence. On the contrary, one little item of disobedience persisted in is quite sufficient to check all further bestowments, and even to deprive us of what we have. "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land; but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword." Nor is such obedience hard, for all God's commands are enablings, and his grace is sufficient. Look out for it. If only every believer, who reads these lines, would resolve from this hour to imitate Elijah, who went and did according to the word of the Lord (ver. 5 and 10); not with the thought of merit, but beneath the inspiration of love; not in the weightier matters only, but in the crossings of the t's, and in the dottings of the i's; they would find at once, that there would open before them a life of almost inconceivable glory. It is from the heights of unwavering obedience that we catch sight of the wide and open sea of blessedness. The exact obedience of Elias is the inviolable condition of receiving and keeping the Spirit and Power of Elias.

(3) We must live on the Word of God.—Elijah, the widow, and her son lived on their daily replenished stores; but the prophet had other meat to eat which they knew not of: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." It was on that word that Elijah fed during those long and slow-moving days. Sometimes he would climb the heights behind the little town in deep meditation upon that word which is like the great mountains; and sometimes he would pace the sea-strand, musing on those judgments which are a great deep. He could say with another: "Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart." And sitting with the widow and her son, he would make that word the topic of his constant talk, so that she was compelled to refer to it in these significant terms, "I know that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth" (ver. 24).

The importance of feeding on the Word of God is affirmed by our Lord, when He says: "As the living Father hath sent Me, and I live by the Father; so he that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me." We eat our Lord's flesh when we meditate lovingly upon his Word. The Word is in the words. His words are spirit and life.

This is the further absolute condition of becoming and remaining filled with the Holy Ghost. The Spirit works with and through the Word. What the metal is to the locomotive, what the wire is to the electric spark, what the grammar is to the teacher, what the corn-grain is to the spirit of life, that the Word of God is to the Spirit of God. If, then, we neglect the reverent study of Scripture, we cut ourselves off from the very vehicle through which God's Spirit enters human spirits. And this is the great fault of our times. Christian people will attend conventions, plunge into all kinds of Christian work, read many good books about the Bible and Christian living, but they give the Bible itself the most cursory and superficial heed. And it is for this reason that the Bible does not speak to them.

If you would know all the wondrous beauty of a forest glade, you must not be satisfied with passing through it with hasty foot, and in company with a troop of merry children, whose ringing laughter carries panic into the hearts of thousands of shy living things that, with trembling hearts, keep still in hole and brake and nest. No, you must go alone, and sit quietly down on the log of some felled tree, and wait. Then the mystery of beauty will begin to unfold itself, the fairy bowers, the mossy glens, the interlacing boughs. Presently a note will sound from yonder bough, as the signal for the outburst of many sweet-voiced choristers, and the woodland will ring with the music of the birds; whilst the squirrel runs up some neighbouring tree, and the rabbits come out to feed, and the young foxes play about their holes. All this is hidden from those who cannot wait. So there are mysteries of glory and beauty in Scripture hidden from the wise and prudent, but revealed to babes. There is no book that will so repay time spent over its pages as the Word of God.

A neglected Bible means a starved and strengthless spirit, a comfortless heart, a barren life, and a grieved Holy Ghost. If the people, who are now perpetually running about to meetings for crumbs of help and comfort, would only stay at home and search their Bibles, there would be more happiness in the Church, and more blessing on the world. It is very prosaic council, but it is true.

We must reserve for our next some account of the life which this Spirit-filled man lived in the little household with which he dwelt. Suffice it now to say that the Holy Ghost, which dwelt in him so largely, revealed itself in those very traits which must always be his fruits; gentleness under provocation; steadfastness in trial; power in prayer; life victorious over death. But we may note, in closing, the remarkable admission of the widow: "I know that thou art a man of God" (ver. 24).

We talk of the man of letters, the man of honour, the man of mark, but how infinitely better to be known as a man of God—one of God's men, a man after God's own heart! And how splendid the tribute, when we are so addressed by those with whom we have been wont to live! That familiarity breeds contempt is one of the world's commonplaces; but when a man is filled with the Holy Ghost, the more he is known, the more clearly he is proved to be a man of God.

And the power of the indwelling Spirit evinced itself in Elijah's case, in the marvellous effect produced on that widow and her child. The widow was convinced of sin, and led to the truth of God. The son was brought back from death into a resurrection-life. And such results shall accrue in your experience, if you will only seek to be filled with the fulness of God. "He that believeth in Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." "Ye shall receive Power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you."

MOHAMEDANISM in NORTH AFRICA.

Amongst these very various tribes of Mussulmans, Kabyles, Arabs, Moors, Mzabs, we have moved, and our Christian solicitude has been awakened these last seven years, and now on the shores of highly-favoured England I again appeal for personal help on their behalf.

It is a novel experience to be amongst them—everything so eastern, and contrasted with everything at home; and to find oneself surrounded with men of the same cast of thought, identical and stereotyped in all; and to hear their reiterated objections to the most precious truths of Christianity, one needs to be enjoying and displaying a living faith in Christ, and our constant resort his bosom.

THE MEN WANTED.

In seeking to enlist labourers for this field, it is well to state that it needs peculiar gifts, and all circumstances connected with the field, locality, language, &c., should be well weighed at the outset. Kabyle must be learnt on the spot, but Arabic can be prosecuted in Cambridge as well as in London. In Cambridge, Professors Robertson Smith, and Wright, can teach both the classical and colloquial Arabic, and even ladies can avail themselves of their lectures. The contents of the Koran should be studied, for amongst the twenty different countries and languages where Mohamedanism prevails, all men of some education can read it.

Young men are wanted without encumbrances. Medicine, or some knowledge of it, is a great auxiliary; enterprising and energetic; able to take advantage of openings presented by the Lord for travel far and wide. They should be gracious and gentlemanly in manner, for they will meet with those who can appreciate good manners; brimful of love, and know how to show it, casting aside our habitual insular reserve; quick at repartee; the mind disciplined in the habit of learning languages. A moderate income, too, would be a benefit. But, above all, to be called of God, and divinely directed to this region, is the principal thing.

THE RELIGIOUS ASPECT OF THE WORK.

There is an unspeakable advantage in pursuing missionary work where there is no fear of the results. As in the Ottoman Empire, in Algeria one is safe under the French régime. It is true a convert may meet with opposition from his own family or village, but never violence.

One would never begin with controversy, but you quickly hear objections to the death of Christ, his Sonship, and the doctrine of the Trinity; at the same time, the admission of many Christian tenets gives a wonderfully advantageous platform from whence to set forth soul-saving truth. These for instance, the personality of God, the divine authority and inspiration of the Old and New Testaments, and the duty of Mohamedans to read them (see Sir W. Muir's manual of extracts of the Koran); the miraculous and divine birth of Jesus, who is there declared, Sura iv. 169, to be "God's Word which He cast into the bosom of Mary;" the admission of Jesus being the appointed Judge of mankind—everywhere there is an expectation of his speedy coming!—(this may be used with powerful effect to stimulate attention and arouse the conscience); the numerous miracles of Jesus, the great Physician and Healer.

The great desideratum is to awaken the people to a sense of sin, so as to feel the need of a Divine Saviour, whose death is an atonement for it; but in the denial of his death the Koran is in contradiction with itself. It is denied in Sura iv. 156, and affirmed in Sura iii. 48, and xix. 34. But the great and overwhelming difficulty with them is the Christian doctrine of the Trinity. Nothing is so undesirable as to begin with so difficult a subject, but when it is brought forward, it must be fully and candidly met, and may be done satisfactorily to their minds. It has been frequently met in the following manner:—An objector observes, "You associate other gods with the one only God." Reply: "Listen, and you will understand. You acknowledge, as an essential attribute of God, that He is the primary cause and source of all things?" "Yes." "You acknowledge the Word?" "Yes." "You acknowledge the Spirit?" "Yes." "Could you say, therefore, that you adore three Gods?" Answer: "That would be an impiety and an atrocious calumny." "Well, then, what you call the primary cause, we call Father; that which you call Word, we also call Word or Son; that which you call Spirit, we call Spirit like you. And instead of saying, 'In the name of the primary cause, of the Word, and the Spirit, one only God,' we say, 'In the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, one only God.'" "Then you do not understand these words," says the objector, "Father and Son, in a carnal sense?" Answer: "God forbid! we understand it in a spiritual manner." Objector: "Then I withdraw my accusation, and you adore but one God."

To an intelligent Mohamedan, the admission of Jesus being the Divine Word would, if well-considered, lead to the conclusion of his divinity; and such was the case, to an extraordinary extent, 350 years past, at Constantinople, when many who acknowledged the divinity of Jesus took the name of Capmessihi (friend of the good Messiah), and for his public confession of this faith, a celebrated Oulema, Cabiz Effendi, was martyred.

LADY MISSIONARIES FOR THE WOMEN.

In speaking of ladies preparing for evangelisation in this field, it is a vast and separate work. There is nothing to brighten the existence of these poor women. A lady would not be forbidden to enter their homes, and could cheer many a poor desolate one, living and dying without the knowledge of a loving and sympathising Saviour, receiving, it is true, some respect if she be the mother of a son, but being usually a laborious drudge.

How many Christian sisters there are whose lives at home are often spent without a definite object, when a glorious work here opens before them, where they might glorify the Saviour, and gather sheaves for eternity. This is no mere experiment. Such a work can be engaged in entirely amongst the natives. An English lady has built a house amongst a Kabyle mountain tribe, and, assisted by her maid and an English lady friend, has a most interesting work for women and girls. Again, two ladies have recently gone to Arzila, on the coast of Morocco, and live amongst the people without fear. They have great access to the women, and are able to administer medicine, which attracts numbers of men, as well as women, in the town, and from the neighbouring villages.

We may well despair of ourselves in looking at this great work. Let us, then, put ourselves out of the question, and look to the Lord, whose work it is. He may accomplish something to astonish us, as we have seen in woman's work in the China Inland Mission. George Pearse.

MR. A. J. BRIDGES, of the 1st Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, now at Maritzburg, Natal, thanks the many kind friends who have supplied him with packets of Gospel and temperance literature. The papers are well received, and he is distributing them amongst the men of other corps as well as his own. He would be glad of further supplies.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE.—Prayer for blessing on the following special evangelistic efforts:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, at Kirk Andreas, Isle of Man, June 5 to 19.——Special mission at the Wesleyan Chapel, Morden Wharf, Greenwich, by Miss Caroline Elliott, commencing on June 5.——For special blessing on our out-door meetings at Westminster.——For Saxlingham and its vicinity, that the Lord would continue and increase his work there, and provide a suited place for meetings.——Praise for much blessing given on evangelistic work in villages near Northampton.

"AS A LITTLE CHILD."

By MISS EMILY SARAH HOLT.*

Father Thomas was by nature a quiet man. His temper was gentle and even; he hated everything like noise and bustle; far more, tumult and quarrelling. He was not fond even of conversation, except now and then as a pleasant variety to a quiet life, full of thinking and reading. A man of this sort is generally an innocent man—by which I mean, a man who does no harm to his neighbours: and considering how many men and women spend their lives in doing their neighbours harm of one sort or another, that is a good deal to say of any man. But there is another point to be taken into account—namely, What good does such a man do? Why, no more than a chrysalis. And he is a poor specimen of manhood who is content to be of no more use in the world than a chrysalis, and to be as little missed when he goes out of it.

This was the point which troubled Father Thomas's meditations. It was as if an angel had come down to him, and pointed to the old smithy on the green, and said, "What are you doing for those people? God will demand an account of their souls some day, and from somebody. Are you not your brother's keeper?" Hitherto Father Thomas had gone on very comfortably, with a reflection which serves a great many of us to excuse our pride or our laziness—I wish it might never be heard again from human lips—"It is not my place." It was true, in one sense. The smithy was in Newport parish, and Father Thomas belonged to the Cathedral. He tried to quiet the angel—which was really his own conscience—with the thought that he had no business to intrude into somebody else's parish. But the angel would not be quiet.

"Will God take that answer at the Judgment Day?" he said. "You know very well that the vicar of Newport is an idle, careless man, who never troubles himself about the souls of his people: that so long as you observe the proper forms of civility, and ask his leave to visit these people, he will give it you in a minute, and be glad enough to think he is saved the trouble. That is the truth, and you know it."

Now, it is very unpleasant when one's conscience says in that blunt, downright, cutting way, "You know it;" and Father Thomas found it so. He made a few more excuses, which his conscience blew to the winds before they were well finished; and at last it laid hold of him, as it were, by the shoulders, and said, "Look there!"

Father Thomas looked there—at the cross which then hung in every clergyman's room. There were two lines carved on the wood at the bottom of this—lines which it was then not unusual to put at the bottom of these crosses.

This did I for thee;
What dost thou for Me?

"Look there!" cried the Angel Conscience. "Christ bore that heavy cross for you—bore the reviling and the agony, the spitting, the scourging, and the shame—and you won't face the Vicar of Newport for Him! You can't walk half a mile, and ask a civil question of a man from whom you expect a civil answer, for love of the Man who came down all the way from heaven to earth, and endured all the contradiction of sinners for three-and-thirty years, and faced all the malice of the devil, for the love of you! Are you ashamed of yourself, Thomas de Vaux, or are you not?"

When it reached that point Father Thomas was painting in a book. Books in those days were often ornamented with very beautiful paintings; and the one on which the priest was working represented Peter denying Christ in the High Priest's palace. He had just painted one side of Peter's hair, but the other side was still blank. But when the Angel asked that question down went the brush.

"Lord, pardon thy servant!" said Father Thomas, humbly. "I am not worthy to carry so much as the corner of thy cross after Thee. But I will take it up, and go forth. Indeed, I did not know I was such a selfish, lazy, ease-loving man as I am!"

St. Peter had to put up with only half his hair for the rest of that day, for Father Thomas determinately washed and wiped his brush, threw a cloth over his book and painting tools to keep them from the dust, put on his fur cap, and went off to see the Vicar of Newport.

When a man braces himself up to do something which he does not like for the love of God, sometimes God makes it a great deal easier and less disagreeable than he expected to find it. The Vicar was just coming out of his door as Father Thomas reached it.

"A fine day—peace be with thee!" said he. "Whither go you, brother?"

"May I have your leave, Father, to visit one of your parishioners—the smith that dwells about a mile hence, on the Newport road?"

"The saints love you! you may visit every man Jack of my parishioners, and take my blessing with you!" said the Vicar, with a hearty laugh. "I am not over fond of that same visiting of smiths and tailors, and fellows of that sort. I never know what to say to them, save hear confession, and they never have nought to say to me. You are cut from another quality of stuff, I reckon. Go your way, Brother Thomas, and make decent Christians of them if you can. There's a she-bear lives there: I wish you luck with her."

And with a farewell nod, the careless Vicar strode away.

"And into such hands as these, men's souls are given!" thought Father Thomas. "Lord, purify thy Church! Ah, dear old Bishop! You might well weep in dying."

He walked on rapidly till he came within sight of the forge. Daniel Greensmith's ringing blows on the anvil grew more and more distinct, and at last the words he was singing as he worked came to the priest's ears:—

All things turn unto decay,
Fall, and die, and pass away.
Sinketh tower and droppeth wall,
Cloth shall fray and horse shall fall,
Flesh shall die and iron rust,
Pass and perish all things must.
Well I understand and say,
All shall die, both priest and lay;
And small time, for praise or blame,
When man dieth, lives his fame.*

Father Thomas stopped beside the anvil, but the smith's back was turned, so that he did not see him.

* * * * *

"I trust, my son, thou wilt some day find thee in heaven, not by mistake," said the priest. "But if so, Daniel, thou must have a care to go the right road thither."

"Which road's that, Father?"

"It is a straight road, my son, and it is a narrow road. And the door to it goes right through the cross whereon Jesus Christ died for thee and me. Daniel, dost thou love the Lord Jesus?"

"Well, you see, Father, I'm not much acquainted wi' Him. He's a great way up, and I'm down here i' t' smithy."

"He will come down here and abide with thee, my son, if thou wilt but ask Him. So dear He loveth man, that He will come any whither on earth save into sin, if so be He may have man's company. 'Greater love than this hath no man, that he give his life for his friends.'"

"Well, that stands to reason," said Dan. "When man gives his life, he gives all there is of him."

"Thou sayest well. And is it hard to love a man that giveth his life to save thine?"

"I reckon it 'd be harder to help it, Father."

Father Thomas turned as if to go. "My son," said he, "wilt thou let the Lord Jesus say to the angels round his throne, 'I gave all there was of Me for Daniel Greensmith, and he doth not love Me for it?'"

The big smith had never had such an idea presented to him before. His simple, transparent, child-like nature came up into his eyes, and ran over. Men did not think it in those earlier ages any discredit to their manliness to let their hearts be seen. Perhaps they were wiser than we are.

"Eh, Father, but you never mean it 'd be like that?" cried poor Dan. "Somehow, it never come real to me like as you've put it. Do you mean 'at He cares—that it makes any matter to Him up yonder—whether old Dan at t' smithy loves Him or not? I'm no-but a common smith. There's hundreds just like me. Does He really care, think you?"

"Thou art a man," said the priest, "and it was for men Christ died. And there is none other of thee, though there were millions like thee. Is a true mother content with any babe in exchange for her own, because there are hundreds of babes in the world? Nay, Daniel Greensmith, it was for thee the Lord Christ shed his blood on the cruel cross, and it is thyself whose love and thanksgivings He will miss, though all the harps of all the angels make music around his ear. Shall He miss them any longer, my son?"

Once more Dan threw aside the big hammer—this time on the inner side of the smithy.

"Father," said he, "you've knocked me clean o'er. I never knowed till now as it were real."

"As a little child!" said Father Thomas to himself as he went back to Lincoln.

THE SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.

A large number of ladies and gentlemen assembled in the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, Pimlico, on Friday afternoon, to hear something of the noble work which Miss Child and her helpers are doing at the Sailors' Welcome Home, Ratcliff-highway. Sir Robert Phayre gave an account of a visit he had paid to the Home, which was exactly suited for Christian seamen, and, in the truest sense, a haven of refuge as well as a spiritual anchorage ground.

A West-end audience is rarely brought face to face with hardy toilers of the ocean who are members of Christ's army, and hearty was the reception given to the half-dozen members of Miss Child's "Christian Lifeboat Crew," as one by one they told, in simple yet touching language, of their conversion and of the preciousness of God's love. Many pleasant reminiscences were rehearsed of evenings spent in the "foc'sle." The most affecting testimony of all was that of the last speaker. He is a fireman, apparently about fifty years of age, and was brought to Christ at the Welcome Home two years ago. Here is his story in his own words: "I was one of the biggest drunkards that ever travelled the streets of London or Liverpool. For twenty years I was a slave to drink. I went to the Welcome Home after a mate, but I found the Saviour, and ever since that time I have loved and served Him. I have been fifteen or sixteen times in hospitals and asylums through drink, and I have tried to commit suicide at different times and in different forms; and nothing but the love and the mercy of God has saved me from hell and destruction."

Miss Child had intended to make a statement with regard to her work, but, as she observed, her sailor friends had spoken so well that it was quite unnecessary for her to say a word beyond appealing to the ladies present for assistance in providing bags for books for the sailors, and inviting Christian ladies who could devote their time to come and help in the work. Lord Radstock expressed the hope that the refreshing testimonies they had heard that afternoon would encourage them to live more definitely for God. He was afraid a great many people in the West-end are simply playing at Christianity. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and Mr. J. E. Mathieson bore warm testimony to the glorious results of the efforts of Miss Child, and those of the workers at the Strangers' Rest.

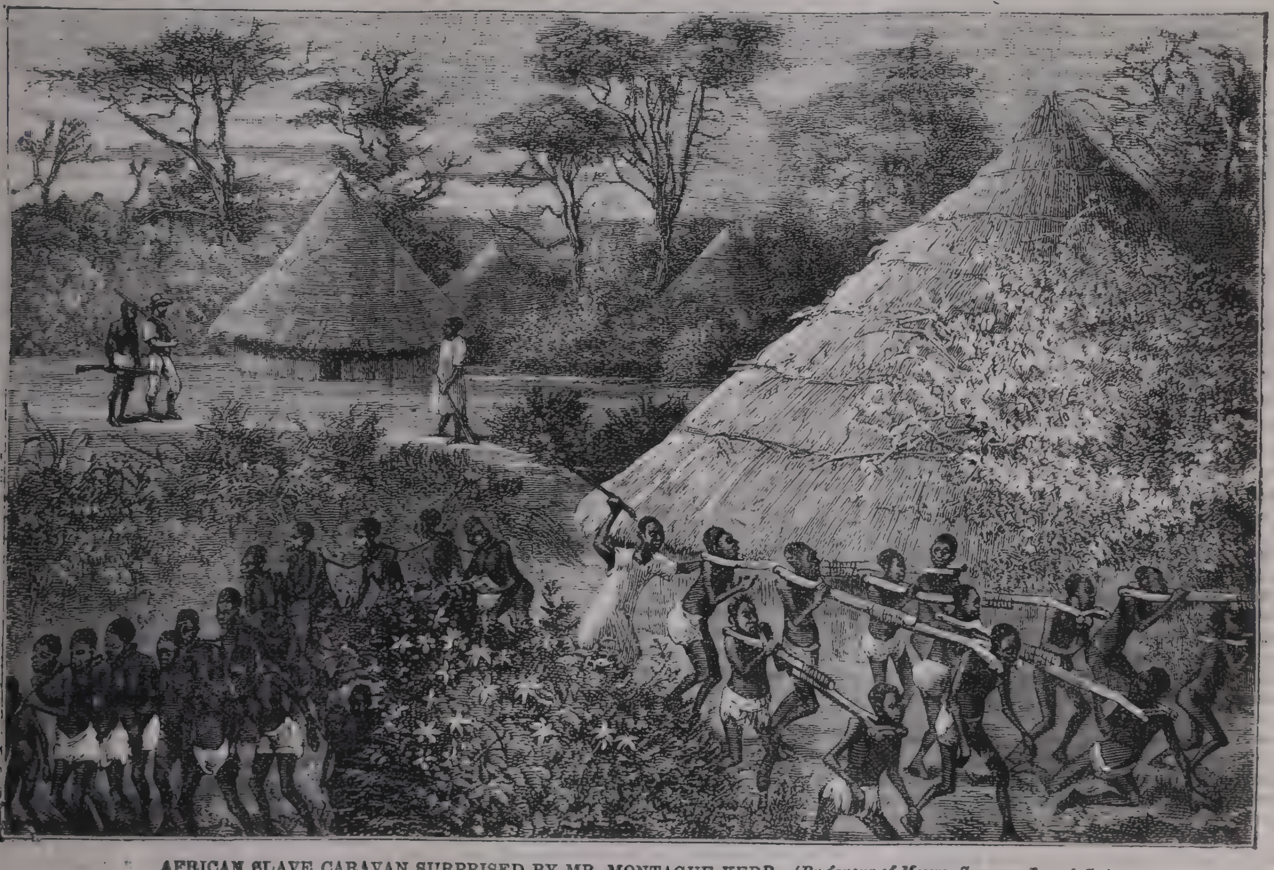
THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

In a recent circular the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society have collated some startling facts relating to the slave trade in Central and Eastern Africa :—

" The horrors depicted in the annexed engraving are not exaggerations. They occur daily throughout vast regions in Africa. Dr. Livingstone has fully described the horrible sufferings that are endured by the wretched slaves during their long journey to the coast—a journey often extending over several hundred miles ; and here we have a sketch made by a traveller on the spot. Let us hear Mr. Montague Kerr's description of what he saw and sketched in the Zambesi district only a year or two since :—

SLAVE YOKES.

" 'Every village shows the familiar sight of the slave in the yoke. After purchase the poor things are taken to the head-quarters of the East Coast traders, some of whom are constantly in this district. At the agents' the yoke is made secure, and it is not exaggeration to say that it is often allowed to remain upon a slave for nine months or a year, night and day, without being once taken off. Constant rubbing by the yoke upon the neck chafes the skin, and gradually ugly wounds begin to fester under the burning sunshine. Slaves, however, are to some extent looked after with a view to prevent serious bodily injury, the appearance of which would certainly depreciate their marketable value. Until all is ready for a start, the miserable slave sits waiting with all the compulsory and hopeless patience of bondage. Day after day he sees the sun rise and set. The dreary days pass by and are numbered into weeks and months, and still the victim is bound by the yoke about his neck.



AFRICAN SLAVE CARAVAN SURPRISED BY MR. MONTAGUE KERR. (By favour of Messrs. Sampson Low & Co.)

" 'I am not alone in thinking that in this wretched traffic in human lives there are horrors sufficient to cause the most devout to question the existence of mercy. It seems cruel that men should be begotten and should live with hearts as cold as winter's icy wind, and just as pitiless, and whose malignant oppression shows in the saddest form the dismal truth of man's inhumanity to man. Hard, indeed, it would be to show the slave that his life was anything beyond that of a beast. What else is it? Has he no hope? Yes, he has; with death his hope begins. What a satisfaction it must be for him to think that some day he must be free, away for ever from the tormenting tyranny of his fellow-men! The number of slaves in caravans vary greatly, for, like every other commodity, traffic is regulated by the unalterable laws of supply and demand. Prices also vary a good deal. When there is a good demand, a strong young man is worth from forty to sixty fathoms of Zanzibar cotton.

" 'The yoke is a young tree fixed to their necks, the weight of an implement depending upon the disposition of the slave ; for, should he be fractious, he will be tamed by the employment of the heaviest yoke. Those I saw were very heavy. This appliance of torture is made from the forked branches of a tree, about five or six feet long—some are much larger—and from three to four inches in diameter at the thickest part. Through each prong of the fork a hole is bored for the reception of an iron pin. This ready, a soft fibrous bark is wrapped round until the whole forms a thick collar of bark, making a sort of pad much rougher than a horse's collar. The forked branches vary in thickness, to suit docile or fractious subjects.'—The Far Interior. 2 vols. 32s. (Sampson Low & Co.)

" Mrs. Hore, the brave wife of a missionary in Central Africa, travelling through a district far to the north of that visited by Mr. Kerr, was shocked, as he was, at passing through the grim relics of slave caravans 'Every now and then I saw curious dark objects lying on or beside the path, and shortly afterwards became aware that they were the dead bodies of helpless laggards from the various hungry caravans that had passed that way. The heat and drought had been so great that these bodies were perfectly hardened and preserved. It was a terrible sight, which suggested horrors worse than mere death in connection with the diabolical system of man-hunting, and the driving of the victims in herds, on the speculation of a good percentage surviving to arrive at market. I do not mean to describe the horrors of the slave traffic, for I fear I cannot bring about the effects which so many more eloquent witnesses have failed to produce ; but I must discharge my conscience of this duty to solemnly remind and warn whoever in Christian and civilised lands may read this book, that inner Africa is as much as ever given over to all the horrors of the slave traffic so often and ably described.'—To Tanganyika in a Bath Chair. (Sampson Low & Co.)

" Many persons may be tempted to turn away from this picture as one so dark, and so hopeless, as to forbid all remedy. It may, however, be urged in reply, that scarcely thirty years have passed away since the Western half of Africa was desolated by a slave-trade which sent not less than seventy thousand slaves annually to the plantations of the new world, and this trade was accompanied by those horrors of the middle passage which rivalled the agonies of the long march to the coast. The extinction of that traffic is the grand result of the labours of the early workers in the Anti-Slavery cause, and entitles their successors to say : 'Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.' Every man, woman and child may help in the efforts made to 'heal this open sore of the world' by sending their mite to the Anti-Slavery Society, which has its existence for the object for which Livingstone laid down his life. Ethiopia still stretches out her hands unto God." The secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society is Mr. Chas. H Allen, 55, New Broad-street, London, E.C.

An address drawn up by the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society has been forwarded by the hands of Mr. Donald Mackenzie to the Sultan of Morocco. The address contains an earnest prayer that His Highness will prevent his subjects from carrying on the slave trade, and will forbid the separation of families in all the slave markets of Morocco, as well as the cruel and disgraceful mutilation of children which now exists.

Spring Anniversaries.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

(Exeter Hall, May 23: Mr. George Williams, Chairman.)

A gratifying fact mentioned by the Chairman is that a public-house which for years corrupted the people of the neighbourhood has been acquired by the Community, and is now converted into a prayer-house. Mr. James Atkinson, secretary, said there are eleven workhouses, besides casual wards, under regular weekly visitation, and about twelve thousand persons are thus brought under the sound of the Gospel; and from time to time there have been many satisfactory cases of reformation and conversion. Thirty lodging-houses are regularly visited. In the seven mission halls, worked by the Community, 2500 services were last year conducted. Upwards of 20,000 free meals were given, nearly 5000 men were gathered in from the streets and provided with temporary shelter and assistance. Rev. Prebendary Billing bore grateful testimony to the value of the work done by the Mission. Mr. F. A. Bevan said he knew well there was no work which goes further than this in the direction of helping and saving those who most need sympathy and help. Revs. J. de Kewer Williams, R. P. Downes, and W. J. Dawson each added his quota of testimony to the importance of the Society's work.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

(Conference Hall, May 26.)

The annual meetings of this Mission, held last week, and presided over in the afternoon by Mr. George Williams, and in the evening by Mr. T. A. Denny, were seasons of refreshing, and well calculated not only to stir up interest in this as well as other missionary efforts, but to strengthen faith. Mr. Denny showed how this Mission, under the management of God Himself, he reverently affirmed, through his servant Mr. Hudson Taylor, had prospered, and this for the very reason that God's servants had fully trusted Him. Our eyes, he said, have been turned too much homeward for many a year, and there has been a fearful lack of effort on behalf of our foreign brethren. But God is waking up Christians to a sense of their plain duty on this point, and is thrusting forth many from amongst those who formerly never thought that they were called to leave these shores as missionaries to the heathen. One of the difficulties in connection with this part of the work is that of discriminating between the very large number of those who offer themselves. It is a good thing, as Mr. Taylor had done, to thrust out into deep water and to trust God for everything. Narrowness of faith stints the usefulness of the Church; all things are possible to those who believe.

Mr. Broomhall had again a very encouraging report to present. On this twenty-first anniversary they could rejoice over a missionary staff numbering altogether, including forty-three wives of missionaries, most of whom were missionaries before they were married, 225; and, besides these, there were 117 paid native helpers. The work is carried on in fourteen provinces, in which there are fifty-two regular stations and fifty-six out-stations. Since the commencement of the year, twenty-six new missionaries have been sent out, and twenty-one others have already been accepted towards the hundred which they are believing for. Speaking of income, Mr. Broomhall added that there had been an increase of nearly £3000 in the amount received up to this time as compared with last year. Following up Mr. Denny's remarks as to the difficulty of selecting the right persons as missionaries, he begged that in their prayers for the Mission they would not forget to ask that those who had to decide in this matter might know the will of the Lord in regard to each one.

Mr. Hudson Taylor, speaking of the pleasure of being again at home and seeing so many friends, said God's promise that those who left home and kindred for his sake and the Gospel's should be repaid a hundredfold, had been wonderfully fulfilled to him. God's hundredfold had indeed been greatly increased; He had given him a thousandfold for the brethren and sisters, wife and children, he left behind. In thinking of all who are fellow-members with Christ, he could scarcely express his gratitude to God for bringing him into such a household, where is all that is choice and good, pure, beautiful, and grand. Reminding the audience of the vast number who every quarter of hour, in China, India, and Africa, are passing into a Christless grave, he said we must risk something if these are to be saved. When two ships have come into collision, every other consideration gives place to the one paramount effort to save the lives of those in danger. Christians also should have this intense, earnest desire to save the heathen, who are perishing by thousands every hour, and for whom, therefore, if anything is to be done, it must be done promptly. We have to praise God for 2438 persons who have confessed Christ in baptism in connection with the work of this Mission since its formation. To some this might seem a small number for so many years' labour, but the difficulties in opening up some provinces were very great. One brother for six years lived a homeless life in travelling from city to city of two provinces trying to get a settlement. Yet, though there was no direct fruit, he is not discouraged, for not only has God revealed Himself to him in a wonderful way, but in all these places the Word has been preached and tracts and other Gospel messages have been left, of which for certain there will be fruit. In another province it was years before a church was formed, but last year the missionary had the joy of baptizing ten converts.

Mr. Taylor then went on to speak of the early days of the Mission; of how he was led to face the serious problem presented by the vast country then almost entirely without the Gospel light, and of how, after vainly waiting two years hoping that others would take up the work, he determined to do so himself. He enlarged also on the well-known principles on which the work was commenced and has since been carried on, not the least important of which is the union of members of several denominations, and of various ability fitting them for different spheres of labour in this grand work. Last year, he continued, the number baptized, according to the reports already received, was 402, but as some reports had not yet come in, the probability is the actual number is about 450. This is a much larger number than in any previous year, and we thank God for it. Two telegrams have quite recently come to hand, the one telling that in the province of Shan-si nearly two hundred were added to the Church last year, and the other that some friend in China had donated £1000 to the Mission. Then, as showing the devotion of some of these Chinese Christians, Mr. Taylor mentioned the case of one whom he invited to dine with him. The invitation was declined for this reason:—It was afterwards discovered that this friend had for a long time set apart that one day in the week as a day of fasting and prayer for the conversion of his mother and other members of his family.

Rev. H. W. Hunt, who has for some years been labouring in the north-west of China, next gave a brief description of how he, sometimes accompanied by his wife, itinerated in the two provinces referred to by Mr. Taylor. Preaching in the market towns, he said, is very satisfactory work, for large numbers of people come from long distances, and are readily attracted by the singing of hymns, and then listen to the preaching of the Gospel, which in many known cases they have carried back with them to their homes, and has there brought forth fruit. Rev. W. Coope also spoke of his work in the province of Gan-hwuy, and asked the prayers of all for that Christian Chinaman who, as mentioned by Mr. Taylor, had been fasting and praying every week for the conversion of his mother. In that province, now, there are five stations and five out-stations, and last year fifty-five natives were baptized. This year, he trusted, there will be at least two hundred.

Rev. Thomas Champness, in the course of a stirring address, said the world will never be saved by the parsons, and strongly pleaded for a much larger use on the part of the Church of lay agency on the lines laid down in the pamphlet he has just issued, entitled, "Will it Hurt the Ministers?"

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe again set forth the duty of the Church to the regions beyond, and asked, in reference to the announcement that Miss Campbell, who is well known as a Mildmay worker, is going out to China, whether any thought Mildmay would be the poorer on that account? On the contrary, he believed in that Scripture which says, "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

Rev. Arthur Eason also gave some account of his work in the province of Yun-nan.

GRAY'S YARD RAGGED CHURCH.

(Burlington Hall, May 24: Mr. F. A. Bevan, Chairman.)

A very interesting résumé was given by Mr. A. Fraser of the origin of this unique Mission fifty-two years ago, and its wonderful progress. Last two years, he said, they had been in low water, financially, and had not gone to the expense of a report, but there had been plenty to write about. The work of the ragged school with which he was chiefly connected, is real and lasting, though quiet and unsensational. Taking children and adults together, some thousand souls are dealt with, and preached to every Lord's Day. There are now teachers in the school who were scholars at a previous period. From different parts of the world come testimonies to the fruit of the work. The ragged church, said Mr. Fraser, attended by 400 to 500 of the poorest of the poor, shows a sorrowful sight, Sunday by Sunday; and no one who has ever seen it could quarrel with the weekly dole of bread and coffee. "A very lawful bait," added Mr. Gough. As to money matters, Mr. Fraser stated that a letter by Mr. Denham Smith, in our columns some time since, had materially helped in clearing off a deficit, and now they were in the comparatively happy position of being not more than £20 in debt. As being specially responsible for the conduct of the ragged church, Mr. P. Gough referred to encouraging cases of conversion, in some cases found out years after the seed of truth had been sown. The congregations he described as "walking rag-shops." Many have been saved from suicide. "Oh, if we had some fund from which we could relieve some of the destitute and deserving ones who cross our path; it would be money well spent." A happy part of the Mission operations is the after-work on the Sunday afternoons, when Christian friends drop in and converse with any of the men who show signs of contrition. The New Year's breakfasts have grown so much, that the accommodation utterly fails. Mr. Gough wants to signalise the coming Jubilee by giving a substantial meal on Sunday morning to these poor outcasts.

Referring to the thin audience, and the coincidence of the observance of the Queen's birthday, Mr. Bevan said there were crowds in the street outside, gaping at bits of glass with gas behind them, who would be much better employed if they came and heard of the work at Gray's Yard. The children of the school, a contingent of whom were present, were the best proof of the blessedness of the work. Dr. Fraser had a severe hit at certain prevailing socialistic ideas. By no leagues, or laws, he said, can you expel sin, or unthrift, or intemperance from the world, and so long as these things exist, there will be poverty and misery. But at any rate the innocent and suffering children ought to be looked after. Colonel Puget thought the congregations at Gray's Yard were splendid examples of "Just as I am"; he bore the warmest tribute from personal experience to the genuine character of the work. A strenuous appea followed from Dr. S. O. Habershon, on behalf o the proposed new building, details of which were given in a recent issue. There can be no doub

Saviour's mission to the world, "to seek and to save the lost."

An interesting feature of the meeting was the presentation of prizes by the Ragged School Union, to boys and girls who have, with credit, retained their situations for a certain length of time.

MRS MEREDITH'S MISSION.

(Morley Hall, May 26: Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, Chairman.)

THE Medical Mission for Women and Children in Clapham-road is but one of the branches of work to which Mrs. Meredith has devoted her life, and which are managed by the organisation known as the Evangelical Church of England Sisters. Other branches are the Missionary Institute for Women, the Mercy House Prison Mission, and Schools for Girls.

The statement presented at the annual meeting of the first-named was very encouraging. Miss Mead, one of the sisters, who is shortly going out as a medical missionary, read an interesting paper on the Medical Mission work, the object of which is to supply the physical needs of sick women and children, and to promote their highest spiritual interests by preaching the Gospel to them. There are two qualified medical women, assisted by female medical students, who are in training for Medical Mission work in India and other countries. Miss Mead gratefully acknowledged the spiritual blessing she has received while in training at the Home.

Miss Meredith's account of her work showed her deep sympathy with prison women and their children, as with others in distress, for whom she warmly pleaded. The salvation of the women is kept as the real end in view, and her experience, she said, is that the women are more in need generally of spiritual counsel than of medical and professional advice. Rev. J. Campbell Colquhoun, Rev. Mr. Mapleson, an American medical missionary, and Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston bore testimony to the importance of medical work as an adjunct to Christian effort in the missionary field, and to the truly valuable character of this Institution.

BRITISH WOMEN & TEMPERANCE.

(Memorial Hall, May 24: Mrs. Chant in the chair.)

It was pleasant, as a grateful variation from he usual order of things, to see the platform in he possession of ladies, and the proceedings of he evening certainly lost nothing of dignity or power in their hands. The business part was soon disposed of. Miss Fowler (hon. sec.) stated hat during the year there has been an addition of forty-one to the number of affiliated societies, and that there are now 359 in union with this Association. In the animated address which followed were to be found both "the feast of reason, and the flow of soul." Mrs. Chant spoke of the jubilation of the present time, and if there are some who look out upon the present state of he world with a sort of despair, she, at any rate, is not amongst them. British women, she said, have been marching on steadily for many years. Their work means the taking away from he sum of human misery, and adding immensely o the happiness of mankind. Mrs. Lewis, in an impressive address, said that till five years ago, when a mission was held in Blackburn, she had taken no active interest in temperance work. Then she took a great deal of interest in many of the men who signed the pledge, and followed up this work afterwards. Subsequently she tarted a society on the lines laid down by onathan Lees fifty years ago. The result has een most blessed. Every week the meeting is ttended by between 400 and 500 persons. Drunkards are continually being converted by he testimony of those who were once like themelves.

In a fervent appeal to those ladies who think heir duties begin and end at home, Mrs. Lewis eclared that she had never known what true appiness was till she went out to seek that of others. Mrs. Ward Pool and Mrs. Burroughes contributed much to the feast of reason, seeking to persuade those who have not yet put away from them the fatal cup.

The presentation of a testimonial to Mrs. Bright Lucas, the president of the Association, was not least in interest, to the increase of which Miss Tod, of Belfast, and Mrs. H. W. Smith, from America, gracefully contributed by their kindly words. The testimonial consisted of a cheque for £260 (which is to be used as the nucleus of an endowment fund for forwarding the work of the Association), and a beautifully illuminated address on satin, which Mrs. Lucas warmly acknowledged. Several prominent leaders of the temperance movement were present, amongst others, Mr. Raper, Mr. Rae, and Mr. Wm. Noble.

REFUGES FOR HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

(Exeter Hall, May 27: Earl of Jersey, Chairman.)

WITH seven hundred bright young faces on the platform, dull and cheerless as was the aspect of affairs out of doors, within it was cheerful enough. For upwards of an hour too these young people, under the leadership of Mr. Proudman, delighted the audience by singing in excellent voice and most harmoniously a selection of songs and hymns, the rendering of which, now soft and low as a whisper, and again awakening the utmost enthusiasm, showed how admirably they have been trained.

There are nearly one thousand boys and girls in the nine Homes, inclusive of the training-ships Chichester and Arethusa, under the management of the committee, and all these are fed, lodged, clothed, educated, and trained to earn their livelihood. Besides the refuge work, the committee support two day, two night, and two Sunday ragged schools, and in these schools upwards of 300 boys and girls receive a religious and useful education. There were 372 new admissions to the various Homes during the year, and Mr. Williams (the secretary), added to his abstract of the report the interesting statement that, notwithstanding the prevalent destitution, the number of applications for admission was not so great as in previous years, upon which a hope was built that the efforts of this and other similar institutions are sensibly affecting for good the mass of poverty. About one hundred and fifty boys have been sent to sea, more than one hundred have been placed in various situations on shore, thirty have been emigrated to Canada, and fifty girls have been placed out in service. An announcement received with much satisfaction, was to the effect that a new Boys' Refuge is about to be built in London. The site is in Shaftesbury-avenue, and the new Home will include the Ashley Club and Institute. In referring to this announcement the Chairman said they hoped to have a building which shall commend itself to all for the really good work that is done within its walls. It is intended to provide a refuge and a rescue for greater numbers than before, and also to extend a welcome to lads after they have left the school, so that they may know that an interest is still felt in their welfare. The work is essentially one of Christian sympathy, intended to raise the fallen, and to give another chance to those from whose lives hope had almost faded out, and as such he commended the institution to all.

Rev. H. Simon, in speaking of some features of the report, said he had been perfectly thrilled by reading letters from some of the boys who had left the Home, and were on board ship, or in Canada. These, some breathing the spirit of manly independence by expressing a determination to send home money to pay for the training they had received, and others full of a deep desire for the conversion of their brethren and sisters, spoke volumes for the good work done in these Homes. Mr. W. E. Hubbard said the new Home, to be called "Shaftesbury House," and the foundation-stone of which will be laid by the Prince of Wales on June 17, will be the best possible memorial of the late Earl Shaftesbury.

Rev. James Baillie spoke of the great value of the institution in training the boys to self-reliance, and of this grand work as being done by those whose hearts have been fired by love to Christ, and who, whilst others are writing down Christianity and writing poetry full of despair, are doing practical work of ministering to and caring for the orphans. Rev. R. Hawker also addressed the meeting in advocacy of the claims, not only of this institution, but of the homeless children, so many of whom are still to be found in our streets.

THE GOSPEL ON THE RACECOURSE.

EPSOM.

LAST week the great Epsom carnival was held. It is a foul blot upon our civilsation and our Christianity that this festival flourishes with unabated vigour. The only consolatory feature in connection therewith is the missionary enterprise it calls forth. For twenty-eight years Miss Annie J. Alexander has successfully carried out an aggressive effort which has now been reduced to a system. This year the work was begun by twenty men arriving at Epsom on Saturday evening, and holding a meeting in the open air. These were members of the Open-Air Mission, agents of the London City Mission, and a dozen members of the Clapham Gospel Male Choir. Sunday was devoted to preaching on the race-course and in the town, the Gospel Choir exercising a specal charm in bringing the people together. The members of the choir returned to London on Monday, but relays of preachers took their place. On the evening of that day the customary gipsy's tea-meeting was held in the Town Mission Room.

The races continued for four days. during which about 70,000 tracts, books, and Scripture cards were distributed, chiefly while the people were on their way to the course. Preaching was continued each evening in the town, and on the "Derby Day" a meeting was held on the course opposite the Grand Stand. The workers are agreed as to the increasing readiness of the people to take the tracts; and the absence of opposition to the preaching was singularly striking, this negative testimony speaking volumes for the value of this patient sowing beside all waters.

CHESTER.

The following is from Rev. Francis Jewell's report to the Open-air Mission:—I rejoice to report a good three days' work during the Chester races by eleven of us, including three city missionaries. We did not go on the racecourse, but took the main lines of streets leading to the course, and worked off our tracts and copies of the Scriptures. I had my Bible stall out. We made it our centre, and supplied ourselves with penny Testaments and Gospels, &c., to give away. But we had no trouble to sell them—only to a few we had any need to give the Testaments. Some people after having them came back and paid for them. We thus disposed of over 700 penny Testaments, besides multitudes of tracts. We also had a stock of temperance cards at the stall, and induced several to take the pledge. We had a splendid opportunity of talking to the people individually about their souls, and I am sure that good work was done. The addresses were well chosen and effective, and fetched the people in crowds, proving that God could make his word more attractive than all the follies and fashions of sin.

"THE MOUNTAIN STREAM."—Under this title the Highland Temperance League sends forth its seventh annual report, which is of a very encouraging character. In the seven Highland counties there are now 200 centres of temperance, from whence healing streams spread over the whole land. The League has three agents, who together have visited about two hundred places, and enrolled upwards of 1500 members. From all parts of the country there is abundant testimony as to the value of the work thus done by the League. Mr. A. Blackhall, 6, Drummond-street, Inverness, is the secretary.

SWEET REVENGE.

To have our revenge is a very great temptation to almost everybody. How often do we hear, if, indeed, we do not use such expressions as, "I'll pay you out"; "You wait a bit"; "You shall pay for that." Now this is wrong; (1) because it is contrary to God's instruction, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay it." (2) Because it is contrary to the example of Jesus, who, when He was reviled, reviled not again; who was ever forgiving the wrongs that were done to Him, and who when dying prayed for his enemies, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." (3) Because it leads to so much misery. From the spirit of revenge come slander, derision, strife, murder, war, and a whole string of evils. Many a young person has grown up cherishing this bad principle, and by carrying out its suggestions has broken the hearts of others, spent years in prison, and in the end come to the gallows. How much better to do as Jesus teaches us. "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you." "If thine enemy hunger feed him, if he thirst give him drink, for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head: be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." In illustration of this we give the following anecdote:—

The body of a widowed mother was laid in a pauper's coffin, plain, and unadorned; no flowers were laid on it; only a coarse shroud covered it, but her hair was laid decently back, and a sweet smile rested on her pale face. The day of burial came, the undertaker was about to screw down the coffin lid, when a poor boy standing by sobbed out, "I want to see my mother." "You cannot, get out of the way, boy. Why don't someone take the brat?" was the heartless reply of the stern man. "Only let me see my mother one minute," cried the child, seizing the side of the coffin, and as he looked into the stern man's face tears started and rolled down his cheeks, on which the bloom lingered. Oh, it was pitiful to hear him cry, "Only once, let me see my mother, only once." In a moment the hard-hearted man struck the boy back, so that he reeled with the blow. He stood and panted with grief, and, with eyes extended, lips open, and a fire flaming through his tears, he lifted up his hands in wild agony and cried in the most unchildlike accents, "When I am a man, I will kill you for that."

Years passed away; the senate house is crowded to suffocation. A man stands at the bar charged with an awful crime; the judge inquires, "Does no one appear in this man's defence?" All are silent. At length a young man steps forward with firm tread and pleads the cause of the friendless man. All are struck with the splendour of his great skill; and in the end the criminal is acquitted. Feeling his obligation to the stranger, he approached him and said, "May God reward you, sir, I cannot." "I want no thanks," replied the young man. "I—I believe you are unknown to me." "I will refresh your memory. Twenty years ago, you struck a broken-hearted boy away from his mother's coffin. I was that poor miserable boy." The man turned pale and asked, "Have you reserved me to take away my life?" "No, I have a sweeter revenge than that. I have saved the life of the man whose brutal conduct has rankled in my heart for twenty years; go, and remember the tears of a friendless child." The man bowed his head in shame, and went out from the presence of magnanimity as grand as it was incomprehensible to him. The noble young lawyer felt God's smile in his soul ever after. "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." This is the sweetest revenge. E. B.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF AUNT LUCK.*

I was born at Koi Tau, a village in Po Leng. My father was a store-keeper, and I was the youngest of seven children. When I was seven years old, I was betrothed, for two pounds, to a man at Nam Leng, a village a mile from my home. I had never seen the man, nor any of his family. I took nothing from home with me but the tunic and pair of trousers which I wore. My mother and the two go-betweens, who had acted as agents in my betrothal, led me to his house and left me there. I jumped up and down, and screamed to go back with my mother. My husband's mother told me not to cry, for my home was to be with her henceforth, and my husband's grandmother carried me on her back to please and quiet me, but I kept crying more or less for years. Indeed, I never really stopped crying until I had children of my own. In the family there was my husband's grandfather, grandmother, father, mother, uncles, aunts, five brothers, and four sisters-in-law. I was told which man was to be my husband, and though he was handsome I immediately disliked him, because he seemed so old to me, being nine years older than I.

I did not see my own mother again for three years, for she was afraid I would cry and be discontented if I saw her. During the day I spooled the yarn which the elder ones spun and wove into cloth. At this I worked from daylight until dark, only stopping to eat. I had plenty to eat, and was whipped only when I nodded over my spools. Once a year one of my brothers came to see if I was well. He stayed but a few minutes when he came, because it might make me homesick if he talked much with me. When I was eleven years old I went to my father's house and stayed four months, and did the same each year thereafter until I was married. I learned to spin and weave and sew and cook. All this time I never spoke to my betrothed husband, and he only spoke to me to tell me to do something. At fourteen, when his mother told me to do so, I became his wife. I cooked rice, fed the pigs, and did other work for the family.

My husband never called me by any name whatever. When he wanted me to do anything he said, "Here, you;" and of course I knew he meant me. When I was sixteen I had a little girl, and then another and another. The third I strangled when it was born, for I was frightened, and knew I should be hated for having so many girls. My husband was a good-natured man, and he was not very hard toward me. In all the forty years I lived with him he beat me only four or five times. These were occasions when I moved too slowly in serving him, and then answered back when he scolded me. There are not ten men in a thousand in China who do not beat their wives at all.

I never believed much in the gods in the temples, and we seldom went to worship there. Once, twice, and sometimes three times in a month, I and my husband and children, with many others, used to go on fixed days to the tops of the mountains, and worship the heavens and the earth. Sometimes it was the moon we went to worship, sometimes the sun, sometimes the thunder-god. Sometimes we went to one peak, sometimes to another; and, in the course of years, we went to nearly all the high peaks in and around our district. We spent from ten shillings to two pounds each time on our offerings. Sometimes my husband sold products of the farm, and sometimes I sold one of my fat pigs to get the money. We took rice, pork, tea, cakes, fruit, sugar, pies, everything that is nice to eat, and spread it out invitingly on the rocks, and burned incense and mock money. Immense centipedes, sent by the demons to see what was brought, and how many people came to worship, crawled out of the rocks and around the offerings and back into their holes again.

One by one the elders of our family, and all but three of my children, died. When I was fifty-four, that is ten years ago, my husband died also. After that I spent more time than ever worshipping upon the mountains, but I got sick, and had no strength. My nephew, Leng, who had heard the true doctrine, used to come often to see me, and tell me that there was only one God, and He was everywhere; that He made the sun to rise, the moon to change, the wind to blow, the rain to fall, and all that is. Little by little I believed what he said. As soon as I believed, I destroyed the censers we used in worshipping false gods. My sons saw me taking them out of the house, and asked me if I was not afraid to do it; but I told them that what I had myself set up I could myself take down, and they said no more. Then I prayed earnestly that I might have strength given me to come and be baptized; and when the next communion season came, I told Leng I was coming with him to Swatow. At that time Leng was the only Christian in Po Leng, and his mother and wife beat him for worshipping God, and their neighbours applauded them. Leng said I was too weak, and must not think of coming to Swatow; but I got up off my bed, and walked very slowly the whole forty miles, and when I got here the people said a dead woman had come.

Since then I have been in all the Po Leng villages, speaking the Gospel, and can walk fifteen or twenty miles a day. Nobody dares molest me when I speak of God, and those who do not believe keep silent and listen.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

The twentieth anniversary of the Central Services for South London was held at Hawkstone Hall, Kennington-road, on May 24. Mr. Tyler reported that since the last anniversary many children had professed faith in Christ by joining the Christian Band, and sixteen had become church members. Short addresses were given by Mr. Henry Lidstone, Mr. C. A. Swinfen, Mr. Henry Hutchinson, and Rev. H. Grainger. The earnest attention of the children, and their hearty singing, showed how fully they appreciated the meeting, many remarking at its close that this anniversary was the brightest and best that they remembered.

Mr. George Banaster had a week's meetings for boys and girls at Waterford from May 10 to 17, and there were very happy times, as one and another looked to Jesus, and found Him to be their Saviour and friend. Mr. Martin Hall has been at Graffham, St. Neots, Little Stukeley, and Sandy (Beds.), holding Scripture Union meetings, and hopes to be at Taplow, June 5; Maidenhead, June 6; Burbage, near Marlborough, June 8. Mr. H. W. Pewtress had a week's happy gatherings with the children at Grove Mission, Southwark, last week, telling them of Jesus and his love. Mr. Hutchinson has been at Baildon and Ripon.

Mr. Josiah Spiers commences a mission at Queen-street Schools, Woolwich, on June 6, in which seven schools are uniting, and asks our prayers that there may be a great blessing amongst the dear children there.

MR. MURPHY IN CHICAGO.—Mr. Murphy has continued his temperance work with all the fervour and success of two months ago. It is said that upwards of 17,000 men have donned the blue ribbon. A central temperance league has been formed, with more than 800 members, to carry on the work this summer, and if possible to make it a permanent feature in the work of the Evangelisation Society. Major Whittle is the active working president of the league; Messrs. Moody, Murphy, and Farwell, honorary presidents for life. Mr. Murphy has been at South Chicago several times, where his presence was greatly needed. In this city of saloons, as elsewhere, crowds gathered to hear him. While Messrs. Moody and Murphy have been the real leaders in the present evangelistic movement, the very important part in it taken by Rev. Alexander Paterson and Mr. E. W. Bliss should not be overlooked. Quite a large number of lay helpers have given a good deal of time to visitation and service in the inquiry-room.—New York Independent.

PIONEERING in NEW GUINEA

By JAMES CHALMERS, of NEW GUINEA.
With a Map, and Two Portraits, and Illustrations, Engraved by E. WHYMPER, from Photographs.

"A very instructive volume. Mr. Chalmers has been at work for many years in New Guinea as a missionary, and probably no white man is better known there, and certainly none is more loved and trusted by the natives. He has done much to smooth the way for our protectorate, and Sir Peter Scratchley spoke of him in the highest terms. His book is one that should interest both the student and the ordinary reader. Mr. Whymper's numerous illustrations add greatly to its beauty and its value."—The Times.

"What a comfort it is to find that the Bible saints, who now shine as stars in the firmament of heaven, were men of like passions with ourselves! They were not always saints: they sinned, and murmured, and rebelled—as we do. Heaven's rarest blades were not wrought of finer metal than that which is within our constitution. God's choicest vessels were not turned from superior earth to that of which we are made. The jewels which now lie at the foundation of the new Jerusalem were once obscure, un-named men of no finer texture than ourselves. Look to the quarry whence they were hewn, and the hole of the pit whence they were digged, and say if there was much to choose between their origin and your own. And then, take heart; for if God were able to take up such men as Jacob, and Simon Bar-Jona, and make of them princes and kings, surely He can do as much for you. The discipline may be keen as fire; but the result shall be glorious; and all eternity shall ring with the praises of Him who raises up the poor out of the dust, and lifts up the beggar from the dunghill, and makes them kings and priests unto God."—EXTRACT.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONFIRMED BRONCHITIS and BRONCHIAL CONSUMPTION—REMARKABLE CASE AT HULL.

The patient's name, Mr. Whattam—address: 25, Leonard-street, Beverley-road, Hull.

It is a little over three years since I first heard of this case, through Mrs. Lambert, a lady residing at 9, Walmsley-street, Hull. The patient had suffered for ten years. The attacks of bronchitis were becoming more frequent, and each one more severe. In the interim the cough and expectoration was most distressing. He could not lie down in bed, but was continually propped up in an arm-chair. Now clammy sweats came on. The patient was truly in a pitiable condition, and utterly prostrate. His wife adds to the above description:—"He has had several doctors, but they only relieve him slightly, and for a very short time. By what I have heard from several friends, I have great faith to believe he will be restored under your treatment."

Her "faith" was not in vain. The patient continued for nearly one year and a half under my treatment, during which time about five-and-twenty letters were written by me. The process of recovery, in a case of so confirmed a character, was, of course, slow, but was sure—and final recovery followed.

This remarkable case had almost passed from memory during the twelve months that followed, but the following letter, dated March 14, 1887, having been sent me, with a view to my publishing the case, I feel it important to bring it forward:—

"Dear Sir,—I beg to thank you, in the name of Mr. Whattam, for the very great good he has received. Three years ago his lungs were very bad indeed. He could scarcely have been worse. Under your treatment, health and strength have been restored, to the wonder of many, some of whom have, in consequence, sought the help of your excellent remedy.—E. J. Dearman."

To this letter Mr. Whattam attaches a postscript of earnest thanks, desiring that the particulars of this wonderful case may be made known.

PARIS THEATRICAL EMPLOYÉS.

During the recent visit of the Paris Hippodrome to London, over 120 French equestrians, male and female, by the invitation of the workers in the Theatrical Mission, met at Macready House; Mr. Courthope Todd heard subsequently that one of the principals received blessing through one of the addresses, and that all were favourably impressed with the kind hospitality shown them.

Thus the Lord opened a door for the extension of this special work to the Continental employés; several friends having suggested the advisability of a brief visit to the French capital, and contributed funds for the purpose, Mr. and Mrs. Todd have succeeded lately in establishing there a branch of the now well-known, and thoroughly appreciated Letter Mission. Daily text-books, evangelistic letters, and portions of God's Word in French have been circulated amongst the employees of the opera, the ill-fated Opera Comique, and innumerable other theatres, circuses, and cafés chantants.

Extracts from one or two replies will show the urgent need of such an effort. Translated they are as follows:—"I am a Catholic, but should like nothing better than to join a religious Society. In France we are put on one side; they do not trouble about us." "I am young, only eighteen, and very often dull and worried. I pray, but God does not listen to me; your letter recalled me to myself." Another refers to the fatality, by which so many in all countries are drawn to the stage, while light is thrown on the poor pay, the hard work, and the temptation to lead an immoral life to add to scanty earnings. Another's complaint is of "the bitterness of a life which I consider insupportable." Surely in such cases—

> Touched by a loving hand, weakened by kindness,
> Cords that were broken will vibrate once more.

Mr. and Mrs. Todd were struck with the modest demeanour of many of the French actresses, especially those engaged in circus life, and there can be no doubt that in Paris amongst this class there is "a great door and effectual": for, without exception, pleasure was manifested at the sympathetic interest taken in them. A foreign fund has, therefore, been opened at the Theatrical Mission Institute, and Gospel literature will be circulated amongst these Continental actresses according to the means placed at the Society's disposal.

Mr. Courthope Todd will be pleased to attend drawing-room meetings with a view to describing in detail this new branch of the Mission. All communications should be addressed to Macready House, Henrietta street, Covent-garden.

DEPTFORD JUBILEE RESCUE SOCIETY.—An effort is to be made on behalf of some of the hundreds of fallen girls in Deptford and the district. The Deptford Jubilee Rescue Society has been formed for the carrying out of this purpose, and the establishment of a large Home for these poor unfortunates is one of the propositions before it. But the committee do not propose to wait until this is ready. A Home, under the charge of an experienced and sympathetic matron, will be immediately opened, "the door of which shall never be closed, night nor day, against any girl who is willing to abandon her life of sin."

MONTREAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.—The fourth annual report of this Union stimulates hope in regard to the issue of the great conflict against strong drink. It reminds us that in the Province of Montreal alone there are sixty-seven Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, with over 3000 members; that in Ontario there are 170 more, with 5000 members; and that, including others in the United States. there are 200,000 praying women on the American Continent enlisted in the war against alcohol, These, again, are in active union with kindred bodies in this and other countries, the motto of all being "for God and home and humanity," and their object to unify the methods of woman's temperance work the world over. Every member of this wide-spreading organisation pledges herself to use all her influence to promote temperance. Last year nearly 300 pledges were taken by the Montreal Union, and the cause of temperance was advanced in many ways.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

At Aldersgate noon prayer-meeting on Tuesday last week, Pastor Fliedner, of Madrid, gave some interesting particulars of the progress of Christianity in Spain. One of our colporteurs, said Mr. Fliedner, sold a Bible some time since, and the priest rushed up to the man who had bought it, and, exclaiming, "These heretical books shall not come into the village," snatched it out of his hand, tore it, and threw it on the ground. The colporteur was stoned, and driven out of the village. Some weeks after, being obliged to pass through the village again, he hoped to do so unobserved, but almost immediately was recognised. "Are you not the man who sells Bibles?" he was asked, and, on his replying "Yes," instead of an angry outburst he received the invitation, "Well, then, come into our village, we want your books." The explanation of this changed manner was that the village grocer having wrapped up his goods in pages of the torn Bible, which had come into his hands, the people read those beautiful histories which they had never read before, and then had asked God to send the man back to them. Not only did he sell all the Bibles he had with him, but they made him stay with them two or three days to give them instruction.

Many illustrations might be given to show that the Bible is a living power, even without the living preacher. One, not long since made known, was mentioned. In one place a man bought the Gospel by Matthew. He was addicted to drink; but now, instead of going to the inn, he stayed at home and read the book. Soon he spoke of it to others, and quite a number of persons gathered to listen to him. Thus, without a minister or other help of any kind, from this one Gospel, a little evangelical congregation was formed. Some time after, this man died, and the priest refused to bury him, because he was "a man of the Book." Then the people appealed to Madrid, and in this way the little congregation became known.

Some persons, Mr. Fliedner said, were summoned before the magistrate by the priest, and, because they did not do as he told them, were condemned to ten days' imprisonment and to pay a fine of 50 francs. In the prison they were continually singing and praising God. After some days the judge came and asked if they were going to pay. They said they could not, but the next morning the judge appeared again and set them at liberty. The reason of this was that the priest had called on him the previous evening and told him that so many people gathered outside the prison to listen to the men singing, it was better they should be discharged, or he should lose all his congregation.

Mr. Fliedner spoke of his Children's Home, which has already become a nursery for training Gospel workers. In this Home there are now fifty children—thirty boys and twenty girls. At first he thought he would limit it to twenty, and one little applicant was kept waiting some time. But at last it seemed as if Jesus asked "Why do you not receive this child?" The only answer he could possibly give, implying that though God had given him enough for twenty children, He might not give enough for twenty-one, was so very unsatisfactory that, one after another, the number was increased. These children are carefully trained, and learn many Gospel hymns. Some time since he heard a painter singing one of these hymns whilst at his work. Many such illustrations might be added of the way in which in Spain the Gospel is permeating the minds of the people.

MR. F. E. MARSH, hitherto connected with the Evangelisation Society, has accepted a call from the Church at Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland, to be their pastor. Our readers will remember "Bethesda" as the scene of labour of the late Arthur A. Rees. Mr. Marsh asks prayer that he may be sustained and used of God in this new sphere of labour. His address is 11, Azalea-terrace, South Sunderland, Durham.

RURAL MISSION WORK.

A Conference on the subject of how to further this work was recently held at Exeter Hall. The gathering was a representative one, including Mr. W. H. Seagram (in the chair), Lord Radstock, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, several Y.M.C.A. secretaries, and well-known evangelists. There was a general agreement as to the great necessity for the work. As to the part in it that Y.M.C. Associations are taking, Mr. W. H. Mills said 116 associations in England and Wales report that they are carrying on rural mission work and open-air missions. The work, however, had to a great extent been confined hitherto to the larger towns; now it is felt that the villages should be systematically taken up, and with a variety of work all Christian young men could be utilised.

Various suggestions were made as to how best to carry out the purpose of the conference. Mr. Mathieson threw out a hint to the effect that Christians might choose villages for their summer holidays, and that much could be done by tract distribution. The formation of a Y.M.C.A. was one of the results of his last summer's trip to a village in Yorkshire. The subject will be brought before the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. at their next meeting.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN CHICAGO.

On May 8 (says a correspondent of the New York Independent) Mr. Moody was to open an Institute for the instruction of Christian workers in the doctrine of Scripture, in Church History in the best methods of missionary service in the great city. Professor Moorhead, of Xenia, O., a man of great natural ability, a fine Bible student, will have general charge of the work of instruction. He will be aided by several theological professors, and by Drs. Goodwin and McPherson. It is understood that the work with and among the churches is to be carried on through the summer. Major Whittle will have it in charge. He will be assisted by Messrs. Patterson and Bliss, and such other persons as may be necessary. Thus far there are no signs of diminishing interest in religious things. Apparently there is no reason why the revival should not continue through the summer.

Mr. Moody has secured a site for his training school at the corner of Ohio and St. Clair streets on the north side. This is in addition to previous gifts of 250,000 dollars for the school. Several annual subscriptions of 600 dollars for the support of Christian women as visitors in different sections of the city have also been obtained. When fifty of these subscriptions have been obtained the Evangelistic Society will be well established.

The Independent of May 19 has the following:—"Mr. Moody took his farewell of Chicago last week. Speaking in Farwell Hall of the results of his labours in the city, he stated that from 5000 to 10,000 people a day had been reached, and the work has never looked more promising than now. The previous week had been the most successful of all. As to his future plans, Mr. Moody said:—'At Northfield, Mass., next month, I have a conference of college students from over one hundred colleges, and I anticipate an attendance of upward of 1000 students. I will remain for some time in America, probably visiting the Old World at some later date. My labours this summer will be confined chiefly to my two schools and convention work.'"

BAND OF LOVE.—At a meeting at the Grove Mission-hall, Brookby's-walk, Homerton, last week, the following resolution was carried:—"That the efforts of the George Smith of Coalville Society and Band of Love to save destitute and neglected children, to rescue the outcast, and to promote brotherly love, are deserving of the sympathy and hearty co-operation of the Christian public."

☞ To prevent delay in the execution of orders, it is specially requested by the Publishers that all business letters may be directed to the firm (Morgan & Scott). Also that personal letters for either partner may be so marked.

☞ If this paper is not kept for reference, readers are requested to give it away, or send it to any minister, Sunday-school teacher, or other Christian, or to a workhouse, hospital, infirmary, or ship. Do not let it be made waste paper.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain portrait and sketch of Professor W. G. Blaikie, of the Free Church College, Edinburgh.

We are most thankful to say that Dr. Harry Guinness has telegraphed from Smyrna that the fever crisis is past, and his dear wife is improving in health. Mrs. Grattan Guinness writes, "Blessed be God! He has heard and answered prayer."

Mr. Wheatley, of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, does not confine his efforts solely to the reclamation of prisoners, on their release from custody. The other day he was the instrument of preventing a probable miscarriage of justice in the conviction of a man wholly innocent of the charge brought against him. If we had more of this truly Christian work, the ranks of our criminals would speedily be depleted.

We learn that Professor Henry Drummond will this year attend Mr. Moody's Summer School for students at Northfield. Any students in this country who purpose being present at the Conference, should without delay respond to the following note from Mr. Studd:—

> If those under-graduates who have determined to accept Mr. Moody's invitation will send me their names and addresses, and the £5 deposit necessary to secure a berth on a steamer, on or before June 10, I will gladly undertake to make the necessary arrangements for them; and, by applying for a number of berths together, I shall doubtless be able to secure better accommodation, at the lowest rates, than could be obtained by individual applicants. I might add that the cost of the entire trip (first class) need not exceed £50.—Yours truly, J. E. K. STUDD.

There is, perhaps, no better authority than Mr. Richard Jeffries with regard to village and town life in Sussex, but it is to be hoped that in his paper in the current number of Longman's Magazine, on "The Country Sunday," he has drawn more than usually upon his imagination. Unfortunately it is too true of other portions of England, as it is of some parts of Sussex, that "the tonsured priest, and the monastery, and the nunnery, and the mass, and the Virgin Mary, have grown to be a great power indeed in the English lanes;" but we cannot believe that Mr. Jeffries' description of the "chapel pastor," as he terms the Nonconformist minister, is anything but a highly-coloured caricature. Surely it cannot be that there are such unpleasant elements in the Sunday hospitality as those which Mr. Jeffries affirms are not local, "but common and understood," the "cognac bottle" and the "long clay pipe" being two of them! Mr. Jeffries' picture of the minister reads like an exaggerated page from Fielding's graphic delineation of the clergymen of Queen Anne's time, and we shall look anxiously for a refutation of the sweeping statements which it contains.

We have received from Colonel Paschkoff a deeply interesting narrative, relating to the imprisonment of two Christian brethren in Russia; we hope to give it in our next issue.

The Chinese Government are at last about to take the great forward step of introducing the railway system into their vast country. It is taken ostensibly in the interests of military arrangements and of trade, but it must have an important bearing on the future of missionary work. We fear it will at the same time familiarise the people of the interior with many European habits that are at present confined to the seaport cities.

We commend to our readers "The Last Prophecy: an Abridgment of the late Rev. E. B. Elliott's Horæ Apocalypticæ," of which Messrs. Nisbet & Co. have just issued a third edition. For, whatever their views, all students of prophecy should be familiar with those contained in an acknowledged text-book of the Historic or Protestant system of interpretation. Many who are unable or unwilling to devote time to the larger work will be glad of this abridgment, to which is added Mr. Elliott's last paper on "prophecy fulfilled and fulfilling." (5s.)

Some weeks ago a letter appeared in Truth, with an editorial endorsement, and was also wired to The New York World by "H. Labouchere," the purpose of which was to expose and condemn the cruelty said to be practised by Canadians upon little English emigrants committed to their trust. The letter was from "a lady who had ample opportunity of seeing how the children are treated, and who was an eyewitness of a scene of harrowing cruelty in the village of Woodville, North Ontario." A flat and unqualified contradiction is given in the Toronto Globe to this statement, signed "Wm. Cameron, Reeve of Woodville, County of Victoria," who says:—

> At a meeting of the Village Council it was unanimously declared to be a gross libel, as far as this village is concerned, and that there is not a word of truth in the whole letter. This village was never made a distributing point. The school-room scene never took place. The twins were never separated, except in the imagination of the writer; the whole story is a falsehood, and nothing ever occurred upon which such a story could be founded.

No denial could be more thorough and categorical, and, even if it should be argued that there must have been a mistake in the name of the village, it is sufficient to refer to hundreds of young men and women who went out as poor children, many of whom are married, and not ten per cent. of whom have turned out unsatisfactorily.

Professor Phelps has finely remarked that devotion should rather spring up spontaneously from an emotive state, than be "forced out in jets of sensibility on great occasions," and he has urged that there are many Christians whose lives have no deep subsoil of feeling from which prayer would be a natural growth. To this "clear-headed form of piety," to pray without ceasing is out of the question, there being a lack of sensitiveness to the objects of faith. All those who possess a religious temperament in which there is but little emotion miss much enjoyment in prayer, perhaps because they do not cultivate and cherish sensibility, and have learned to repress those impulses which spring from a loving heart.

"A medical mission," says Medical Missions at Home and Abroad, "ought to be planted in every district in London."

In the midst of the intellectual complexities of a time which has been aptly described as "bewildered by the range and number of its own acquisitions," it is refreshing to go to the childlike simplicity of statement of some of our old hymns. Next to the reading of the Inspired Volume and to prayer, there are few things more likely to soothe and calm a disturbed mind, and, now that our best and noblest compositions are so easily accessible, it may reasonably be hoped that the reading and study of hymns will in the future become more and more habitual in the Christian.

The effort to organise a College Mission in the East-end of London, to be supported by Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, has given rise to a suggestion that Trinity College, Dublin, should commence one in Belfast; the condition of "the lapsed masses" in that large town has of late been the theme of much animated discussion in the ecclesiastical papers. Surely, however, if missionary effort is needed, and there are no large towns in which there is not room for very much more, Belfast ought to be prepared to provide it locally, and doubtless will do so directly the need is recognised.

The publication a few days ago of "The Congregational Church Hymnal" (Hodder & Stoughton) marks an era in hymnology; for the new collection consists of no less than 775 metrical hymns, almost all of which are of a high order, and none of which, so far as we know, can be taken as representative of heterodox doctrine or opinion. It is interesting to note that Watts and Charles Wesley have been drawn from in the largest measure; Montgomery, Rawson, Bonar, and Monsell the next; Doddridge, Conder, Lyte, and Newton coming not very far behind. Some old favourites are missing, however—a fact to be deplored; and it may be questioned if it is wise to set aside hymns which have not only received the seal of the Universal Church, but which have become precious to thousands of Christians by reason of the memories which cluster around them, and around the tunes to which they have been set.

An American contemporary states that in Ethiopia "a people numbering about 200,000 have the Old Testament Scriptures in an Ethiopic Version, and still adhere rigidly to the Mosaic ceremonies and laws." They are the children of Hebrew immigrants, "who, in the time of the great dispersion, settled in Abyssinia and married wives of that nation." It is interesting to remember in connection with this fact that at the time of our Lord's sojourn on earth Ethiopians as well as Cyrenians came to Jerusalem to worship, as, for instance, Simon, upon whom the Lord's cross was laid, "that he might bear it after Jesus"; and the man "of great authority under Candace, Queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasures," and who was baptized by Philip in the desert. There is, however, a grand promise of a greater number who shall worship the Father, "neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem," and its fulfilment cannot be far distant. "Princes shall come out of Egypt, and Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God" (Ps. lxviii. 31).

Professor De Launay, whose deeply interesting Lectures on the Roman Catacombs have delighted and edified our readers, is about to visit and lecture in this country. The illustrations of the tombs, baptisteries, &c., which he uses in connection with the lectures, are the work of a nobleman who has been led to the Saviour by M. de Launay. We shall be pleased to receive communications for him, or they may be addressed to Mr. Bell, at the Tract Depot, 13, Cursitor-street, E.C.

Very remarkable missionary meetings were held in Trinity College, Dublin, in November, 1885, when forty students volunteered for the mission field. The movement is day by day progressing, and the guaranteed subscriptions now amount to £220 per annum, and the donations £374. It is proposed that the Trinity College Society should make itself responsible for the entire cost of the college at Fuh-chau, which is now under the charge of Rev. R. W. Stewart, and an appeal has been made to the students of Trinity not only in this respect but also for more volunteers for China.

More than 2000 people assembled in the Westbourne-grove Chapel on the occasion of Mr. Spurgeon's visit to Bayswater on Tuesday week, to preach on behalf of Mr. Frank White's building effort. Mr. Spurgeon seemed remarkably well, and preached with his old force and simplicity upon the atoning work of Christ. It was a rare sermon, and will long live in the memory of those present. The evident relish with which it was listened to by the great congregation, made up of all classes, high, low, rich, and poor, was a splendid testimony that the old, old story had not lost its power.

Rome is straining every nerve in China, and Rev. J. Lees, a deputation from that country, recently stated that the number of Chinese who are joining Rome is very large. He added that, seemingly, its funds were unlimited, and that "it adopted means in connection with its work which would cause a great outcry if adopted by Protestant missionaries." The same missionary says that the number of adherents to the Protestant faith now number 100,000, there having been 26,000 conversions last year as compared with 3000 in 1881. The number of missionaries had been increased from 350 to 534 in the past twelve years.

We were surprised to hear such an eminent Church historian as Bishop Lightfoot state in Exeter Hall the other evening, referring to the early triumphs of Christianity, that "twelve men alone spread the Gospel throughout the world, and changed the whole face of society." It would have been a physical impossibility for the twelve Apostles to do so, and no such task was imposed upon them. The command of our Lord was addressed to the whole company of believers, and we know that very soon after the day of Pentecost five thousand men (with as many women, in all probability) were scattered everywhere declaring the good tidings. It is this unscriptural idea of the exclusive character of the commission given to the twelve Apostles, that has produced the disastrous heresy of "Apostolic Succession"—a dogma, we take leave to say, which has done far more to hinder than to advance the spread of Christ's kingdom.

Mrs. Josephine Butler (The Close, Winchester) makes a strenuous appeal for the practical support of the public, in furthering the new crusade for abolishing legalised vice in the Colonies; and also in connection with rescue work at home.

In connection with the review to be found on another page of Mr. Hunt Cooke's charming exposition of the Book of Ecclesiastes, it is interesting to note the opinion of Mr. Rider Haggard, the popular novelist, given in the last issue of The British Weekly:—

> And there is one immortal work that moves me still more—a work that utters all the world's yearning anguish and disillusionment in one sorrow-laden and bitter cry, and whose stately music thrills like the voice of pines heard in the darkness of a midnight gale; and that is the Book of Ecclesiastes.

We are as strongly in favour of the prohibition of the deadly liquor-traffic as the most ardent disciple of the Maine Law. But we have grave doubts as to the wisdom, in the present circumstances of the temperance crusade in this country, of starting a separate "Prohibition party." As far as we can see, the result will be to divide the forces that are opposed to the drink evil, and this can only bring disaster to the cause. If temperance reformers of all shades were to show a united front in favour of a good measure of local option there would be a far better chance, we think, of securing more speedily the drastic remedy of national Prohibition.

The Keswick Convention for the deepening of spiritual life is fixed for July 25—30. We heartily rejoice in the individual spiritual benefit that has accrued in the past, and is certain to accrue in the future from these gatherings; but we confess we should like to see far more time devoted to such a pressing topic as the evangelisation of the heathen world. Such a Conference as that at Keswick, with its attendance of so many spiritually minded and devoted believers, ought to result year by year in a strong contingent of God-sent Gospellers for the whole earth. In these days of abounding privilege, such Conferences, with their special opportunities for meeting and influencing young Christians, must justify their existence by practical and beneficent results.

The gulf between rich and poor, which, to a great extent, is due to the operation of economic causes, would not only soon be bridged over but filled up, if, as Dr. Fairbairn has said, "we could all learn this simple but great principle of doing justice, of allowing each one to have his own. And if each one would make a just use of his own, it would temper and balance society, and it would then move on harmoniously and peacefully." These noble remedial measures, like most other true remedies for social unrest, are, however, to be found in a more condensed form in the utterances of Jesus, and we therefore come round to the almost self-evident proposition that it is to individual acceptance of, and obedience to, the teachings of Christ, that we must look for the salvation of society from those evils which at present look so threatening. Measures of law, which are to deal successfully with labour and wages problems and difficulties, must be based upon the Gospel, and those who strive for them, and enact them, must, even though unwilling to acknowledge the fact, be to a greater or lesser extent influenced by the Master's words.

Mr. Scott Moncrieff writes to make the appropriate suggestion that on June 21, the day fixed for the Jubilee service in Westminster Abbey, meetings should be held simultaneously at noon, not only in London, but throughout the land more or less, at which those desirous of doing so shall have the opportunity of assembling themselves together with our Queen, as it were, to wait upon God for his blessing upon her and her nation.

POWER AND RESPONSIBILITY.

The publication by The Pall Mall Gazette of the story of the Langworthy Marriage has a significance reaching far beyond the vindication of the lady who, with her child, has been so cruelly, so cowardly, and so maliciously wronged. It manifests the power of the Press to enable the weak, the oppressed, and the betrayed to appeal to the Public Conscience, to our common humanity, against the oppressor and the betrayer.

For there is an artificial professional conscience which leads to conduct which is inhuman—witness the readiness of lawyers to accept briefs on the side of the wicked against the innocent; and of surgeons to degrade themselves to outrages on the weaker sinner.

And the power of the Press involves its responsibility to do this; for it is a crime to have power to defend the right, and not to use the power. The Press has power to carry the appeal to the last and highest earthly tribunal, beyond the House of Lords to the people, of whom the Lords are but individuals. In publicity there is a power on the side of righteousness, than which there is no greater force among men. Evil doers fear it as they fear nothing else. They are more terrified at the present judgment of their fellow-men than at the future judgment of the Son of Man. Words more terrible to them were never spoken than those of Christ, "There is nothing covered up, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be made known. Therefore, whatsoever ye have spoken in the darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in the secret chamber shall be proclaimed upon the housetops."

And if to the Press belongs this power, with its consequent responsibility, neither can the Pulpit divest itself of either. No misuse of the pulpit could be more scandalous than for the preacher to become a scandal monger; but when fraud and oppression are known to exist, the preacher has the opportunity, and therefore the responsibility, of denouncing them.

A CORRECTION.—Rev. John Wilkinson writes to say that the number of the second and revised edition of the New Testament, recently issued, was 110,000, not 120,000, as stated on the authority of The Times correspondent in Vienna. He also says that the cost of the 100,000 copies provided for the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, though to a great extent contributed by a generous Scotch donor, was not wholly so.

ORAL INSTRUCTION OF THE DEAF AND DUMB.—The work of this Association continues to progress favourably, and the Committee in their new report state that the oral system of teaching the deaf is now generally recognised as the best-known method of education for this afflicted class. The school was last year attended by fifty-nine pupils, and there were ten students in the Training College, three of whom received the Association's certificate, and have since obtained appointments, two under the London School Board. The secretary is Mr. A. S. Klugh, 11, Fitzroy-square, W.

THE CHILD AT THE GATE.

BY ARTHUR L. SALMON.

See recent reports of cruelty to children in The Child's Guardian.)

A little child at heaven's gate,
All weary from this world of sin,
Stands waiting to be welcomed in.

O little stranger, desolate!
And dost thou fear to enter there
Where never enters sin nor care?

He lifts his feeble baby-hands,
He shows his bare and bleeding feet,
With tears upon his eyelids sweet.

O little child, thy Saviour stands
And calls thee in, to lie and rest
Within the shelter of His breast.

Thy Shepherd, once Himself a child,
Will take his lamb into his arms
And soothe it after earth's alarms.

O little stranger, undefiled,
No more in heaven shalt thou know
The anguish that was thine below.

He who was wearied, hunger'd, 'thirst,
Rejected, scorned, and crucified,
For little children lived and died.

But they, the alien and accurst,
Who on this earth have wounded thee,
What shall their desolation be?

"I know you not," the Lord shall say,
When vainly entrance they implore,
"I know ye not!"—and close the door.

"When I in pain and weakness lay
Ye fed Me not, nor tended Me,
But scorned Me in mine agony."

"We knew Thee not, O Lord!" they cry;
"How could we minister to Thee,
Who knew not of thy misery?"

But He, the Master, shall reply,
With pitying look of scorn divine,
"Ye cursed a child—the pain was mine;

"Ye cursed a child—that child was I!—
Ye loaded him with misery,
And what ye did, ye did to Me."

OBITUARY.

BISHOP OF SODOR AND MAN.

The Right Reverend Rowley Hill, D.D., Bishop of Sodor and Man, died on Friday night, after a short illness, at 10, Hereford-square, his residence in London. The late Bishop had suffered from indisposition for a short time past, but up to Friday morning the fatal character of his malady had been almost wholly unsuspected. From 1868 to 1871 he was rector of Frant, in Sussex, and from 1871 to 1873 he was vicar of St. Michael's, Chester-square, London. He was then appointed vicar of Sheffield, and in the following year rural dean of Sheffield, both which appointments, as also a canonry of York Cathedral, he held until 1877, when he was consecrated Bishop of the see of Sodor and Man. He was a prominent member of the evangelical party, and his death will be deeply mourned.

HOMES FOR WORKING BOYS IN LONDON.—The Hon. T. H. W. Pelham, in an envelope booklet entitled, "Sixteen Years among the Working Boys of London," gives a very interesting account of the work done in these Homes. Therefrom we catch a glimpse of the boys, many of them most unruly, and resenting the least restraint, in the midst of surroundings altogether strange to them; we see, as they come under various influences, how much depends upon the kind and loving element, and then, how in one and another the grace of God triumphs, changing their hearts. In not a few cases now the results are visible in useful and honourable lives. In the eight Homes already opened there is accommodation for three hundred and twenty lads. The little book may be had of the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham, 25, Brechin-place, S.W.

SCHOOLS IN ITALY.

Sir,—Since returning from Florence I have received the May number of Il Testimonio, the monthly organ of the Baptists in Italy, which contains the following remarks on Sunday-schools, which I have translated. M. A. H.

King's Langley, Herts.

Referring to the "Annuario Evangelico" (the handbook of the various Evangelicals), the writer says:—

"We are rather surprised to observe how limited is the work of Sunday-schools in Italy. With 22,213 Evangelicals, we have only 8000 scholars in the Sunday-schools. A sad fact, and one that shows we have not rightly understood how important it is to give our children religious education.

"The churches that give the smallest proportion of children to the Sunday-schools are the Valdesi in the valleys. With 13,205 church members, they have only 3,290 scholars. In this branch of evangelical work the Baptists have done more than any. In the churches of the Baptist Union, with their 870 members, there are in the Sunday-schools 513 children, a number for which we may be grateful to the Lord; and the more so when we consider that, among all the denominations, they only labour without the support of the day-schools, from which the others draw the greater part of their scholars. Around Spezia there are Independent Baptist churches, with a membership of 160. The principal stations beside those in which there is a settled pastor are 183. The secondary ones, that is, those visited periodically, number 178.

"Let us thank the Lord that the Gospel is now preached in 361 places, and pray for that time when there shall be a grand religious awakening in Italy, and when the 22,000 evangelicals of to-day shall become a great people, holy unto the Lord."

"CHRISTIAN UNITY."

Dear Sir,—Do we not sometimes forget that it is only through our fellowship with the Father and with the Son that we can have a true Christian unity? The radii of a circle meet at the centre, and only there. Those who have the mind of Christ in full measure cannot fail to be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment. But those who seek to resemble each other are surely taking an unwise course. It is those who are transformed after the image of Christ who naturally become one with each other through being one with Him. How often have we longed that all differences should disappear, and wistfully looked forward to the wondrous effect on the world of a visibly united Church? But are we ready for such a consummation? Are we so loyal and true-hearted that there would be no risk of our putting such a Church in Christ's place, and blindly and indolently following her dictates, instead of searching the Scriptures for ourselves?

It is to be feared that even we are too apt to seek spiritual health from human physicians, and take our guidance in missionary work and schemes from the experience of saints, instead of from the simple and holy teaching of the Word of God. It is such a temptation to communities of Christians to become wise above what "is written."

He is a prudent man who sets a city on a hill, and makes a home among the munition of rocks. But to build a tower (high as that of Babel), or to seek a great name, would work a snare if they led us to forget that it is the name of the Lord which is a strong tower and sure refuge. When we all speak the language of Christ, and then only, can the confusion of tongues cease.—Yours faithfully,

J. G. Robertson.

Oak-hill Park, Hampstead, N.W.

Dear Sir,—There is no more important question than this, I think, and the ministers themselves—Episcopal, Methodist, Presbyterian, &c.—are the men required to take the first step in the right direction by throwing off the priestly mien, and adopting the bearing of a brother. Ministers look upon their congregations as flocks, and the idea is most agreeable, and they send the dog after any that do not come up to their beck. The priest of Rome threatens, and then excommunicates, which amounts to an order to boycott. The priest of the Anglican Church goes as near that as he can. The priest of the Established Church cuts his parishioners in the street without warning, and the Methodist, who professes so much, sends hi stray sheep to Coventry, sticks with his own par ticular clique, and knows very few else outsid chapel or class-meeting. Ministers have to lear to put on the shepherd's garb rather than the fin gentleman's.

Is it from too much kindness that men leave th Church of their fathers? It was only the othe day a young man remarked at a meeting, that h had gone in and out of his place of worship fo over six months before anyone had moved to speak to him. Nonconformists tell me on every side o never seeing a minister inside their doors, and Churchmen tell me of never being spoken to abou their souls, except in a stereotyped way, from the pulpit. A young man remarked to me a short time ago, after having been spoken to about inward religion, "I have been going to church for the last seventeen or eighteen years, and our minister has never, personally, broached the subject to me." Then there are bickerings going on between members of the congregations, which might be allayed by ministers visiting in a kindly way; and let them visit as brethren, blind to straitened circumstances where the notice of it would hurt; careful, too, not to show too much superiority. The very humblest turns at last, and no foe is more bitter than the man who, having received you as a brother, finds you acting the aristocrat over him.

Yours faithfully,

Won't be Patronised.

BAPTISM AND CONVERSION.

Dear Sir,—In reply to the question, Why conversion is needed, if, as the Church of England teaches, we receive the Holy Spirit in our infancy, I affirm that the Church of England does not teach it. For—

(1) All that is said in the Articles about the baptism of infants is, "that it is most in accordance with the institution of Christ." The article on baptism treats of adult baptism only; infants are not included.

(2) There is not a word in the New Testament about the benefits of baptism to infants. Therefore no Church can affirm, positively, anything about the Spirit and grace in infant baptism.

(3) High Churchmen get their doctrine of grace, always given in baptism to every infant, from supposition, inference, and deduction only; especially they infer it from the promise of Christ, "Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." But, as every impartial reader will allow, there is nothing in that promise which will carry so important and so tremendous a conclusion as grace given to all infants at the font, especially when it contradicts experience and observation.

(4) John iii. 5, I take it, does refer to baptism by water and the Spirit, although the sacrament of baptism was not yet instituted by Christ. But water, and the Spirit are two separate and separable things. The outward sign may be received in infancy, and the inward and spiritual grace signified by it, in old age. Time is nothing with God. Bishop Tebb saw this so clearly, that, to clench the matter for the High Church view, he found it necessary, in writing his famous sermon on this text, to alter it at the outset in this way, "Except a man be born of the Spirit, in and by water." &c., which every reader can see is a totally different statement from the words of Christ, and ties the Spirit necessarily to the water, the very thing which is avoided by the words of that text.

All the language of the New Testament respecting baptism, it is allowed by all parties, respects adults. And it is equally clear that not one word is said about the benefits of baptism to infants. And the Thirty-nine Articles are silent on the point.

I am, Sir,

Shrewsbury. A Clergyman.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for June 10 (1 Cor. xv. 58):—"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

THE COMMITTEE OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION have taken a house at Hastings, which they are opening as a Home, where female Sunday-school teachers may enjoy a fortnight's rest, at a very trifling cost to themselves. The committee have also arranged to send to various suitable cottage homes in the country parties of poor, weak, ailing scholars, who may, amid green fields and fresh air, derive all the advantage to their minds and bodies which such a residence in the country cannot fail to impart.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JUNE 5.—PSALM CXX.

ERE commence the Fifteen "Songs of Degrees," "Ascents," though what the nature of the ascents" intended it is not so easy to say. elitzsch, after recounting different views, such the ascent of the tribes to Jerusalem to orship at the feast, the ascent of the Jews from abylon, the ascents or steps in the Temple, ecides in favour of the view taken by Gesenius, that the fifteen songs have their name from eir step-like progressive rhythm of the oughts," a word in one verse being made the ep to rise to the thought of the next (see as a od specimen Ps. cxxi.), so that the word would us describe the structure of the Psalm in hich parallelism is laid aside, and a step-like rangement takes its place. Kay wisely combines these different views, regarding "these teen Psalms as a spiritual stair or ladder—steps to heaven'—by which Israel mounted wards Him who dwells in heaven (cxxiii. 1); lding, that the step-like structure "is a suitble outward accompaniment of the inward aracter of the Psalm. 'Go up, go up, my ul!' must be the motto of one who would ter into the meaning of these Psalms."

1.—In my distress I cried unto the Lord, and e heard me.—A suitable beginning for a song ascent. It gives the first step in the spiritual dder. Happy are they who have made sure of is first step, for many think themselves to be the way to heaven who have not passed rough this experience. "Whosoever shall call pon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

2.—Deliver my soul, O Lord, from lying lips, and om a deceitful tongue.—Are these "lying lips" d "deceitful tongue" those only of the salmist's earthly enemies? Or is there not ere rather an allusion to the enemies of the soul," those spiritual foes whose great leader described as "the accuser of our brethren, hich accused them before our God day and ight" (Rev. xii. 10), but of whose accusations gainst those whose righteousness is "of God," it said, "every tongue that shall rise against ee in judgment thou shalt condemn"? One the blessings of the "people saved by the ord" (Deut. xxxiii. 29) is, "thine enemies shall found liars unto thee."

4.—Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of niper.—The accusations may be like "sharp rows," and the accuser may be "mighty," t wooden arrows when put among hot coals e soon consumed.

5.—Woe is me, that I sojourn in Mesech.—esech and Kedar stand for wild and savage rroundings. The Christian has these in the orld around him, as well as in the body of sin nd death in which as in a tent he still dwells. ee 2 Cor. v. 1—5.

MONDAY, JUNE 6.—PSALM CXXI.

If the first step heavenward is calling upon e Lord, which brings "no condemnation," the ext is seeking for help to be kept in the midst surrounding temptations and dangers.

1.—From whence cometh my help.—This should e a question, as in R.V., "From whence shall y help come?" Answered in the next verse.

3.—He will not suffer thy foot to be moved.—The first two verses contain the half-doubting, alf-confident sentiment of the Psalmist; and e following verses, to the end, the assurance iven to him by the Spirit of God, strengthening is wavering faith."—S.C. The word "keep" repeated six times in this Psalm: it is endered "preserve" in A.V., in verses 7 and 8, ut rightly retained in R.V. It is the key-note the Psalm, and finds its New Testament xpression in 1 Pet. i. 5: "Who are kept by the ower of God through faith unto salvation, eady to be revealed in the last time."

6.—The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the oon by night.—"In the Levant, sleeping in the oonlight (accompanied by heavy dews and osts) often causes eye-disease, and even innity."—Kay.

8.—Thy going out and thy coming in.—"The riginal of this phrase seems to occur Deut. viii. 6. See 1 Sam. xxix. 6; 2 Sam. iii. 25; 1 Kings iii. 7; Acts i. 21. The import is the daily life."—S.C.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7.—PSALM CXXII.

The third step is to a knowledge of the believer's not being merely an isolated soul but a member of a body; which knowledge brings with it the corresponding duties of prayer (6) and effort (9) for the peace and prosperity of the community. If steps 1 and 2 correspond to "faith in the Lord Jesus" for salvation and keeping, this step (3) brings us to "love unto all the saints."

3.—Jerusalem is builded as a city that is compact together.—"Fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth" (Eph. iv. 16).

4.—Unto the testimony of Israel.—"Unto" is here in the wrong place; it should be "a testimony unto Israel" (R.V.).

7.—Peace be within thy walls.—The first step in the soul's progress (cxx. 6, 7) brought it into the condition of a sojourner in Mesech and Kedar, where no peace was to be found, for however peaceably disposed the believer may be, the world is "for war," and must be so (see Gen. iii. 15). But peace should ever dwell within the Church, and it is a sad sign of degeneracy when war is found within her walls.

9.—Because of the house of the Lord our God, I will seek thy good.—A good motive for seeking the welfare of Jerusalem; because it has within it the dwelling-place of God, "an habitation of God through the Spirit" (Eph. ii. 22).

THURSDAY, JUNE 8.—PSALM CXXIII.

The fourth step in the soul's progress is to the sorrowful experience of the world's contempt and scorn. This is a fitting supplement to the last step, which revealed the privileges and glories of the Church of God, and as that was a step of gladness ("I was glad when they said unto me," &c.), so this step is one of sorrow, as the soul is "exceedingly filled with contempt." But it knows where to look for sympathy and help, for having tasted of the joys of the "city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, . . . the general assembly and church of the firstborn which are written in heaven" (Heb. xii. 22, 23), it is not now to earth but to heaven that the eye is turned.

2.—Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters.—"A traveller says: 'The people of the East do not speak so much as those in the West, and a sign of the hand is frequently the only instruction given to the servants in waiting.' A homely illustration may be seen any day on the River Thames, where a boy watches attentively the hand of the captain of the steamer, and conveys his will to the engine-room."—Spurgeon. God's providences are to be watched as indications of his will, until the time comes when He delivers his people from the scornful treatment of an opposing world.

4.—The scorning of those that are at ease.—"The word denoting 'those that are at ease' is used (Isa. xxxii. 9, 11; Amos vi. 1) for 'those that are at ease when ease is sin.'"—Sp. Com. It properly describes the world as opposed to the Church, but when the world and the Church are mixed, then it includes "them that are at ease in Zion" (Amos vi. 1).

THURSDAY, JUNE 9.—PSALM CXXIV.

Scorn and contempt are soon followed by open persecution, and this is the next step which God's children often have to tread, but not without a sense of the Lord being "on their side," and so proving a deliverer from "the snare of the fowler."

3.—Then they had swallowed us up quick.—"Quick" is not the adverb expressive of haste, but the adjective which means "living." It is better to render it "alive." (So R.V.) "Anger is never more fiery than when the people of God are its objects."—C.H.S.

4.—Then the waters had overwhelmed us.—"As a river is carried along with great impetuosity, and carries away and destroys whatever it meets with in its course, thus also is the rage of the enemies of the Church not to be withstood by human strength. Hence we must avail ourselves of the protection and help of God."—Luther.

6.—A prey to their teeth.—Fire and water had been used as figures of their wrath and power, now they are compared to wild beasts. See Dan. vii. and Rev. xii., xiii.

7.—Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowler.—Even when persecution does its worst, it can but kill the body, and the released soul soars away singing, "the snare is broken, and we are escaped." But often the snare of the prison or of the persecuting power is broken (Acts xii. 6, xvi. 26),

8.—Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth.—"The French Protestants always begin their public worship with this verse."—Treasury of David. A custom which has probably come down to them from times of persecution.

FRIDAY, JUNE 10.—PSALM CXXV.

Delitzsch entitles this Psalm, "Israel's bulwark against temptation to apostasy." As applied to "the Israel of God" it describes another stage or step of spiritual experience, viz., preservation from the apostasy of the professing Church, and that alone by reason of God's care and guardianship of his people.

1.—They that put their trust in the Lord shall be, &c.—It is not of Israel after the flesh, or of its present counterpart, the visible Church, that it is said that it "is like Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever," but of the true people of God in the midst of the professing body. "The separation between the visible and the invisible Church belonged even to the Old Testament. Impure portions are mingled with the people of God according to outward appearance, which do not really belong to the body, and are not animated by its life. These have no part in the promises of the true Church."—Hengstenberg.

3.—For the rod of the wicked, &c.—This should be (as in R.V.) "the sceptre of the wicked," i.e., the kingdom of this world, with its present prosperity and power. This is not to be the portion of God's people; it comes not as a rest into their appointed portion or lot; and that lest they be tempted to settle down contentedly here to "mind earthly things" (Phil. iii. 19), and take part in the "iniquity" around them.

5.—Such as turn aside unto their crooked ways.—The apostasy of the professing Church is thus described. They forsake Christ, "the way, the truth, the life," and turn aside to ways of men's devising, "after the commandments and doctrines of men" (Col. ii. 22).

SATURDAY, JUNE 11.—PSALM CXXVI.

This is the seventh of the series of steps, and brings us to a climax, so far as the believer's experience is concerned. We seem here brought to the close of the Pilgrim's course, and find not only that his captivity is turned into joy and rejoicing, but we see him reaping in joy what he had sown in tears, and "coming again with joy, bringing his sheaves with him."

1.—When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion.—"It is the exiles at home again upon the soil of their fatherland who here cast back a glance into the happy time when their destiny suddenly took another turn by the God of Israel disposing the heart of the conqueror of Babylon to set them at liberty."—Delitzsch. The fall of mystical Babylon is in Rev. xviii. 4, also connected with the liberation of God's people, for the cry, "Come out of her, my people," seems to point more to the rapture of the saints preparatory to the Lord's coming (chap. xix.) than to present secession from Babylonish error.

4.—Turn again our captivity, O Lord, as the streams in the south.—Delitzsch renders this: "Oh, lead back, Jehovah, our captive ones, as streams in the south country." As the river beds, dried up by summer heat, are suddenly and unexpectedly filled with the refreshing floods of the winter's rain, so let the captives come back, "our returning tribes flowing like fertilising streams."—Kay.

5.—Shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.—"What is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy" (1 Thess. ii. 19, 20).

A SAMUEL MORLEY MEMORIAL.

It was only last year that we stood at the rave of one who—though his philanthropic ympathies belonged to every kind of Christian ork—had a special regard for our Institution, nd whose hand was always open for the supplyg of our necessities. In Mr. Samuel Morley e mourn a friend whose loving sympathy and ractical kindness, continued through a long eries of years, entitle him to be remembered—de by side with his beloved, surviving elder rother, Mr. John Morley—as the greatest enefactor of our Hospital." Such is the tribute aid to the memory of Samuel Morley by the ouncil of the Deaconesses' Institution and Hospital, Tottenham, and which found its ractical outcome on Saturday afternoon in the pening by the Princess of Wales of a new wing f the Hospital, bearing his name.

The "Samuel Morley Memorial Wing" comrises three wards—two for adults, each affording ccommodation for twelve patients, and another or children, containing thirteen beds. Through he munificence of Messrs. Howard and Charles Morley, who seem to have inherited the generous eart and the boundless charity of their noble ather, and who gave a donation between them f £4500, the new wing is opened free of debt.

On arrival at the Hospital, the Royal party were received by the Earl of Strafford, Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen, Lord Colville of Culross, Mr. ohn Morley, Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., Dr. Laseron, director of the Institution, Sister Christian Dundas, the lady superintendent, and others, and conducted to a dais in a large beautifully-decorated marquee erected behind the building, in which about two thousand people were seated. The Bishop of Bedford having offered prayer, Dr. Laseron, on behalf of the Council, presented an address of welcome and thanks to the Princess, to which the Prince of Wales replied, saying:—"An institution like this is one well worthy of the support of all, and I am sure a proceeding like to-day, in opening a further wing of this Hospital, is a sincere gratification to the Princess to perform, especially when it should be called after the name of one I had the pleasure and privilege of knowing, whom you all know, at any rate by name, and whose loss we all most deeply deplore—the late Samuel Morley. I feel sure no more fitting name could be given to the wing than that of him who, with the members of his family—and I am glad to see one of them present to-day—have contributed so much to the prosperity of this Institution."

Their Royal Highnesses then proceeded to the entrance of the new portion of the Hospital, immediately over which the Princess of Wales unveiled a marble tablet, on each side of which was hung a large portrait of Mr. Morley, containing an inscription. The new wing having been formally declared open, the Royal party visited the three wards, stopping every now and then by a bedside to drop a kindly word to the occupant. The distinguished visitors exhibited particular interest in the poor little sufferers occupying the tiny cots in the children's ward. Standing by the bedside of a bright-looking boy of six or seven, who was run over by a tramcar and received painful injuries, the Princess of Wales had her photograph taken. Their Royal Highnesses drove off amid an enthusiastic outburst of cheering from the assembled crowds.

The total amonnt contained in the purses received in the course of the afternoon by the Princess of Wales was £152 6s.

At the annual meeting of the Institution which followed, it was stated that though the debt on the buildings had been cleared off, there is a deficiency in the current expenses of about £2000. There are at the present time 61 sisters, and during the past year there were nursed and attended 9688 patients.

THE STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE closes its financial year with a splendid balance of £5000 in hand.

FROM THE SCOTCH ASSEMBLIES.

ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

The reports bearing on the Christian activity of this Church during the past year were, on the whole, satisfactory. The Home Mission committee have made strenuous efforts to strengthen the hands of ministers in populous centres, as well as to provide for the spiritual instruction of districts unprovided with a settled pastor. Their deputy, Rev. William Robertson, was very successful in stirring up enthusiasm in the congregations he visited. A source of discouragement was found in the decrease of the funds. This not only crippled the efficiency of the agency, but also led some members to take a gloomy view of the future. Fortunately, the publication of the decrease in the funds called forth the generosity of some friends of home missions, who sent in handsome donations, so the good work will receive a fresh impetus. Professor Charteris was very hopeful in speaking of the Young Men's Guild, which owes much of its success to his capable guidance. In days when young men are but too apt to sever their connection with churches, such an institution as this Guild cannot be too highly valued. It promotes the intellectual, moral, and spiritual welfare of those brought under its influence. By its literary competitions careful study of the subjects prescribed is secured; by the prominence it gives to the White Cross Movement Christian chivalry is engendered; and by its Bible-readings the Word of God is made more familiar to young men. Its object is to enlist the sympathy and activity of its members on the side of Christ.

A welcome feature of the Foreign Missions report was the account given of the remarkable revival in the Punjaub. As the result of this awakening, no less than 593 converts from heathenism have been baptized. The founding of the Universities Mission in Sikhim was alluded to as a favourable sign of the times. An effort to raise money to erect buildings necessary for missionary purposes in China, India, and Africa had met with considerable success. It was stated that the revenue of the Foreign Missions Committee during the past year was the largest known in the history of the Church, but the increase of expenditure had lessened the advantages to be derived from this happy state of matters.

FREE CHURCH.

The gratifying progress of the temperance cause in the Church was made apparent by the statistics furnished in the temperance report. The presbyteries are being moved to action; twenty-seven of them expressed approval of Mr. McLagan's Local Veto Bill, but the majority of them stopped short of going the whole way with the Bill. The Assembly resolved to petition in favour of the principle of the Bill. Special attention was directed to the drink traffic in India and the Colonies. Grocers' licences were characterised "abominations" by one speaker. Dr. Black, Inverness, bore testimony to the change wrought in the drinking customs of the Highlands during the last fifteen years. Whisky used to be considered indispensable at weddings and funerals, but that custom is now largely a thing of the past.

The foreign mission night always attracts a crowded audience. This year was no exception to the rule. The report was tabled by Professor Lindsay. It opened with an admirable synopsis of the history of missions during the last fifty years. The Victorian was emphatically the missionary era. In it the ten missionary organisations of the United Kingdom had grown to be sixty-five, and the twenty-seven of evangelical Christendom to be a hundred and eighty-five. The 400,000 converts of fifty years ago had increased to three millions. Then the number of missionaries, ordained and unordained, was 760; now it is almost 40,000. Then the Free Church had seven ordained missionaries; now she has sixty-four, in addition to hundreds of lay workers. Interesting particulars of the past year's activity in the various stations were given. Some returned missionaries made speeches which thrilled their hearers, and helped to deepen the missionary enthusiasm which has of late seized the Scotch Churches. Specially notable was the high-toned oration—its lofty character and moving power entitled it to the proud name of oration—of Principal Miller, of Madras. He was welcomed with a cordiality accorded to few speakers, and every word he said was listened to with an eager silence, broke only by bursts of applause. His theme was the work God had enabled him to do through his College. Madras Christian College is a power in Southern India; and to direct Christian teaching its teachers consecrate their best energies. Cultured Hindooism feels through it the healing and ennobling touch of the Gospel.

Of the many speeches made during the week, Dr. Somerville's on his evangelistic tour through the Highlands is generally admitted to have been the best. It towered above the other speeches in fascinating eloquence and inspiring energy. No report can do it justice. To have seen and felt the man was far more than the words he spoke. The simple record of what he did is in itself remarkable, when his age and the difficulties to be overcome are taken into account. He visited 189 different places, and delivered 250 addresses, 48 of which were translated into Gaelic for the benefit of those who did not understand English. He paid a warm compliment to the excellent qualities of the Highlanders, dwelling specially on their eagerness to hear the Gospel. They came through marshes, over hills, and across rivers to listen to the glad tidings of salvation. But some of their customs did not meet with his approval. He gently but firmly suggested improvements in their methods of worship, which were heard patiently, and may be acted on. The real interest and force of his address lay in the marked emphasis — an emphasis felt in every sentence, though not expressed in words—placed on the value of direct evangelistic work. Throughout the Free Church there is a growing feeling that ministers should not leave evangelistic preaching to laymen, but should themselves take an active and regular part in it; and this feeling will be strengthened both by the example and teaching of the venerable ex-Moderator.

YOUNG WOMEN IN NEWCASTLE. — The Young Women's Christian Association are busy at present, having their Home, 4, Saville-place, very full with young women taking part in the Exhibition; about sixty boarders are at present located there. A mission last winter to the girls engaged in factories, &c., proved very successful.

RYDE Y.W.C.A.—A new iron room, adjoining Garfield House, the home of this Association, was opened last week. Twenty years ago, as Dr. Johnston reminded those present, this work was commenced by four persons, and now, besides having seventy-six members, upwards of two hundred young women last summer took advantage of this seaside home. This hall, which has become necessary in consequence of the increase of the work, will be open every evening for young women, and will be used for classes, social meetings, addresses, and Bible-readings. Rev. G. Warner and Mr. W. Jacobs also addressed the meeting. A tea was given on the following day to 120 young women, to whom afterwards Miss Nash gave an address.

THE SERVANTS' MISSION.—This Mission, which has been at work for over twenty years, still continues to labour successfully amongst a class of people much neglected. Much is done amongst coachmen and others, both in the day and night, on the occasion of large assemblies, when many opportunities for conversation and for the distribution of Gospel books and papers are found. The men's home is at 14, Sloane-terrace, Chelsea, and 250 have passed through this during the year, while about 200 women servants have lodged in the home for them at 162, Warwick-street, Ebury Bridge, Pimlico. From these homes many have gone forth to their work with new hearts, and have witnessed a good confession for the Saviour amongst those with whom their lot is cast. One result of this work is that there are now about 250 godly men and women enrolled as members of the Christian Servants' Association. The Superintendent is Mr. James Goodchild, 14, Sloane terrace, S.W.

The Book World.

MILLENNIAL DAWN.

This work, published in America, may be had from Mr. Elliot Stock, Paternoster-row. It is not at all to our mind. "The Millennial Dawn" meant is the rise of Restorationist Views, with a kind of annihilationist appendix. We are told that "'the ransom for all' given by the Man Christ Jesus does not give or guarantee everlasting life and blessing to any man, but it does give and guarantee to every man another opportunity or trial for life everlasting." According to this new teaching, the real probation is not here but hereafter, and the impassable gulf between the rich man and Lazarus is no longer existent. "Millennial Dawn" avers that "man, by reason of present experience with sin and its bitter penalty, will be fully forewarned, and when, as a result of a ransom, he is granted another and individual trial, under the eye and control of Him who so loved him as to give his life for him, we may be sure that the wilfully disobedient only will receive the penalty of the second trial. That penalty will be the second death," which on this authority is annihilation. Such teaching could only be accepted on the blasphemous hypothesis that Abraham was entirely at fault in treating Dives as he did, and our Lord Himself in error in endorsing the patriarch's view.

THE EVOLUTION HYPOTHESIS.*

This is an eminently profound and able work. We cannot speak of it as easy reading, for the author comes to close grips with the leading agnostic champion of the age; but the thinking is clear, and the argumentation conclusive. The aim of the book is to show, in opposition to Mr. Herbert Spencer's assumption, that the unification of knowledge is impossible, and that on no rational ground may we accept evolution as the key of the universe. Justly does Mr. Martin observe that Mr. Spencer himself must needs admit what is tantamount to a Divine Presence. There is what he calls "the Unknowable." The fact that Mr. Spencer can predicate nothing of it only makes the case worse for himself, for here is confessedly an inscrutable reality which lies at the base of all things—an absolute Power, Presence, and Force; and, if this Power behind all power be itself incapable of cognition, as Mr. Spencer contends, how is a unification of knowledge possible? A unification which leaves out the absolute factor in the consideration is an insult to intelligence.

With this finding agrees the testimony of consciousness; for unification of knowledge would mean the obliteration of the difference between subject and object. But who can say that a unifying principle has yet come to light which obliterates the distinction between the Ego and the non-Ego of which all mankind are conscious? Organic life, animal and vegetable, is conclusive on the same point. To appreciate the demarcations in nature when traced to their germinal spring, baffles research; yet it is certain "the germs out of which animals of different species are developed must have, though not discernible by us, characteristics by which they are discriminated." And even in the inorganic world itself the search for unity is utopian. Persistence of force cannot explain the existence of the universe of matter. Infinite system and endless differentiation of atom from atom must be postulated before our intellect can find any fulcrum for its lever. In a word, it is but too painfully manifest that only those may talk of the unification of knowledge who are prepared to ignore the testimony of facts on every side.

Mr. Martin's criticism of evolution is elaborate and many sided, and, to the best of our judgment, conviccing. The author deserves well of all to whom a genuine religious faith and morality are dear.

NEW WORK ON ECCLESIASTES.*

This is a little book of great value. So few have written to purpose on Ecclesiastes, that anyone who can throw light upon it is a public benefactor. The light thrown by Mr. Cooke's singularly bright and happy little commentary is clear and full. The book is as instructive as it is pleasant, giving the results of wide and critical study in simple and popular form. The writer totally disagrees with those who question King Solomon's claim to the authorship of Ecclesiastes. He believes "the argument derived from the use of words supposed to be of post-exilic origin is unsatisfactory."

His idea of the chief aim of the book appears to us to be exceedingly helpful, as being one that removes at a stroke some of the worst hindrances to our enjoyment of it. "Many," he says, "who have otherwise written excellently on this book, appear to have made a mistake as to its aim. It was not really to find out the highest good, but to ascertain if satisfaction could be found in this world. Solomon must have known that God was the chief good. Had the book been intended primarily to teach this, the conclusion would assuredly have been more glowing. The research was into what the world could really give...The voyage is not undertaken to find the golden sunlit isles, with their happy fruits; it is one of adventure into the arctic regions of life and thought. As from polar expeditions the voyager comes back, thankful to have escaped being frozen to death, glad to return home, having gained nothing but additional evidence that there is no safe passage through to sunlit seas beyond; just such is the end of him who seeks happiness in the ice-bound regions of the promises of this world."

We cannot do better than give, in Mr. Cooke's own words, his view of the connection between the Ecclesiastes and Canticles: "'Let us hear,' says the pilgrim, now that his inquiry is finished, 'the conclusion of the whole matter: fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man.' The pursuit has been directed by the intellect, and the cold process of thought has led to this icy result. If, however, as I venture to imagine, the book called The Song of Solomon is really a continuation of this, and describes a pilgrim's progress, not in this world to find out what it can give, but in the region of Divine love to enjoy its rich banquets, then we may account for the frigidity of the counsel. For the piety of the Book of Ecclesiastes is the piety of the head, and the piety of the Canticles is the piety of the heart! In the latter there is the religion of emotion; reasoning is laid aside, and feeling predominates. If this view be correct, and it has not been hastily formed, then the conclusion here marks a position attained, that of a man just emerging from a cavern after his gloomy, chilling adventure. In the following book he enters a new region, where not knowledge but love is to be the pursuit. The two books are the two sides of the coin. The one is the progress of an inquiring mind to find out what there is in the world; the other, of a living soul describing how precious communion with God has been found to be."

The Mystery of God. By T. Vincent Tymms. Elliot Stock. We have twice before spoken in commendation of this work, which grows in popularity with each fresh issue. This third edition contains no alterations or additions. Its arguments cannot fail to make a deep impression on all thoughtful readers.

Fragmentary Records of Jesus of Nazareth. From the Letters of a Contemporary. By Rev. Canon Wynne, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton. Under this taking title Canon Wynne collects the various and weighty evidence borne by Paul of Tarsus to the reality and divinity of that Jesus whom he once denounced as a pretender, the antiquity and excellence of a religion he once assailed as a new and blasphemous heresy. He draws chiefly upon the four universally acknowledged Epistles, Romans, Galatians, and 1 and 2 Corinthians. His object is to show that a record admitted to be contemporary with Jesus Christ agrees in all main points with the Gospel narratives, which some critics assert to be written at least fifty years after his death. Though logically written, a loving spirit pervades the argument, and we advise not only preachers and students, but candid thinkers who doubt the New Testament story, thoughtfully to read these pages.

The White Cross Movement. By Rev. Professo Milligan. 3d. Macniven & Wallace. An admirable littl book for young men. It will serve to strengthen lofty ideals, and will help the movement for the promotio of purity.

The Phonographic Teacher. To signalise the fiftieth year of the history of phonography, as a published system, Messrs. Isaac Pitman & Sons have issued a Jubilee Edition of this handbook. It has been enlarged, somewhat rearranged, and is a complete guide to the elements of the system. (6d.)

MRS. BIRT'S SHELTERING HOMES.—News has been received that the boys and girls sent out to Canada this year have already found good homes. Mrs. Birt is now making arrangements for a third party to go out as soon as possible, and this she will herself accompany. Mrs. Birt contemplates giving at Jubilee time a day in the park and a tea to as many poor children as she can provide for. Her address is 1, Sugnall-street, Liverpool.

A Y.M.C.A. FOR DEVONPORT.—The need of an association which shall interest and influence for good the young men of this important dockyard has been very much felt for some time, and last week a meeting was held for the furtherance of the object. At present, having no place to go to, young men throng the principal street of the town in the evenings, and on Sunday evenings the condition of things is indescribable. Much mischief is also being done by infidel teachers. Rear-Admiral Henry D. Grant, H.M. Dockyard, Devonport, would be glad to hear from any friends interested in the movement.

THE COLLEGE LIBRARY AT TORRE PELLICE.—Rev. Professor Vinay, the librarian of this institution, has issued an urgent appeal for good theological, literary, philological, or scientific works. From want of funds no additions have been made to the library for many years, and new books are greatly needed, the more especially as this is the only evangelical college in Italy. Good French and Italian works are most in demand, as the Waldensian people generally speak these languages, but English and German books would be very acceptable for the use particularly of the professors, pastors, and others. English and other newspapers would also be gratefully received. A reading-room was opened at the commencement of the year, and this is largely used by visitors. Communications may be addressed to Major Frobisher, 118, Pall Mall, S.W.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION.

In the many addresses which Miss de Broen has given during her recent stay in this country, she has greatly enlisted the sympathy of her hearers. At Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, on Monday afternoon last week, she told to a sympathetic audience the story of this Mission. The work at present, she said, consists of Gospel meetings, medical mission, day and Sunday-schools, and a night school. In speaking of the former, she begged ladies who had learnt French, German, or Italian at school, not to give up study after they left. Many Germans and Italians come to her mission hall, and in visiting she frequently meets them, and it is impossible to describe the joy and help which may be given to the poor by one who can speak to them in their own tongue. There is a large amount of work in connection with the different departments. About one thousand persons a day are relieved through the soup kitchen, and on the occasion of large funerals, tracts, which have been specially prepared by Miss de Broen, are given away in thousands. Two Gospel meetings are held every week in a neighbouring district, and four in the iron room, built since the Mission was commenced. This iron room the people call "the blessed place where we find our healing for soul and body."

The medical mission alone is the means of opening up about eight thousand new homes for visitation every year. People come from long distances to obtain the medical help here given, and Miss de Broen mentioned as one of the pressing needs of the work, further medical assistance. Sometimes as many as sixty persons have been sent away after perhaps waiting for hours for want of time to attend to them.

Miss de Broen also spoke of encouraging results, in connection with the sewing classes and the night school. Miss Burgess and other ladies added their testimony to the value of the work.

MANCHESTER CITY MISSION.—This Mission is about to resume for the summer the work commenced seventeen years ago at various wakes, fairs, and races. Last year one hundred places were visited, with much known blessing in some, where quite a revival of religion followed the visit of the evangelists. Temperance work is vigorously carried on at these meetings, and large numbers of tracts are given away, with many expressions of gratitude from the showmen and their wives. Mr. J. Swainson Langley, 100, Corporation-street, Manchester, will gratefully acknowledge gifts of tracts and other contributions for the work.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Special services were held in Melbourne-street Mission Church, by Mr. C. J. Dymond, during this week.

Mr. Denham Smith has just concluded a month's labours, fruitful of professed blessing. He will preach at St. George's Hall during June, and in Dublin in July and August.

Y.M.C.A., Dumbarton.—At a praise and testimony meeting, which closed the fortnight's special services conducted in connection with this Association, by Mr. Rogers, evangelist, thirty-two rose, and told what great things the Lord had done for them.

Brighton.—The Open-air Mission here has recommenced its work on the beach, and the first service was attended by several hundred persons. Mr. Thwaites, the president, mentioned that the present was the 27th year of preaching on the beach. Last summer he knew, for a fact, that God saved thirty precious souls there.

Mr. George Clarke began a two weeks' mission at Dunfermline, N.B., on Sunday last. A wondrous blessing, says a correspondent, followed the mission at Perth, and rested on the crowds assembled. There is every reason to look for many to be in the realms of glory as a result of this effort in Perth.

East London Tabernacle.—Mr. R. A. Everett writes:—We have formed a Gospel Band in connection with the Young Men's Bible-class of the above Tabernacle, the object being the preaching and singing the Gospel in chapels, mission halls, &c. The band is prepared to accept engagements. All communications to be addressed to the secretary, 17, Caxton-street, Addington-road, Bow, E.

Rev. J. Mountain in New Zealand.—This evangelist, accompanied by Mrs. Mountain, conducted a very successful mission in Invercargill, New Zealand, in March. Although their arrival was not widely known, yet their mission, when it began, drew large audiences. Several found peace in fully trusting Jesus. Successful as his work was among adults, it was with the young people that Mr. Mountain's efforts had their crowning results. His pleasant and happy manner among them attracted them in large numbers, secured their attention, and won their hearts, and, what was better, won the hearts of many of them for Jesus. When Mr. Mountain took his departure, many new fast friends among old and young showed by their regret how they had learned to esteem and love him.

Hastings.—The Nonconformists of Hastings and St. Leonards have arranged to hold a united Gospel Mission in October next, to be conducted by Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

JAPAN.—The Government has officially announced that next year English is to be taught in all the schools; this will be of immense importance to the missionaries, whose work will be greatly helped and forwarded by this innovation.

DENMARK.—The Parliament has found a good way to lessen drunkenness, without filling the prisons. For the future, any man found in the streets in a helpless state from alcohol will be taken home in a cab, the expense of which will be legally claimed from the publican who served out the last glass to the drunkard!—L'Evangéliste.

MESSRS. CROSSBY AND HUNTER, appointed by the Methodist Church of Canada for evangelistic work, spent six weeks in Coburg, Ont. It was estimated that 300 souls were converted, among whom were some very noted professional and business men. Still greater success has followed their meetings in Picton, Windsor, and Port Hope, Ont. According to last reports they were in Detroit, Michigan, U.S.

BERLIN.—On the first of May a new large hall for religious assemblies was opened in the East-end of Berlin. That part of the city was hitherto entirely destitute of such a place. It was refreshing to hear how warmly the pastor welcomed this voluntary help in his parish. It is a hopeful beginning for the new hall that it can be used daily for evangelistic addresses during the first three weeks of its existence.—Evangelical Christendom.

PALESTINE.—The Turkish Government has closed many Protestant schools in Syria, imprisoned the teachers, whom they have only selected upon the promise that they will no longer work in the schools, so that the children are either without instruction, or are obliged to go to the schools where the Koran is the text book. This is all the harder to bear, that each parishioner pays a tax towards the State education, so that with this money the Government is educating their children in the Mahomedan faith.

A GRACIOUS REVIVAL is in progress on the Washougal field, where Mr. John M. Pamment has had the pastoral charge of two congregational churches during the last eighteen months. Mr. Pamment has been called to Plymouth Congregational Church, Portland, Oregon, where he commenced his pastorate on the first Sunday in April, still visiting his old field once a month. A scarcity of pastors existing here, it is often necessary to yoke the churches. Portland is the leading city of the Pacific Northwest, and has a population of forty thousand. An interest in the prayers of our readers is requested.

THE PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONARIES AT CAIRO have twelve little freed slave girls, aged from eight to fourteen, given them to train. They were offered to them by Sir E. Baring, who is our representative in Egypt, and the President of the "Slave Home" committee, a Home founded and carried on (up to the present time) by English people. For want of funds these girls would have been given over to the Roman Catholics, had not the Protestant missionaries consented to take them. The duty seemed so pressing, that they accepted the "forty pounds and about fifty yards of calico," in the faith that God would turn the hearts of his children in pity towards these "least," and that means would be forthcoming to carry on their education. In a private letter one of the missionary ladies mentions that the cost of their education will not be great, but continuous. Any shoes and simple "princess" cotton dress, made and sent to Peoples Brothers, of Liverpool, would be forwarded to Cairo.

Among the Churches.

⁂ We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The new English Church at Copenhagen is now completed, and was recently opened for service.

Rev. Canon Camidge, Vicar of Thirsk, has accepted the bishopric of Bathurst, New South Wales, in succession to Bishop Marsden, who resigned the see in 1885.

Mr. Pryce-Jones, of Newtown, has forwarded £1000 to Rev. I. R. Evans Jones, M.A., Vicar of Llanllwchaiarn, as a Jubilee gift towards the erection of a Welsh church in Montgomeryshire.

The past year has been one of great activity in the Archdeaconry of Blackburn, six churches costing over £25,000 having been consecrated. There are also four mission buildings in process of erection.

Rev. A. H. Lang, late scholar of St. John's College, Oxford, has placed his services at the disposal of the Primate for five years, in connection with the Archbishop's Mission of Aid to the Chaldean Christians.

It is stated that Rev. J. Elliott, Vicar of Randwick, in Gloucestershire, has held the living since the year in which Her Majesty was born. Few men are privileged to labour for seventy years in the Master's vineyard.

Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks, of Boston, is expected in London on June 10, and during his stay in England will probably preach in the Temple Church, St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, and St. Margaret's Church.

Missions are shortly to be started in connection with the Diocesan Lay Evangelist Mission for Manchester, at Whittle, Withnell, Ribchester, Preston, and Bolton; each mission will be conducted by an earnest working-man evangelist.

The mission work originated four years ago by the late Dr. Butler, and since carried on at Latimer-road, Notting-hill, by past and present students of Harrow School, has so increased that a new church is now being built on a site adjoining the mission hall.

At the children's service on Sunday week, at Berkeley Chapel, Mayfair, the children present contributed considerably over £100 to the offertory, which was collected on behalf of the children's Jubilee tribute for the erection of a new wing to the Children's Hospital in Great Ormond-street.

Rev. C. L. Marson, Rector of Orlestone, Ashford, writes to The Pall Mall Gazette that he had a petition in favour of pulpit exchange with neighbouring Nonconformist pastors laid at the post-office for signature for ten days, and only one man in the parish—the church organist—expressed approval. Mr. Marson adds that he is ready to preach in any building on the face of the earth if invited to do so.

A good, quiet work for God has been going on during the past year in connection with St Andrew's Church, Lambeth, a staff of ladies having proved one of the most effective means adopted for reaching the hearts and homes of the people, whilst the Vicar also thanks God "for that backbone of all parish work, a number of Christian people in our congregation who strengthen our hands by their petitions."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. MacEwan has closed a week of special evangelistic services, which he conducted nightly in his church at Clapham.

Successful evangelistic services, lasting over three weeks, have been conducted at Ellison-street Church, Gateshead, by Mr. Wm. Thompson, jun., of Glasgow.

Rev. J. Reid Howatt, Camberwell, and his friends are going to give a Jubilee dinner to all the poor connected with the various missions sustained by them, on June 21.

CONGREGATIONAL.

An earnest effort is about to be made to form a Congregational Lay Preachers' Association for the county of Norfolk.

Mr. Edward Baker gave an address on "The duty of the churches to one another" at the recent meeting of the Leeds Association.

Rev. Samuel Pearson has returned from his Eastern travels, and recommenced his ministry at George-street Independent Chapel, Liverpool.

Revs. Robert Balgarnie and J. F. T. Hallowes, the Congregational missioners, have been almost overwhelmed with applications for their services.

One-hour services held every Sunday evening in the school-room of the church at Gosport (Rev. G. S. Smith, pastor) have been largely attended and richly blessed.

Since Rev. R. A. Cliff entered upon the pastorate of the church at King's Lynn, four years ago, the congregation has been increased six-fold, a debt of £800 has been paid off, and the church has been raised to the position of a vigorous spiritual power.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies has decided to continue his ministrations at New-court, Tollington-park. At the recent church meeting, attended by 700 members, it was agreed to give Mr. Davies all necessary help during the winter months, when, in consequence of his son's ill-health, the family must live abroad.

The visit recently paid to the Independent College at Upper Bangor by Rev. G. O. Newport, of Madras, and the excellent address he delivered, has deepened the interest of many who were present in the London Missionary Society. It is not at all improbable that some of the students will offer their services for the foreign missionary field.

BAPTIST.

The united centenary meetings of the Yorkshire and Lancashire and Cheshire Associations were held in Rochdale last week.

There are 2000 children in the Sunday-school at West Croydon Church, and about a hundred of the scholars are members of the church.

A week's special service has been concluded in connection with the church at Hull. Several ministers were associated with the pastor (Rev. F. Russell) in the work.

At the meeting of the Surrey and Middlesex Association, Rev. E. W. Tarbox read a paper entitled, "Wanted, a New Reformation," not against Popery, but against worldliness, which is growing upon the churches.

A special service for young men and maidens is held at Bloomsbury Chapel, by Rev. James Baillie, on the first Sunday evening of each month at seven o'clock. The subject next Sunday evening is "A sum in substraction."

The church at Dalston, of which Rev. W. H. Burton is the minister, has in the past nine years received into fellowship 964 members, and raised considerably over £12,000. The pastor states that within a radius of a little over two hundred yards of his pulpit there are no less than ten public-houses and beershops, and a club.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Joseph Alexander, of Sudbury, was recorded a minister May 11, by Colchester monthly meeting.

Four thousand pounds are to be spent in enlarging the recently-erected school premises at Bunhill-fields. They will then accommodate 1000 men.

Two most able discussions took place in the yearly meeting on "Marriages" and "Education," the former needing simplification, the latter extension. Large committees are to report next year.

A crowded foreign mission meeting was held at Devonshire House on Monday evening, May 23. Missionaries from Madagascar, Lebanon, and Africa spoke. Arthur Pease occupied the chair. On Tuesday the Home Mission Meeting was held, and was also well attended. The Home Mission Committee has been reappointed.

Three hundred Friends took advantage of James Garney Barclay's kind invitation to a garden party on Saturday, May 21, at yearly meeting. At the Harts-lane Mission Hall the same morning F. Sessions read an able paper to a large company of Friends on "How to revive small meetings," J. E. Ellis, M.P., in the chair. Joshua Rowntree, M.P., presided over a very enthusiastic meeting at night in Bunhill-fields, in connection with the flourishing adult school there. The good work moves.

METHODIST.

A fortnight's special services have been concluded at Miles Platting Mission, Manchester.

Rev. H. Tindall has been elected President of the South African Conference for the ensuing year.

The United Methodist Free Churches report a considerable increase of members from the foreign stations.

A Sunday afternoon Bible-class at Farnworth, begun two or three months since with about twenty members, has now an attendance of about 100.

A three years' scholarship of the Girton Hall, Cambridge, of the value of £50 per annum, has been won by Miss Macafee, of the Methodist College, Belfast.

Rev. Edward Smith, who is labouring so successfully in Clerkenwell, has undertaken some extensive additions in order to add social provision to the spiritual agencies. He is about to enjoy the much-needed assistance of a lay agent.

The Mission Band recently formed by the Blenheim-street Circuit, Newcastle-on-Tyne, is already doing good work. After one of the outdoor services, four persons clearly decided for Christ, and others were left under deep conviction of sin.

The Conference of the Methodist New Connexion, which meets this month at Stockport, is likely to be of great interest. Among the subjects to be brought forward are the employment of Connexional evangelists, new developments of home and foreign missionary work, and Methodist union.

Miss Wilson, of Carlisle, has concluded a very successful mission at the Spital Tongues Christian Mission Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne. It has been a time of great blessing; a large number of men and women have decided for the Saviour. Over 100 adults came forward as inquirers, and many afterwards accepted the "little bit of blue."

At Ashford, Kent, on the arrival of a battery of the Royal Artillery, forty non-commissioned officers and men were invited to a tea at the Temperance Hotel. Miss Rundle and others addressed the meeting afterwards, and the testimonies of the Christian soldiers to the Saviour's keeping power were very refreshing. Several stayed to the after-meeting.

Rev. J. A. Helliwell has been conducting evangelistic services at Swan Village, West Bromwich. Every house within three-quarters of a mile of the chapel was visited, and there were large congregations. The powerful appeals to the heart and conscience were not without their fruit, for nearly two hundred persons professed to find peace in believing.

The London Mission Committee has decided to hire St. James's Hall for Friday as well as for Sunday. The Mission will probably be commenced about the middle of October, and it is expected that Rev. Mark Guy Pearse will conduct a noon service on Friday, and that meetings for the deepening of spiritual life will be held in the afternoon and evening of that day.

SALVATION ARMY.

New corps have been formed at Upper Norwood a at New Luton, in the Nottingham district.

Three new stations have been opened in Fren Switzerland. At Bale, German Switzerland, in thr weeks, over eighty persons have professed to find salv tion.

The students of the Training Home at Peterborou "keep house," even to the scrubbing of the floo During three months, 3000 houses have been visited, a prayer offered in more than eleven hundred.

At a meeting in the Rescue Home, Jersey, many p sons made a full surrender, vowing to live alone for G In the twelve months since the Home was opene twenty-one girls have been received, of whom only o has turned out unsatisfactorily.

In the Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice and M Justice A. L. Smith made a rule absolute calling up the justices of Torquay to state a case for the opinion the court as to the conviction of a member of the Salv tion Army for taking part in a procession through t streets of Torquay on a Sunday, contrary to loc by-law.

On Whit Monday, in the Congress Hall, a hundre officers were commissioned as workers for Christ some of the towns of Great Britain. An appeal bei made for volunteers for India, fourteen young me offered themselves. Six of the lasses who had alrea been accepted for this work will at once go out strengthen Commissioner Tucker's hands.

Colonel Edmonds reports that Army work in Scotla continues to prosper. There have been wonderf blessings during the last six months in winning souls Christ, the number of anxious inquirers at the meetin having increased in the Glasgow district alone at t rate of nearly 50 per cent. compared with the previo half year. Within the next month seven new corps wi be opened.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mrs. Pickering, wife of Rev. Thomas R. Pickering, minister of the Bishop Auckland circuit.—Mr. Edwar Whydale, for more than fifty years an earnest membe and local preacher of the Methodist church in th Wainfleet circuit.—Mr. Edward Starkie, an active an prominent member of the Methodish church at Highan —Miss Eliza Bew, a member of the Methodist churc of Eastbury, Hungerford circuit.—Rev. Joseph Roge Jenkins, of St. Leonards, Baptist minister.—Mr. Alde man Raworth, for twenty-seven years superintendent the Congregational Sunday-school at Harrogate, an also a deacon of the church.—Mrs. Beaven, an earnes worker in the Congregational church at Holt, Wilts.—Rev. Fitzherbert Bugby, formerly minister of the Baptis church at Stretford.—Rev. Dr. Jeffrey, the well-know United Presbyterian divine of Glasgow.—Rev. Andre Bromwich, Wesleyan missionary at Accra, Wester Africa.—Mr. William Dawson, of South Terriby, Barton on-Humber, for more than fifty years a Methodist loca preacher.—Mr. Jabez F. Starbuck, for many year chapel steward and superintendent of the Methodis Sunday-school at Wisbech.—Rev. William M'Culloch LL.D., formerly Presbyterian minister at Carnbee.—Rev. Alexander Cleghorn, senior pastor of Leuchars Fife, at Melbourne, Victoria.—Rev. James Climie, lat of Scarborough.—Rev. Colin Campbell, late of Bungalore a Presbyterian minister. — Mr. George Davidson, devoted elder of St. Andrew's Church, Kingston.—Rev J. S. S. Robertson, for many years a C.M.S. missionary —Rev. George Hervey Swinny, one of the clergy connected with the Universities' Mission to Central Africa —Lord Saye and Sele, Archdeacon of Hereford, wh died at Hereford on Thursday morning.—Rev. Joh Wilson, D.D., Vicar of Holy Trinity Church, Knightsbridge.

BOHEMIA.—Rev. A. W. Clark, who has prosecuted very difficult Christian work in Bohemia for some year past, is at present in London. He has an almos romantic story to tell, says The British Weekly, th attraction of which is enhanced by the fact that it concerns a people of whom we insular English know little and for whom we care less.

FRANCE.—The religious May meetings have hel their calm anniversaries. The usual societies met i the usual manner, the Deaconesses' and Missionar Societies drawing the most numerous attendance 24,300 copies of the Scriptures have been disseminate by the Bible Society of France during the year. A new issue of 6500 large Bibles of the revised Ostewald has been called for and printed.

CONVERTS AT SIMLA.—On Sunday, April 17, Rev W. Carey, M.B., of Simla, baptized eight men and one woman. Four of the men are Muzbi Sikhs, cultivators from the Umballa district. They received their first impressions while hearing the missionaries preach in their villages last February. Subsequently they went to Simla, where they were further instructed, and at length they professed Christ. Another man, also a villager, first heard the truth from the lips of his brother, who was baptized at Simla in 1884. Another convert had the truths of Christianity instilled into his mind, when quite a boy, by a pious military officer who took a deep interest in the lad's welfare. For years the seed sown in his heart has lain dormant, but at last we see the fruit of this good man's work in the convert's surrender of himself to Jesus. One other, a cook in service at Simla, had a New Testament given him by a member of the church. This he read, and as a result of the study of the Scriptures and the working of God's Spirit, he was led to Christ and resolved upon following Him. The eighth, a young man, and his sister (the ninth) have been for years in the mission schools, where the truth as it is in Jesus has been impressed upon their minds. Their ultimate conversion is attributable partly to the teaching in school and the influence at home of a pious father. We hope these converts are the firstfruits of a large ingathering of souls this year.—Indian Witness.

"Mercies countless as the Sands."

CHRISTIAN WOMEN, can any one of you reckon up the mercies—national, social, and personal—of which she has been the recipient during the reign of

Our Gracious Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria?

Do not countless mercies call for repeated and ungrudging thank-offerings to Him and ought not the blessing of giving, which is greater than that of receiving (Acts xx. 35), to be more highly valued than it has ever yet been?

"Who giveth all,"

Let the Royal Jubilee present itself as an opportunity for the expression of your thankfulness, and "send portions" to the spiritually needy.

The Society for Promoting Female Education in the East had been established just three years when Her Majesty ascended the throne, and it was then the only one in Europe formed for the purpose of taking the Gospel into the seclusion of Eastern homes, and of telling "The old, old Story" to the women and girls of Asia and Africa. It is the oldest Zenana Society in existence.

Out of gratitude, then, to the King of Kings, who has for fifty years preserved the Sceptre of this Realm in the hand of a Woman, and out of pity to the millions of heathen women who are still sitting in darkness, Christian Women, her subjects, are invited to send their Thank-offerings to this Society, which the Lord has so long owned and blessed.

And will not Christian Men also join in these gifts? Have they no Mercies to remember connected with their Queen, their Mothers, their Sisters, their Wives, and their Daughters?

Jubilee Thank-offerings will be gratefully received by Miss E. Rutt, Lower Clapton, E.; Miss L. Hope, 7, Ovington-gardens, Brompton, S.W.; Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall-Bridge-road, S.W; and by Miss Tait, 68, Wilberforce-road, N.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

It is said Government intend shortly to deal with the bogus drinking clubs; it will not be a moment too soon.

The United Kingdom Alliance has received through its president, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, a donation of £1000 for the Alliance funds.

Mr. Coad has had a very successful mission at Lee. Some of the worst drunkards were reclaimed, and on many religious impressions were made.

At the Royal Barracks, Dublin, temperance work is vigorously prosecuted. The Chaplain-General addressed a recent meeting, and a number signed the pledge.

In the United Presbyterian Church Theological Hall, in the Magee College, Londonderry, and in the General Assembly's College, Belfast, the students are nearly all abstainers.

Indignant letters have appeared in the Manchester papers complaining of the enormous drinking facilities provided at the Jubilee Exhibition, and of the poor accommodation for temperance people.

In Liverpool, in what is practically the parliamentary division of East Toxteth, there is a population of over 60,000, but not a single drink-shop. In all the building leases the sale of liquor is absolutely prohibited.

In reply to a deputation on the subject, the Lord Chancellor stated he should not consider brewers and wine merchants disqualified for the magistracy, but would deal with each case on its merits. As a rule, he would not appoint those interested in public-houses.

FOREIGN.

The sale of intoxicating liquors is to be wholly discontinued at the expiration of present leases within a radius of twenty miles of Melbourne at all railway refreshment-rooms.

Charles Absolom, the famous cricketer, is instanced as a living testimony to the advantages of teetotalism. He is now in his seventieth year, and his performances in the field to-day equal those of some of the best of men in their prime.

The Sultan of Morocco has closed all tobacco shops as well as liquor shops. Mohammedans as a rule are lively smokers and use tobacco and coffee freely. And yet Mohammedan nations are more temperate than Christian peoples are.

New York witnessed on the 8th inst. what The Independent describes as the most abstinent Sunday the city has seen since the Dutch settled New Amsterdam. The Mayor had ordered the law against Sunday selling to be enforced, but the hotel bars and saloons rigorously enforced it of their own free will to show how odious the law is. "We did not notice anything odious about it," says The Independent; "it seemed an uncommonly well-behaved Sunday, such as we would like to see every week."

A NEW GERMAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY has been established, called the "East African," in Berlin, under the leadership of Dr. Büttner. It has the double object of providing for the spiritual wants of the German settler and preaching the Gospel to the heathen and Mohammedan. It has also a double method of action, by establishing hospitals and direct evangelisation. A Society of Women has been formed in Berlin to send out women for this purpose; the well-known missionary, Greiner, late of the St. Chrischona Mission, who has great experience of East Africa in the Nile regions, accompanied by his niece, has been appointed, and proceeds at once.—Dr. R. N. Cust.

Forthcoming Meetings.

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, May 28, 1887.

⁂ Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

⁂ We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

⁂ Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

THE MEDICAL MISSIONARY who has worked for thirty years amongst the suffering at Nazareth, has been persecuted, and his work stopped by the Government. The Roman Catholics have also suffered, but strong influence has been brought to bear on their behalf, and they are now allowed the same freedom to teach which they had before; the evangelical Christians are still under the ban of the Government. The prayers of Christians are asked for those who are surrounded by persecution, more especially the Syrian Orphanage of Jerusalem.—Journal Religieux.

The JUBILEE YEAR!
The JUBILEE YEAR!

A POEM. By R. C. M.
REPRINTED FROM "The Christian."

"Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the Jubilee
to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month,
in the Day of Atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout
all your land.
And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a Jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family."
(Lev. xxv. 9, 10.)

'Tis the Day of Atonement! The utmost bound
Of Israel's land hears 'the joyful sound'
Of the silver trumpet, which, loud and clear,
Proclaims the gladsome Jubilee Year.

. . . .

The atonement is made; and the trumpet's voice
Bids every sinner 'Rejoice! Rejoice!'
The Gospel proclaims an eternal release,
And bids the debtor go home in peace."

FRIENDLESS & FALLEN.

THE THIRTIETH ANNUAL MEETING of this Institution will be held (D.V.) at the Homes, Parsons Green, Fulham, on Saturday, June 11.

THOS. SALT, Esq., M.P., will take the chair at 3 o'clock.

Mrs. FRANK BEVAN will open the new Training Home for 50 Friendless young girls.

A CHOIR OF 50 YOUNG GIRLS will sing a selection of JUBILEE HYMNS.

Friends desirous of inspecting the arrangements of both the Homes at Parsons Green, may do so on presenting CARDS OF INVITATION for the Meeting (to be obtained at 200, Euston-road) from two to three o'clock on the day of the Meeting, and also after the termination of the Meeting.

TEA WILL BE SERVED AT 5 O'CLOCK in a Marquee, under the shadow of the venerable OLD MULBERRY TREE, as on former occasions.

There will be a SALE OF USEFUL AND FANCY ARTICLES, many of which will be made by the Inmates of the Institution. LADIES ARE INVITED TO SEND CONTRIBUTIONS OF WORK to be sold on the occasion.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALE, AND THE CONTRIBUTIONS received on the day of the Meeting, will be applied to the proposed extension of the Open All Night Refuge, which has been so pre-eminently blessed of God in saving young women and girls.

Since the establishment of this Asylum in 1867, more than 13,000 POOR YOUNG CREATURES have been sheltered.

God's merciful providence has already supplied about £500 towards the proposed extension.

READER, kindly help.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS NOT SINLESS PERFECTION.

By Rev. CHARLES GRAHAM, AUTHOR OF
"Christ our Light," "The Highway of Holiness," etc., etc.

COMMENDATORY NOTICES.

"We are glad to see that Mr. Graham does not come forward as an advocate of what is called 'sinless perfection'; and his arguments in favour of striving towards the attainment of a higher life than any of us live are sound and Scriptural." The Rock.

"His treatment is simple and Scriptural, and not the least satisfactory point in his argument is his refutation of the idea of 'sinless perfection' from the writings of that very apostle who is supposed by some people to teach it."—The Baptist.

"The book is full of the marrow of the Gospel, and will do anyone good who reads it." Irish Baptist Magazine.

"Mr. Graham clearly teaches the truth of complete and certain victory, always within the reach of all believers. He teaches also how this victory is to be sustained day by day, and how also it may be lost. Our readers will do well, with open Bible, to read this little eighteenpenny book."—Pennel.

MORGAN & SCOTT'S "PORTABLE" EDITION
LONDON
MORGAN & SCOTT

Size, 9⅝ inches long,
7⅜ inches wide,
and 1¼ inches thick.

PORTABLE 3/6 EDITION.

"'CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE' in a well-bound and conveniently-sized volume issued at 3s. 6d., seems one of the marvels of modern book production. Messrs. Morgan & Scott's portable edition is of this class. There has been copious controversy on the merits and demerits of Cruden's great work; but we prefer to believe in Lowndes's opinion that 'Cruden's Concordance should be in every library.' It is uncommonly complete, the definitions of leading words remarkably accurate, and the references exceedingly correct."—Publishers' Circular, March 15, 1887.

"The best cheap edition of 'CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE' that we have seen is the one published by Morgan & Scott—a portable edition, clearly printed on good paper and well bound, unabridged, and with the proper names newly translated, all for 3s. 6d. Even the poorest Christian may now have a Concordance to help him in studying the Word of God with profit."—Christian Leader, March 17, 1887.

Mr. C. H. SPURGEON writes:—"Your Concordance at 3s. 6d. must be a great boon to ministers. We could very well dispense with a Concordance to the Apocrypha. As in all other respects it is an unabridged Cruden, I am greatly rejoiced to see it produced for so small a sum. May you sell tens of thousands!"

OTHER EDITIONS OF "CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE."

Cruden's Concordance

TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.
Popular 5/- Edition.
With the Proper Names Newly Translated.
Printed on Thicker Paper:
trongly Bound in Cloth, 757 Pages.

"Every Christian home ought to have a copy. . . . It is beautifully got up, carefully edited, and all has been done to make the work as useful as possible."—Oldham Chronicle.

Cruden's Concordance

TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.
Presentation 7/6 Edition.
Handsomely Bound in Cloth Boards.

"This is a noble book, large size, consisting of 757 pages. . . . It contains a carefully revised and much extended list of the Scripture Proper Names, with their meaning in the original languages. This is a most important feature of the work, and renders it so much the more valuable to the Biblical Student, as well as the Sunday-school Teacher and Scripture Reader."—Gospel Magazine.

Cruden's Concordance

TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.
Illustrated 10/6 Edition.
Beautifully Bound in Cloth, Gilt Edges, containing Twelve exquisite Steel-Plate Engravings, and Six beautiful Coloured Maps.

The Rev. J. L. PORTER, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism, speaking of the Steel-Plate Engravings, says:—"I have examined with care the views for Biblical illustration. . . . The Engravings are very beautiful. In clearness, accuracy, and general effect they surpass, I think, any I have seen.—J. L. PORTER."

Cruden's Concordance

TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.
Library 10/6 Edition.
Half Bound in Leather.

"Not the humblest Christian—able to read his Bible, and desirous as he should be of knowing its wondrous teaching—should be without a good Concordance; much less those who aim at imparting Scriptural instruction to others." Footsteps of Truth.

PROF. W. G. BLAIKIE, D.D., LL.D.

OF contemporary Scottish names there are few more widely known or justly steemed than that of Professor Blaikie. Honoured in his own denomination as one f its most gifted and devoted sons, his name is a symbol to the religious world outside, of the loyal, cultivated, and in the best sense catholic evangelicalism which has been a distinguishing mark of the Church of he Scottish Disruption.

It would hardly be correct to count Dr. Blaikie among the Free Church "fathers." He was ordained only one year prior to the Disruption; and so aboundng are his energies and abours still, that few perhaps realise that he was among the men of 43. Nevertheless the fact emains that he was one f those who "came ut" in that memorable ear, in spite of many nducements to abide within the Scottish "Establishment." There s this to be added, that, while he felt in its full orce the spiritual imulse of the Disruption movement, and has etained the best savour f that formative period f his church's history, e was one of those who om the first had views nd sympathies ahead of he age and beyond the mits of his own denomiation. By predisposion and in influence, as ell as in point of time, e has been an imortant link between the rst and the second enerations of the Free hurch of Scotland. His ental freshness and spiritual vitality ake him a contemporary of the younger ce of its ministers, no less than of the en of '43.

WILLIAM GARDEN BLAIKIE was born at berdeen, in 1820. His father was well nown throughout the county as an able wyer, and held the position of Lord rovost in the city. He was a man of ngular excellence and attractiveness of haracter, and his sudden death in his arly prime made a profound impression on the community. The writer remembers having heard from Dr. Blaikie himself that it was this event which brought his previous serious convictions to a point, and fixed his purpose to give himself to the ministry of the Gospel.

(From Photograph by Mr. Marshall Wane, Edinburgh.)

Young Blaikie was educated at the grammar school of Aberdeen, under the famous Melvin; and both there and at Marischal College, where he graduated in 1837, he held the foremost place. His student career was throughout a brilliant one. One who knew him well in those early days records that even in the University he had achieved a reputation alike for scholarship and literary taste. While in the Divinity Hall he more than once, in a competition open to all the students, gained the prize offered by the Earl of Aberdeen—then Chancellor of the University and afterwards Premier—for an essay in theology.

Soon after licence, Mr. Blaikie was ordained minister of the Established Church of Scotland, at Drumblade, in Aberdeenshire, where, as already noted, it fell to him, after a brief pastorate of a single year, to lead forth most of his flock to the formation of a Free Church congregation. This work was bravely undertaken and most successfully carried through; but the young minister's ability and zeal had already attracted attention in the South, and in the year 1844 he was called, and felt bound to undertake, the task of founding and rearing a new charge in Pilrig, Edinburgh. Conspicuous success again crowned his efforts, of which the church, manse, and schools of Pilrig are visible memorials still. A large and attached congregation gathered round him to enjoy his ministrations and support him in his varied Christian enterprises; and the story of the twenty-four years of his Edinburgh pastorate is a continuous record of unwearying service.

In the pulpit, Mr. Blaikie was careful never to offer his people what had cost him nothing. His preaching style was characterised not only by much evangelic "unction" and unwavering loyalty to the great verities of the Christian faith, but by a freshness of thinking and sympathy of feeling which gave added interest and power. In the homes of the people he proved himself a true minister and friend—with a love which, while it did not flatter the poor, was inventive for their good. At his suggestion, and with his aid, the "Pilrig Model Buildings"—the first of the kind in Edinburgh—were erected.

From his pen there came a volume, too, breathing a genuine appreciation of the troubles of the working class, and in wise, cheering, sympathetic words pointing to a solvent for them. The book was called "Better Days for Working People"; and the circulation steadily rose to upwards of 80,000. It showed so complete a mastery of the principles of social science, and was imbued throughout with so bright and genial a Christianity, that its remarkable popularity surprised nobody except perhaps its author. The historian Guizot congratulated him on knowing "how to speak to the democracy with sympathy, and at the same time with Christian freedom."

Nor was this by any means the only product of the busy Pilrig minister's pen. Besides being editor of The Free Church Magazine for several years (1849—53), and subsequently of The North British Review (1860—63), he gave to the world in book form several important Bible studies, of which his "David, King of Israel" (1856), still well known and widely read, may be taken as a sample.

In recognition of his gifts and services, Mr. Blaikie was made a Doctor of Divinity by the University of Edinburgh in 1864—the further degree of LL.D. being added by Aberdeen, in 1872. Before the latter date, however, his pastorate had closed, and his professional life had entered on its second main division.

In 1868, a professor had to be chosen for the Chair of Apologetics and Pastoral Theology in the New College, Edinburgh. The eyes of the Free Church naturally turned to Dr. Blaikie. His writings, together with his admirable ministerial record, proclaimed him gifted with the double qualification needed for doing justice to both the subjects associated with the Chair. His power of attracting and teaching young men, moreover, had been abundantly shown. It was with large expectations, therefore, that the General Assembly called Dr. Blaikie to a post, which he has ever since held with great advantage to the Church as well as credit to himself.

Professor Blaikie—not for a moment to be confounded with his no less versatile but much less reverend contemporary, Professor Blackie, of the Greek Chair in the University—has, in the second period of his career, been found as active and unostentatiously devoted as in the first. He has not sought to make his Chair an "easy chair," nor has he confounded a Professor with a man of all work. His class duties have held no inferior place in his regard; but he has faithfully discharged the trust primarily committed to him, and made the training of the rising ministry his first concern. Students are sometimes prone to count themselves "wiser than all their teachers;" but we do not envy the man who could pass from Professor Blaikie's classes without carrying with him lofty impulses, as well as grateful memories. As a teacher he is clear and concise, yet comprehensive. There is a suggestiveness as well as finish in many of his lectures which make them models of their kind; and through all his prelections, written or extempore, reverence and penetration are allied, and the ability of the teacher is fitly supported by the character of the man. While the defences of Christianity are made more palpable, and its weapons of offence more ready to the student, he is not suffered to forget that Christianity itself is a living power within the soul. None can listen to Dr. Blaikie without feeling that with him "the arguments of the mind" are indeed "the property of the heart." And his interest in the students is not confined to the class-room. To Professor Blaikie is due the credit of having organised and set afoot some fifteen years ago the New College Dining Hall—the first institution of the kind in Scotland—which gives the students the double advantage of an excellent meal at little cost, and of pleasant social intercourse together when the classes for the day are over. Many an act of kindness have individual students also experienced at the Professor's hands, both during college days and afterwards. With no patience for frivolity or indolence, he is ever ready to encourage earnestness and industry. There is in him the power of rebuke; but more congenial in its exercise is the power of kindness, and many have found him a friend in time of need.

Alongside his professional duties, Professor Blaikie, it must be added, has accomplished, since 1868, what many a man would be content and thankful to call a life work.

He has had the pen of a ready writer, and the fine literary touch of earlier years has not suffered from the exigencies of rapid execution. Besides contributing numerous articles to periodicals at home and abroad, Dr. Blaikie was editor of The Sunday Magazine from 1871—4, and of The Catholic Presbyterian from 1879—83; and he is still a coadjutor editor of the American Presbyterian Review, as well as a contributor to the "Dictionary of National Biography," and to the "Pulpit Commentary," in which "Jonah" and "Ephesians" have been assigned to him. Of his separate publications, only a few can be instanced here. An admirable manual of homiletical and pastoral theology, "For the Work of the Ministry," which was published in 1873, gave to a wider circle than that of the classroom the valuable results of the writer's observation and large experience. It was followed by a companion work, "Pastoral Methods of our Lord." Several other volumes have illustrated the practical bent of Dr. Blaikie's mind; but one in particular may be noted as revealing him on the devotional and contemplative side—his "Glimpses of the Inner Life of our Lord." Nor must we omit to name another of his later works, which has only to be mentioned to be recognised as one of the classics of modern biography, "The Personal Life of David Livingstone."

Then Professor Blaikie has been busy all these years with his voice as well as his pen. He has never indeed been prominent as what is technically called "a leader" in the Church. Construction rather than controversy has been his forte, or at any rate his choice; and, although, now and again, he has interposed with effect in the ecclesiastical arena, he has been less heard in church courts than many of his admirers could have wished. More than once he has been chosen to represent his church on important public occasions; and when work needing both a sound judgment and a pacific temper has had to be done in distracted congregations, the Assembly has again and again found in him a fit and willing agent. The Professor's services in the pulpit have all along been highly valued and much sought after; and, to his credit be it said, they have been freely given. Especially, in this connection, it should be mentioned, that besides frequently preaching on "occasions" throughout the country, he had the principal share, a few years ago, in originating and successfully establishing the Mayfield Free Church—now one of the most flourishing of the Edinburgh suburban charges. In the temperance cause Dr. Blaikie has done yeoman service; and in this and other branches of home mission work his bright and gifted partner has been an unwearied helpmate. He has for the last seven years been president of the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland, and takes a deep interest in its affairs, especially in its excellent colportage work.

One marked feature of Dr. Blaikie's later life has been the profound interest he has manifested in foreign churches. His mission of congratulation to the Union Assembly of the American Presbyterian Church, which met in Philadelphia in 1870, was much to his liking; but he has "loved the brotherhood" with something more than words. He had a chief part—and it was a work of great labour and anxiety—in organising and bringing together, in 1877, the Alliance of Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian system. At the successive "Pan-Presbyterian Councils" — in Edinburgh, Philadelphia, and New York—he has acted as one of the clerks; and in the interval he has maintained, through The Catholic Presbyterian and The Quarterly Register, a bond of union between the churches. Struggling Continental churches have learned to look to Dr. Blaikie as their especial friend. Many a foreign student and pastor finds his way to his hospitable home in Edinburgh; and the coffers of more than one church on the Continent have owed not a little to the Professor's generosity, both of gift and effort. The cause of the Waldensian pastors, for instance, and that of the Bohemian Commemoration Fund, were pleaded by him not long ago, with a disinterested and productive eloquence, in many a Scottish pulpit.

We have, in short, in Dr. Blaikie an example of a life which has had to do with many diverse interests, but of which the unifying principle that furnishes its key is not far to seek. Devotion to Christ is the explanation of its multifarious activities; for these, however various, have been animated by the one desire to have Christianity applied to life—to see the individual, the family, the Church, the community, imbued with the spirit of Christ—to see Christianity influencing our literature, science, art, legislation, business, and, in short, every human interest.

The Professor is not an old man yet, and more good work—such as the Cunningham Lectures now in preparation—may be expected of him. But a long measure is already needed for his life—may it be much longer still!—if we accept the poet's standard:—

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

FIFTY YEARS' PROGRESS.

MUCH has been written, wisely or unwisely, on the progress made during the reign of Victoria; some, like our Poet Laureate, have written in a pessimistic spirit, and our late Prime Minister has replied in a more hopeful mood. Doubtless each is right in some respects, and looking at the question from his own standpoint. As in an engagement, there may be, and frequently is, success in one part of the field, and defeat and disaster in another, so in the great struggle which is going on ceaselessly in this world between the opposite forces of good and evil, it is not always easy to determine with which lie the fortunes of the day.

In the spheres of science, literature, art, education, locomotion, and commercial expansion, progress has been extraordinary, even beyond anything which the world has hitherto witnessed; truly we may appropriate to the Victorian era the prediction of the prophet, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Mission work in heathen lands has also made gratifying progress, and we may conclude that Christian knowledge was included in that which the seer foretold.

But amidst all that has been written on this subject there are a few things which have not been sufficiently noted, and of which stock has not been taken in summing up our gains and losses of the last fifty years. These things are more plainly apparent to one who, like the writer hereof, can look back some sixty years upon public life in London. First and foremost, the teaching and practice in the great branch of the Church established in this realm has deteriorated in a painful degree. At the commencement of the reign the great Evangelical Revival of the eighteenth century had penetrated the Established Church, and wherever there was life it was the life of Apostolic Gospel teaching. Since then, activity and energy have been developed; but while they have thrust out indifference, its place has been occupied by ritualism, sacramentarianism, and sacerdotalism.

In the region of social morality great changes have taken place; some of them the effect of well-meaning but mistaken legislation. I allude in the first place to the work of two great statesmen—Brougham and Gladstone. The first, desirous "that the poor man should have his beer," covered the land with beer-shops. Anyone who could muster £2 could, quite irrespective of character, have a licence; the farm labourer, instead of refreshing himself at his home, or at the village inn, where the profits were derived from food, lodging, and forage as well as from drink, was induced to spend his evenings where consumption of drink alone was the source of profit, and where, consequently, a large consumption per head was necessary to sustain the business. The beer-house keeper had, therefore, a direct inducement to make his customers literally "drunk on the premises."

Again, Mr. Gladstone, looking at the sale of wine from the social, economic, and financial point of view, and regardless of moral results, converted every grocers' store in town and country into a retail dispensary for wine, beer, and spirits, and the basket of the farmers' and labourers' wives became the means of introducing alcoholic drink into the home circle, resulting too frequently in a painful accession of intemperance amongst women. It is quite impossible to estimate the amount and extent of moral mischief which these statesmen have, with good intentions, inflicted on their fellow subjects by these two measures, outweighing, perhaps, all the benefits, admittedly great, arising from other reforms which they assisted in inaugurating.

Another change for the worse in the same direction has taken place during the same period. I allude to the introduction of the drinking-bar. This commenced some forty or fifty years ago by the opening in London of bars for the sale of "Crowley's Alton Ale." It was not long before other brewers and spirit dealers followed suit. Clerks and employers in our cities and towns had previously taken their ale or porter with their lunch or dinners, but the system of wine, beer, and spirit bars introduced the habit of taking drams, nips, and drains between meals, and resulted in the unhealthy craving for stimulant which invariably results from taking alcoholic liquor on an empty stomach, and leads, if persisted in, to confirmed habits of drunkenness. Many are the distressing incidents which I have witnessed in connection with bar-drinking. Bars are now found at every street corner, at the chief railway stations, at the theatre, the concert-room, the music-hall, the courts of law, and even in the Houses of the Legislature. I can well recollect when, at the theatre and concert-room, nothing was permitted but the basket of the orange-woman; now drink and smoke form a material adjunct to the evening's entertainment, and if a manager were to banish them, he might as well close his house.

This introduces another recollection of fifty years' ago. There were then no "music halls." By this I mean that music and drinking were not then wedded as they too frequently are to-day. Doubtless there is necessity for the enlivening of the dull round of life of too many of the hard-toiling men, women, lads and lasses of our great cities. It is not the use of music, but its great abuse, to which I allude, and its being made to minister to the ends of drinking, and too often of indecency and profanity. In a work published this year, which is intended as a guide-book and not in any sense as a moralist, the author has nothing to say in praise of the music hall, its songs, its music, or its influence. How great that influence must be when it is stated that, in the Metropolis alone there are no less than 408 of these halls, capable of seating, nightly, 170,000 people. Some of these halls are attached to gin palaces, and in all, it is believed, with the one exception of the Royal Victoria Hall, alcoholic drink is dispensed. Ballet dancing is introduced in some of them, and double entendre and indecent innuendo in the songs is looked for in others as part of the evening's entertainment. Who can estimate the ill-effect of such recreation on the rising generation!

But there is yet another evil to which I will allude, which in this country and our colonies is the product of the Victorian era. It is now some twenty-two or twenty-three years since our rulers stealthily and gradually introduced into this country and its dependencies the regulation and licensing of sin, under the delusive pretexts of promoting morality and health. That this should have taken place during the reign of a Sovereign whose character is blameless, and whose Court has been exceptionally pure, makes it the more to be deplored. Secretly and insidiously has the abominable system been introduced, without the knowledge or consent of the people. They have happily put a stop to it at home, but all round the world where British influence extends, our colonists and native subjects have before them the wretched example and evil influence of degrading vice taken charge of by the British Government, and contributing to the revenues of the British Empire.

There is, of course, something to be said per contra, for "when iniquity comes in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord lifts up a standard against it." It would be sad, indeed, if it were not so; but we should be living in a fool's paradise if we were to conclude that all the progress during the last fifty years has been in the direction of establishing the Kingdom of Christ.

ANTI-VIVISECTION SOCIETY.

THIS Society is doing valuable service in seeking to promote public opinion in favour of the object for which it exists—the protection of God's dumb animals from the cruel, barbarous, and most inhuman treatment they are subjected to by medical men for the so-called purpose of acquiring scientific knowledge.

The Chairman (Hon. P. CARTARET HILL) at the recent annual meeting at the Criterion said: The question that those have to face who maintain they are at liberty to treat the lower animals as they like, is, What right have they, at the expense of the intense suffering and unpardonable torture of God's humble creatures, to carry on experiments which are pronounced by the highest medical authorities, among whom may be mentioned Sir William Ferguson, to be of no benefit to humanity, and which it is clear are not sanctioned by Him who is the Author and finisher of all things? The fact that such experiments are a breach of the law of God alone, he maintained, is sufficient in a professedly Christian country like England, to put a stop to them. He gave several instances of horrible cruelty, one of which was that of a dog that had its brain, portion by portion destroyed, being allowed to linger until it was relieved by death.

Rev. H. R. HAWEIS condemned the practice of vivisection as contrary to the instincts of humanity and the dictates of religion, as well as opposed to the true teaching of science. Dr. HAUGHTON asserted that such a laboratory for vivisection as it had been suggested to form out of the bequest of Sir Erasmus Wilson would represent horrible torture and diabolical wickedness. He corroborated the observations of the previous speaker, informed the meeting that the medical profession as a whole are afraid to express their opinion on the subject, and denounced the Pasteur system of inoculation as quackery. Dr. CLARK and Rev. F. L. MEARNS argued that the inevitable cruelty of the practice of vivisection is calculated to demoralise the community which sanctions it; and at their request the meeting, which was largely composed of ladies, resolved to send a petition to Parliament craving for its entire prohibition. The latter described the present act of Parliament relating to vivisection as one of the grossest frauds ever made on the public.

THE PORTSMOUTH PROTESTANT HOME.—This Home for the reclamation of fallen women, in the principal naval town of the world, has done good work during the past year. About half of the 178 inmates who here were provided with a comfortable home, whilst being trained for service or some other useful position in life, gave distinct evidence of changed characters, and were sent into service or to their friends. Since the Home has been opened many have been brought to know and love the Lord Jesus Christ, and hundreds have been much blessed. The temperance restaurant in the new building is much valued by the public and is a great success. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Colebrook, superintendent, Brunswick-road, Southsea.

THE LADS OF RATCLIFF.

In connection with the Sailors' Rest, in Ratcliff-highway, Mr. Isaacs and a few other workers, ladies as well as gentlemen, have taken a house and commenced a much-needed experiment among the lads and young men of the locality. The very difficulty proves the need. They rush in like a herd of wild horses, and the language of some of them necessitates the close-shutting of the ladies' ears. But here is the finest raw material in the world. Nothing pays such interest for cultivation and manufacture as humanity. Other material may be raised in value a thousand-fold, but it all belongs to earth and time; this living material, with an immortal soul, will repay millions per cent. in time and in eternity.

Visiting them a few evenings since, we found some bright young specimens of whom any parents might be proud, and who may either become useful members of society or pests to the community.

The information and knowledge which some of them had acquired, proved the Board School to be no inconsiderable power; but whether for good or evil will depend largely on the after training which the boys and girls receive. The political opinions of some of these young gentlemen were very advanced in a Republican direction. One of them told us that if this form of Government replaced Royalty there would be millions of money to divide among the people. He was very decided as to the impropriety of allowing the Duke of Connaught to leave his command and come home for the Jubilee, whereas a policeman would not be allowed to leave his post if his wife was dying. We asked him where he had picked up these views; he replied, "At school. When we had said the Collect and the Lord's Prayer, the master used to read the newspaper to us." Evidently this particular teacher had given himself con amore to Thomson's "delightful task, to rear the tender thought, to teach the young idea how to shoot." If we go on cramming the heads of the rising multitude with book (not to say newspaper) lore, without educating or training them to use their fingers in any useful handicraft, we may find that we are teaching the young idea how to shoot in another sense than that intended by the poet of "The Seasons," and that we are preparing for ourselves an aggravated illustration of Dr. Watts's wise deliverance that "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." We are, however, glad to know that the London School Board has decided to add to their curriculum of study a department for training in the industrial arts and occupations. The resolve is an eminently wise one, and we trust it may be carried out on the largest possible scale.

We regard, and wish our readers to look upon, with deep interest the brave endeavour of our friends in Ratcliff to bring these wild young heathens under loving Christian influence; and, although it is quite in its infancy, we rejoice to see that already a distinct impression has been made on some of them. If "the classes" wish that the next generation should enjoy what their parents leave them, they cannot do a wiser thing than seek the physical and mental well-being of "the masses." But this is taking a very low and sordid view. Those who are privileged with happy, comfortable, Christian homes cannot divest themselves of the responsibility of seeking the welfare, spiritually and temporally, of those who are less favourably circumstanced. Duty and self-interest alike demand that the generous and earnest devotion to the welfare of the poor which characterises a few living Christian men and women should become the rule amongst all who profess the name of Him who came to seek and to save that which was lost.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.

THE TEST OF THE HOME LIFE.

1 Kings xvii.

Many a man might bear himself as a hero and saint in the solitudes of Cherith, or on the heights of Carmel, and yet wretchedly fail in the home life of Zarephath. It is one thing to commune with God in the solitudes of nature, and to perform splendid acts of devotion and zeal for Him in the presence of thousands, but it is quite another to walk with Him day by day in the midst of a home, with its many calls for the constant forgetfulness of self. Blessed, indeed, is the home life on whose threshold we cast aside our reserve, our attitude of self-defence, our suspicions and our fears, and resign ourselves to the unquestioning trust of those whose love puts the tenderest construction on much that the world exaggerates and distorts! And yet it would be idle to deny that there is much to try and test us just where the flowers bloom, and the voices of hate and passion die away in distant murmurs. There is a constant need for the exercise of gentleness, patience, self-sacrifice, self-restraint. And beneath the test of home, with its incessant duties and demands, many men break down, whose character seems, like some Alpine peak, to shoot up far beyond the average of those with whom they associate in the busy world.

This ought not so to be; nor need it be. If our religion is what it should be, it will resemble the law of gravitation, which not only controls the planets in their spheres, but guides the course of each dust-grain through the autumn breeze, and determines the fall of a rose-leaf fluttering to the path. Everything will come beneath its sway—each look, each word, each trivial act. Indeed, we shall show the reality and thoroughness of our religion, when it is no longer a garment, to be put off and on at will; but when it is like our skin, to be worn always, and from which it is impossible to separate. The truly religious man will be as sweet in irritating gnat-stings as in crushing calamities; as self-denying for a child as for a crowd; as patient over a spoilt or late meal as over an operation which summons all his manhood to the front. "My grace is sufficient for thee" is the one answer of Jesus Christ to all inquiries; the one reply to all excuses, and complaints about trying circumstances. Thy home-life was chosen for thee by the unerring skill of One who knows thee better than thou knowest thyself, and who could not mistake. It has been selected as the best school of grace for thee. Its burdens were poised on the hand of infinite love, before they were placed on thy shoulders. Its pressure has been carefully measured by scales, more delicate than those which chemists use. And, now, looking down upon thee, the Master says:—"There is nothing in thy life that may not be lived in Me, for Me, through Me; and I am willing to enable thee to be sweet and noble and saint-like in it all."

In our last, we saw something of the power and Spirit with which Elijah was filled and endued. It was nothing less than the Holy Ghost Himself; and we learnt that that same glorious gift is for each of us. Indeed, it is our bounden duty never to rest until we are filled with that same fulness, and clothed in that same robe. But we are now to follow him into a home, and see how he bears the test of home life, and we shall learn to admire and love him the more. He lived a truly human life; he was not "too great or good for human nature's daily food." He was the same man in the widow's house as on Carmel's heights. He is like one of those mountains, of which we have spoken, piercing the heavens with unscalable heights, but clothed about the lower parts with woodlands and verdant fields and smiling bowers, where bees gather honey, and children play. He shows that when a man is full of the Holy Ghost, it will be evidenced by the entire tenour of his daily walk and conversation. In this he reminds us of Luther, the Elijah of modern times, who stood alone against the apostasy of the Romish church, but whose family life was a model of beauty—an oasis in the desert. Let those, who only know him as the Reformer, read his letters to his little daughter, and they will be captivated by the winsomeness and tenderness of that great and gentle soul.

I. Elijah teaches us Contentment.—The fare in the widow's home was frugal enough, and there was only just sufficient of it for their daily needs. Human nature, which was as strong in the prophet as in the rest of us, would have preferred to be able to count sacks of meal and barrels of oil. It would have been pleasant to go into some spacious storeroom, and, looking around on the abundant provision, to say: "Soul, thou hast goods enough to carry thee through the years of famine: take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." But this is not God's way, nor is it the healthiest discipline for our better life.

God's rule is day by day.—The manna fell on the desert sands day by day. Our bread is promised to us for the day. As our day, so will our strength be. And they who live like this are constantly reminded of their blessed dependence on their Father's love; they are led back again to the life of the little child; they know nothing of those temptations to self-sufficiency, which work ruin to the rich, as the growth of the southern seas silently eats away the bottoms of the mighty vessels which defy the storms, but become the prey of myriads of minute insects, working always out of sight.

If God were to give us the choice between seeing our provision and keeping it ourselves, or not seeing it and leaving Him to deal it out, day by day, most of us would be almost sure to choose the former alternative. It gratifies our sense of importance to count up our stores, our barrels, and our sacks; it invests us with so much superiority to our neighbours; it gives such a sense of security. But we should be wiser far to say, "I am content to trust Thee, Father, the living God, who givest us all things richly to enjoy; keep Thou the stores under thine own hand, they will give me less anxiety; they will not lead me into temptation; they will not expose me to be jealous of others less favoured than myself.

And those who live thus are not worse off than others.—Nay, in the truest sense, they are better off. Better off, because the responsibility of maintaining them rests wholly upon God; and they are delivered from the fret of anxiety, the strain of daily care, and the temptations which make it almost impossible for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God. If God guarantees, as He does, our support, does it much matter whether we can see the sources from which He will obtain it? It might gratify our curiosity, but it would not make them more sure. They are as really in existence, and beneath his eye; and they will as really come safely to our hand. The main thing is to understand the precious promise, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Then let us go on doing our duty, filling our time, working out the plan of our life. We may be as free from care as the birds, that have neither storehouse nor barn. We may laugh as merrily as the child, who comes in from school to eat, and goes out again to play, and is utterly thoughtless about its next meal. We may be entirely destitute, our pantry bare, our money exhausted, our means of livelihood gone; but our Father has ample resources; his are the cattle on a thousand hills, and the waving cornfields, and the myriad fish of the ocean-depths; his hired servants have bread enough and to spare; He has prepared a supply for our need and He will deliver it to time, if only we will trust Him.

It is impossible to tell whose eyes may read these words; but if they should be read by those whose one aim it is to be independent, let them consider what they mean. Do they mean to be independent of God, or of men? In point of fact they will live to see that they can be independent of neither. And the serious question presents itself, if this is a worthy aim for those who are the bought slaves of Christ. Surely we are meant to be stewards; not storing up our Lord's money for ourselves, but administering for Him all that we do not need for the maintenance of ourselves and our dear ones, in the position of life in which God has placed us. And our only worldly aim should be to lay out our Lord's money to the very best advantage, so that we may render Him an account with joy, when He comes to reckon with us.

If, on the other hand, these words are read by those who are dependent on daily supplies, with little hope of ever owning more than the daily handful of meal, and the little oil at the bottom of the cruse; let them be comforted by the example of Elijah. "Be content with such things as ye have, for He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee" (Heb. xiii. 5). The bottom of the barrel may have been scraped to-day, but on going to it to-morrow, there will be just enough for to-morrow's needs. The last drop of oil may have been drained to-day, but there will be more to-morrow, and enough. Anxiety will not do you good, but the prayer of faith will. Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of. He who lit life's flame knows how much fuel is required to keep it burning. Throw all responsibility on God. He who gave his own Son will with Him freely give all things. Don't listen to the arch-liar, who bids you distrust and despair; he has never yet been justified by the event; his prophecies have always proved false; his insinuations are simply beds of rank and poisonous stinging nettles, don't lie down in them, but trample them beneath your feet. Oh that we might learn, though it be in the school of privation, in whatsoever state we are, therewith to be content, and to be able to cry, with one of Elijah's compeers, "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me." "For thus saith the Lord God of Israel, The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the Lord sendeth rain upon the earth."

II. ELIJAH ALSO TEACHES US GENTLENESS UNDER PROVOCATION.—We do not know how long the mother hung over her dying child. He may have been struck down like the little fellow who cried, "My head! my head!" and faded in one summer's afternoon; or he may have lingered beneath the spell of a wearying illness, which not only wore out his life, but overtaxed his mother's nerves, so that she spoke unadvisedly and cruelly to the man, who had brought deliverance to her home, "Art thou come to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?"

A remark, so uncalled-for and unjust, might well have stung the prophet to the quick, or prompted a bitter reply. And it would have doubtless done so had his goodness been anything less than inspired by the Holy Ghost. But one of the fruits of his indwelling is Gentleness. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness." The nature breathed into the spirit by the blessed Spirit of God is identical with his own, which is Love; and "Love suffereth long and is kind, is not easily provoked, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." Thus it happened, that without further remark Elijah simply said, "Give me thy son." If there were a momentary uprising of indignation, it was immediately quelled by the Dove which had come to brood in the nest of his heart.

We need more of this practical godliness.—Many deceive themselves. They go to fervid meetings, and profess that they have placed all upon the altar; they speak as if they were indeed filled with the Holy Ghost. But when they return to their homes, the least friction, or interference with their plans, or mistake on the part of others, or angry outburst, arouses a sudden and violent manifestation of temper. Such people have not yet experienced his special grace; there is much more for them to learn. He who first led them to Jesus is able to make them meek with his meekness, and gentle with his gentleness; He can give them victory over their natural infirmities, as well as over all conscious sin; He can work so great a transformation within them that "instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

If the Holy Spirit is really filling the heart, there will come over the rudest, the least refined, the most selfish, a marvellous change; there will be a gentleness in speech, in the very tones of the voice; a tender thoughtfulness in the smallest actions; a peace passing understanding on the face; and these shall be the evident seal of the Holy Ghost, the mint mark of heaven. Are they evident in ourselves?

> Gentle Spirit, dwell with me,
> I myself would gentle be;
> And with words that help and heal,
> Would thy life in mine reveal.

III. ELIJAH TEACHES ALSO THE POWER OF A HOLY LIFE.—Somewhere in the background of this woman's life there was a dark deed, which dwarfed all other memories of wrong-doing, and stood out before her mind, as her sin, "my sin" (verse 18), what it was we do not know; it may have been connected with the birth of that very son. It had probably been committed long years before, and had then filled her with a keen agony of mind; for conscience is not inoperative even in the hearts of the children of idolatry and heathendom (Rom. ii. 18). But of later years, the keen sense of remorse had become dulled, conscience long outraged had grown benumbed, sometimes she even lost all recollection of her sin, for weeks and months together. We all have a wonderful faculty of dismissing from us an unwelcome thought, just as men try to hide from themselves the too-evident symptoms of a disease, which is sapping the forces of life.

There is a wonderful invention, recently perfected, by which sound can be fixed pictorially, and, from the picture, it may be produced again, long years after it was spoken. Imagine your hearing once again the voices long hushed in death! But memory is like this; it fixes all impressions and retains them; it never permits them to be destroyed; though it may not always be able to produce them instantly to a given call. Some memories are like well-classified libraries, in which you can readily discover even the smallest pamphlet; others are so confused that they are useless for practical purposes; yet even in these, nothing that ever came within their range has ever been lost; and whenever the right clue is presented, there is an immediate resurrection and recovery of sounds, and sights, and trains of thought long buried.

How terrible will it be, when the lost soul is met on the threshold of the dark world, to which it goes, by the solemn words, "Son, remember!" And what more fearful punishment could we imagine, than being compelled to meet again, and to confront the hideous past, summoned by an inevitable remembrancer; whilst conscience, no longer stupefied and drugged, is sensitive enough to convince of the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

It is remarkable how different the mental stimulus is, which is required by different castes of mind, to awaken dormant memories. In the case of some, the handwriting on an old letter, a picture, a scent borne on the breeze, a song, will be enough. Their own sorrow reminded Joseph's brethren of their disgraceful behaviour to their brother thirty years before. But in the case of this woman it was Elijah's holy life, combined with her own terrible sorrow. Beneath the spell of these two voices her memory gave up its dead, and her conscience was quickened into vigorous life. "Art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance?"

Oh, to live in the power of the Holy Ghost! Our looks would sometimes then convict the stoutest sinners of sin, as it is recorded of Finney, whose grieved face brought conviction to a young woman, and through her to a whole factory of operatives. Our holy walk would be a standing rebuke; a mirror in which the sin-pocked might see the ravages wrought by sin. Our words would then be sharp two-edged swords, piercing to the dividing of the joints and marrow, of soul and spirit.

And if any reader of this shall be conscious of some hidden but unforgiven sin, let that one know that all efforts to forget will some day be unavailing; sickness may come, or bereavement, or bitter loss; and then that sin will spring up, as if only committed yesterday, in all its horror and agony. It is said that the spirit of the victim haunts the murderer, until he makes reparation by confession and surrender. There is some truth in it, for sin is only blotted out of remembrance, both of God and the soul, when it has been confessed, and put beneath the blood of Jesus. Confess your sin, and claim that cleansing now, and you will hear the voice of God saying, "Your sins and iniquities will I remember no more."

IV. ELIJAH TEACHES, LASTLY, THE SECRET OF GIVING LIFE.—It is a characteristic of those who are filled with the Holy Ghost, that they carry with them everywhere the spirit of life, even resurrection life. We shall not only convince men of sin, but we shall become channels, through which the Divine Life may enter them. Thus was it with the prophet. But mark the conditions under which alone we shall be able to fulfil this glorious function.

(1) Lonely wrestlings.—"He took him out of her bosom, and carried him up into a loft, where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed. And he cried unto the Lord." We are not specific enough in prayer; and we do not spend enough time in intercession, dwelling with holy ardour, on each beloved name, and on each heart-rending case. What wonder that we achieve so little!

(2) Humility.—"He measured himself upon the child." How wonderful that so great a man should spend so much time and thought on that slender frame, and be content to bring himself into direct contact with that which might be thought to defile! It is a touching spectacle, but we must imitate it in some measure. We must seek the conversion of children, winning them ere Satan or the world attach them. But, to do so, we must stoop to them, becoming as little children to win little children for Jesus.

(3) Perseverance.—"He measured himself three times, and cried unto the Lord." Not soon daunted. It is thus that God tests the genuineness of our desire. These deferred answers lead us to lengths of holy boldness and pertinacity of which we should not otherwise have dreamed, but from which we shall never go back. "Men ought always to pray, and not to faint."

And his supplications met with the favour of God. "The Lord heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived." And as the prophet presented him to the grateful and rejoicing mother, he must have been beyond all things gratified with her simple testimony to the reality and power of the life which the Holy Ghost had begotten within him: "Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth." And what was the result of all? Simply this: that woman became so ennobled and changed by her contact with that man of God, that our Saviour awarded to her a prophet's reward (Matt. x. 41). Her work was small, her conceptions obscure, her home Gentile and heathen, and yet, because her motives were noble, and her spirit in sympathy with Elijah's, it was announced by Him, at whose bar we must all stand for our reward, that she had done what she could, and that her crown should shine as brightly as that placed on the brow of the prophet of God. We are rewarded, not according to our sphere, or the results of our work, but according to the sincerity and beauty of our motives, and these may be as lofty in an obscure widow as in Elijah himself.

A HOUSE OF REST for mission workers in Scotland, three or four of whom can be received, is now open. Applications for admission should be addressed to the Lady Superintendent Fairhaven Villa, Eskbank, Midlothian, N.B.

BELIEVERS' MEETINGS, DUBLIN.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

I HAD not been present at one of these gatherings for five years, but spiritual interest and brotherly fellowship have never been more perceptible than at these. Indeed, as far as I could gather from those who have known the meetings more or less intimately during the last twenty years, there was a unanimous feeling that those held last week were quite exceptionally blessed and happy.

A reception and prayer-meeting was held on Monday evening, May 30, at which Mr. J. McVicker read the account of the feeding of the multitude, and the thought of sitting down to be fed by the Lord may be said to have formed the undercurrent of the whole conference. The early morning prayer-meetings were well attended, and the requests numerous and varied. Hearts were bound together in sympathy, in pleading each other's needs at the throne of grace, whilst the conversation and exposition over the breakfast table were also valued.

On Tuesday morning Mr. Walter Wills deduced from the story of the potter in Jeremiah, that the secret of true Christian usefulness is to have no will of our own. The clay must yield ere it can be shaped, and the power we need most of all is the power thus to yield, that God may fashion us according to his own will. Mr. H. Bennett, of Yeovil, next dwelt upon Hebrews i., viii., xii., in which Christ is respectively shown as our Sacrifice, High Priest, and Example, above Melchisedek in glory, and above Aaron in love and sympathy. Exodus v. 1 then formed the theme of a suggestive address from Dr. McKilliam, of Blackheath. The wilderness was the place of Israel's feast, and thus it has ever been with the people of God. Grumbling has often been found to prevail most in times of prosperity, whilst distress as frequently elicits expressions of joy and thanksgiving. It will be noticed that this thought was further developed next day by Mr. G. F. Trench.

Young Christians were more especially in the mind of Mr. T. Miller, as in the evening he dealt with some of the elementary truths which form an essential part of spiritual learning, but which sometimes are but dimly comprehended. He emphasised the necessary distinction between the gift of salvation, without works, and the awards for service after conversion. Next came some stirring words from Mr. Dunn, of Glasgow, on the spirit of joy, praise, and thanksgiving.

Then at greater length followed a thoughtful

ADDRESS BY MR. FRANK WHITE.

If the sea divides some of us, he said, Christ unites us. We are here as sharing in a common salvation, partakers of a common hope, standing under cover of the same precious meritoriousness of our one Lord and Saviour. This is the secret I gather of our meeting. We plead with one another as Paul pleaded with himself and others for "Christ's sake" (Rom. xv. 30; Eph. iv. 32; 2 Cor. xii. 10); for the "Gospel's sake" (1 Cor. ix. 23); for the "elect's sake" (2 Tim. ii. 10); or, as the beloved John, for the "truth's sake" (2 John 2); for his "Name's sake" (John iii.). Yea, for very "love's sake" we exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. Those who have known Christ the longest, who have most claim to be called veterans in his service, love most to dwell on the things they first learned. Bunyan names the shepherds upon the Delectable Mountains, one Knowledge, another Success, another Experience, another Watchful; but all fed their flocks "by the highway side." Teachers and preachers who choose bye paths of their own are to be shunned, whatever their reputation for holiness. Let us learn to feed on old truths, yet with a new relish, holding fast the beginning of our confidence. We need no larger or smaller Bible than the one we have, no new Bible, but a spirit of understanding to study the one that we possess. Study it closely—divide, dissect its very tissues and nerves, but be sure it is to you, nevertheless, a living Word. Get into the warm current of life that runs through it.

And remember, the life is in the blood. Exalt Christ and his atonement. Think how our Lord met the tempter in the wilderness, not by referring him to the visible testimony received from heaven at his baptism, but by the written word: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Mark, not by the Bible as a whole—not by this book, or that book, not by chapters or even verses, but by "every word." We must hold fast to every word. Critics would rob us, indeed, of the entire volume, but they begin with this word and that. "Every word of God is pure." Christ made much of every word, so should we.

Besides understanding for the study of the Word, we need a new sight of Christ. It is to be feared too many have left their first love. Whence shall we fetch more love, more enthusiasm for Christ, but from Christ Himself, by sitting with upturned face where Mary sat, at his feet. Mary sat at his feet, but she did not look at his feet; she looked, doubtless, into his face. There let us look. I know of no other secret whereby to obtain an unworldly walk. I have read of a sculptor, named Dannecker, who spent eight years in producing a face of Christ, and at last wrought out one in which the emotions of love and sorrow were so perfectly blended that beholders wept as they looked upon it. Being afterwards asked to employ his great talents on a statue of Venus, he refused: "After gazing so long into the face of Christ, think you that I can now turn my attention to a heathen goddess?" Here is the secret of such a walk as shall compel those around us to say, "We will go with you." It has been well remarked that "the reason why so few join the Church out of the world is that so many in the Church are joining the world."

On Wednesday morning, Mr. G. F. Trench connected the several petitions of the Lord's Prayer with the principles at stake in the temptation which Jesus experienced in the wilderness. (Temptation), "If Thou be the Son of God;" (Prayer), "Our Father." (Temptation), "Fall down and worship me;" (Prayer), "Hallowed be thy name." (Temptation), Christ might have the kingdoms. (Prayer), "Thy kingdom come." (Temptation), That Christ should satisfy his own desires. (Prayer), "Thy will be done." (Temptation), "Command that these stones be made." (Prayer), Give us this day our daily bread." Having come through the fire of temptation—"Lead us not into temptation." Having endured a hand-to-hand conflict, as it were, with Satan—"Deliver us from the evil one."

Nor is this connection accidental: it is necessary. The disciples had asked, "Teach us to pray," and there is no school in which we learn to pray like that of the wilderness of trial. It was in the wilderness that Israel learnt most of their lessons. When the Lord's temptation was finished, "angels came and ministered unto Him," and thus a feast followed the fast. Compare John iv. 32—34, "I have meat that ye know not of." "Hath any man brought Him aught to eat?" "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me;" and Luke xxii. 42, "Not My will but thine be done."

The chief point of the temptation was that Christ should take the Kingdom at a hand other than God's; therefore He prays, "Thy kingdom come." He "learned obedience through the things that He suffered," and if we would fitly fulfil the position destined for us to "live and reign with Him" we must first submit ourselves unto His will.

"For ever, O Lord, thy Word is settled in heaven" (Ps. cxix. 89) was, with other passages, chosen by Mr. RUSSELL HURDITCH to urge the importance of ruling our beliefs by the Word of God. These are dangerous days, and there is great need of reality and thoroughness. During the twenty years during which these gatherings have been held men have come and gone. Thank God for those who have nobly finished their course, but others are now on the wild waste, floating without a helm, drifting, whither only God knows. We need to hold on to the sheet anchor of God's Word. With pulpits and pews full of doubts, with certitudes being thrown over, with one view prevalent to-day, another to-morrow, how good it is to come back to "Thy Word is settled for ever." Mr. Hurditch's weighty words were felt to be particularly timely, as we are now hearing so much of "new revelation" independent of the Word of God.

Mr. David Baron, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, gave an instructive exposition of Ps. lxv. 4. (a) How blessed is the man whom God has chosen! If a prince were to marry a poor girl from among the people, she would value greatly any gifts which he might confer upon her, but none would she value so much as the fact that he had chosen her. That is the greatest blessing to her; the rest follow. God has given us many blessings, more than we can number; but none should be so dear to us as to know that He has chosen us as his people. But all choice is for a special object. This, in the case of the Christian, is specified in 1 Pet. ii. 9. (b) How blessed is the man whom God causes to approach, or makes nigh; first as regards distance (Eph. ii. 13); second by relationship (Rom. viii. 14, 15, and 1 John iii. 1, 2). (c) How blessed is the man whom God causes to dwell with Him. A dwelling-place is a place of refuge and of safety (Isa. iv. 6).

A Bible-reading was given in the afternoon by Mr. H. Varley, in which Dr. McKilliam and others also took part, and in the evening Mr. Varley spoke from 2 Kings iv. 1—7, showing that the pot of oil was a type of God's abounding grace which only the measure of our faith can limit as far as our reception of it is concerned. It is poured into borrowed vessels. We are not our own, but bought (1 Cor. vi. 19, 20) "vessels of mercy" (Rom. ix. 23). These vessels must be empty and clean, and derive their supply from only one source. In the course of his address Mr. Varley uttered an emphatic protest against the iniquitous drink-traffic which England is forcing upon the natives in South Africa; and, attention being thus directed to the foreign field, Mr. Radcliffe gave a characteristic address on the claims which the heathen have upon us to substitute the religion of Christ amongst them for the evils which as a people we have thrust upon them.

The greater part of Thursday was occupied with brief accounts of

in various places, which served to establish a feeling of mutual sympathy and unity amongst the labourers present, which all felt to be of great value.

Belfast.—Crowded meetings are being held in the circus, containing some 2000 persons, and great blessing has attended the effort. A mission, commenced some six years ago, amongst poor children has also been greatly owned of God.

Bird Fair.—Mr. C. Inglis recently spent a Sabbath with Miss McPherson in the East of London. Audiences of 1300 or 1400 men listened to the preaching of the Word. As the workers passed down a street singing, a young woman rushed out of a public-house partly intoxicated, having been commissioned to upset the gathering by some companions. But the hymn chanced to recall earlier recollections to her mind. She joined in it heartily, and followed to the Home of Industry. Inquiry elicited that she had once been a Christian worker, but had fallen away. This led to her restoration, and she is now walking humbly, but consistently, in the way of peace.

The Jews.—Mr. Aschkenasi, a Jew, who was converted through reading the New Testament, is carrying on a quiet work amongst his brethren in East London. His mission-hall has proved a source of benefit to the bodies and souls of many. Mr. D. Baron, of Mildmay, gave a very interesting narrative of two recent journeys in Germany, Hungary, and Galicia, for evangelistic work, and to circulate the Hebrew New Testament among the Jews. He and his companion had to suffer a good deal of persecution, but had also very great encouragement, especially among the Hungarian Jews, where they found large numbers longing for the Word of Life. Many single towns in Hungary and Galicia contain as many Jews as there are in the whole of Great Britain, without a person to tell them of the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. Baron gave some exceedingly touching incidents, showing how the blessed Spirit of God has been working, through the Scriptures alone, in the hearts of Jews, and appealed to God's people for continual prayer and help in this great work.

Fulham.—Mr. Charles Inglis lately preached the Gospel with good attendant results in the neighbourhood of Fulham. Eighteen young women in one house of business professed conversion.

Mile End.—Mr. W. R. Lane, who has held a month's mission at the Assembly Hall, testified to the continuous work of God in that place. The 4000th consecutive night of meetings in connection with Mr. Charrington's London work recently passed. As an instance of the wisdom of having such halls open every night, a sailor, who when abroad had heard of this work, determined to attend one of the meetings on arrival in England. He did so, and received blessing.

South Africa.—Mr. Henry Varley sketched his recent tour through Cape Town, Kimberley, Port Elizabeth, Grahamstown, Natal, Pietermaritzburg and Durban, speaking in warm terms of the labours of Mr. Joseph Hannington. In Kimberley the strongest brandy can be bought by the natives at 6d. per quart. Missionaries have also in various places become entangled in trade, which greatly lessens their Christian influence. Mr. Howe further spoke of the work among soldiers and sailors which has been going on in Cape Town for seven years. Their spiritual needs are very great, as is also that of the Cape railway-men, who have been so neglected by Europeans. Mr. "Ned" Wright hopes to go forth to labour amongst these, under the auspices of the Railway Mission, when sufficient funds are in the committee's hands. A good work is also going on among young women in Cape Town.

Thieves' Supper.—Mr. Ned Wright addressed about 150 thieves at supper in Glasgow recently. His daughter played upon a fiddle which had belonged to the notorious Peace. One man present who found Christ determined to tell his brother, who had been converted in gaol, during a term of false imprisonment. He was acquitted, after serving 3½ years, on his innocence being established. Their mutual joy can be better imagined than described.

Bible Carriage Work.—Mr. Leonard Weaver has for six years been owned of God in his labours through the country, preaching and distributing the Word of God. Visiting a certain town, a woman told him she had found pardon some years ago from the Word preached there by a lad. The details of the case at once showed that Mr. Weaver and that preacher were the same. Thus he reaped in due season.

North Africa and Spain.—Mr. G. E. Morgan described the work he had witnessed in Morocco, Algeria, Figueras, Barcelona, and Madrid, where God is blessing the means put forth to spread the Gospel.

It was fitting that the evening meeting should be devoted to praise, and very heartily was it enjoyed by all. Mr. Frank White and Mr. Varley gave addresses. The following morning a conference of workers was held for the purpose of discussing methods of Christian service, and some useful suggestions were brought forth. The "Round Table" was shown to work well with soldiers and young men, the method being for each one present to put a paper containing a question into a basket, and these are answered severally by the leader. At one soldiers' meeting no less than three wrote, "What must I do to be saved?" Thus many who would not like to ask such questions audibly before their companions are encouraged to have the cravings of the heart satisfied.

The subject of "How to Keep Young Converts" was warmly entered into, some of the answers being, briefly, Give them plenty of spiritual instruction; feed them as they are able to bear; interest them and employ them in the work of the Church to which they belong; visit them in their homes, and make them feel they are amongst friends. In the course of some earnest remarks, which gave evident satisfaction, Dr. McKilliam deprecated "a nervous anxiety to keep young converts in our own system or denomination. Better that they should join another gathering, where the pastor feeds his flock, than remain and starve in one where provision is not made for their spiritual needs, even though they have been brought up in it." Such elasticity and breadth of sympathy between representatives of different bodies of Christians was, perhaps, one of the most pleasing features of the Conference.

REST FOR THE WEARY.

Last summer it was my privilege to receive at my seaside home a few of the Lord's tired servants, who there recruited mental and physical powers, and, I think I may say, in every case went away refreshed.

Might I suggest that the seldom-used spare rooms in many country houses might thus be utilised as "prophets' chambers"? There are weary workers who would be most thankful for the offer of two or three weeks' hospitality—workers for whom a "Convalescent Home" or Institution of any kind would hardly be suitable, and who can nevertheless ill afford the expense of seaside lodgings. Such have, perhaps, no friends to invite them to places where the air is pure and invigorating, and so they toil on till a complete breakdown comes, entailing months of enforced idleness, which an annual holiday of a few weeks would have averted.

If any Christian readers feel inclined to invite such to their houses, let me give them a hint or two: (1) Make it a rule that your guests are to rest. Do not get up meetings for them, or ask them to be stop-gaps for absentee teachers or ministers, for if you do, they will probably go home none the better for the change. (2) Do not trouble yourself too much about how to entertain them. Let them feel perfectly free as to occupation and amusement. (3) Remember they have wearied bodies, unstrung nerves, and perhaps health much shattered by labour and anxiety. Make allowance for this. Perhaps some one asks, But how am I to hear of the right people to come? Make yourself acquainted either personally or by letter with some of the great centres of work mentioned in The Christian from time to time. Most likely there will be some worn-out helper there who will be only too glad to accept your invitation.

I may add that I have found great pleasure in thus being able to make use of my house in the Master's service. I am looking forward to doing so again this summer, and if this should meet the eye of any hardworked pastor or evangelist in the great city who has been saying to his wife, "We shall have to do without a holiday this summer; we cannot afford one," let them write to me at 76, Warwick-road, Banbury, and I will see whether I cannot find a corner for them in my seaside retreat. G. M. T.

THE CRIPPLES' HOME.—In this Home for girls at Northumberland House, 17A, Marylebone-road, there are now ninety-nine inmates, twenty-two having been received during last year. Girls, not under twelve years of age, are received for three years, and, in addition to board and lodging and education on Christian principles, are taught a trade in the Industrial School. The educational inspector reports well of the work done, and very satisfactor proof of the value of the training which is not for this life only, but for the life to come, is found from time to time in letters of old girls, in lives in which they seek to impart to their children the lessons they learnt in the Home, and sometimes in joyful witness on the dying bed. The seaside Home at Bognor does wonders for these afflicted ones in increasing their health and strength. Accompanying the report there is a little booklet, entitled, "The Crutches of the Tyrol," both of which may be obtained of the superintendent, Miss E. Emes, 17A, Marylebone-road.

LONDON AGED PILGRIMS' SOCIETY.

This interesting Society held its annual meeting in Exeter (Lower) Hall. The report and balance-sheet were of a most encouraging nature. They showed that both the amount of income and the number of pensioners had been, during the past year, larger than ever before, and it was a touching evidence of the need of such a work as this, that among the recipients of the Society's bounty there are 3 persons over 90 years of age, 41 between 80 and 90, and 91 between 70 and 80. Mr. R. C. L. Bevan (chairman) warmly commended the Society's work.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe spoke of the power of good work done in a small way. He said that when he heard of Mr. J. T. Morton's generous gifts of flannel and blankets and groceries during the winter, his heart went out towards those kind presents; he pictured the comfort and joy they would bring to the lonely souls who received them. It was a graphic method of bringing home to them the truth that although they were sometimes lonely, yet they were indeed, like Him in whom they trusted, "not alone, for the Father is with them."

After a few words from Rev. N. Davies, and Rev. J. Gosset Tanner, Dr. Gritton gave a helpful address on the thought that the great universal Body of Christ cannot afford to lose even its feeble members. "Feeble as we are, there would be something wanting to the Body of Christ" without us. Rev. Sir Œmilius Lawrie, in his kindly sympathetic manner, addressed the pensioners themselves. He wanted them to make their last days truly their best days. That would be attained if they were constantly asking to grow in humility, unselfishness, clearness of spiritual vision, better performance of daily work. Striving for this, they needed first the Almighty grace of God, and then the persistent effort of man.

Mr. MOUNTAIN in NEW ZEALAND.

At the close of the mission in Invercargill, says The Southland Times of April 4, Rev. J. and Mrs. Mountain bade farewell to their many friends, prior to leaving for the Lake district to recuperate for another mission effort elsewhere. They preach, with earnestness, the fundamental doctrines of the Gospel only, carefully abstaining from touching on questions of minor importance which distinguish and divide the churches. They have deep sympathy with the young. An onlooker would hardly venture to say whether Mr. and Mrs. Mountain are more delighted with the young people, or the young people with Mr. and Mrs. Mountain. Certain it is that one meeting is quite enough to establish a lasting attachment between them.

An important factor in their success is the prominence given to the service of song. These evangelists sing their own songs, many of which are very beautiful—hymns that will prove a permanent source of joy and strength to heaven-bound pilgrims. The young people have received them with evident delight; and while Mr. and Mrs. Mountain themselves have gone, their sacred songs remain to cheer and gladden many a fireside circle. Indeed, to know Mr. and Mrs. Mountain is to love them. Their sojourn among us lasted only ten days, and the closing scene on Monday night abundantly showed how they had endeared themselves to those who had the privilege of attending their services. Their names will long be remembered in Invercargill.

WAKEFIELD Y.M.C.A.—The first report shows that a fair amount of work has been accomplished by this Association, in regard to which much interest has been manifested. The Home has become a centre of considerable attraction to scores of young men, who here spend their evenings in an agreeable and profitable manner. The membership (including forty-one associates) numbers 126, and is continually increasing. The secretary is Mr. Henry F. Ridley.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

A happy work has been commenced at the united Mission for the boys and girls at Woolwich, and Mr. Spiers is still engaged trying to win them for Jesus. Mr. Hutchinson was at the annual meeting of the Ripon (United) Branch of the Scripture Union on June 1, and a good many were stirred up to read their Bibles with greater diligence.

Mr. Martin J. Hall, B.A., hopes to have Scripture Union meetings at Lydiard Tregoz, June 10; at Trowbridge, June 11 to 13; at Corsham, June 14; at Badminton, June 15, and a week's mission at Burrage-road Mission Hall, June 15—21. Mr. J. A. Greene will be at Wellington (Salop) June 10, and at Shewsbury, June 13—16. Earnest prayer is asked for all these meetings that the Saviour will gather many young people for his happy service here.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

There was a rich man in a country town who had a splendid apple tree in his garden. Everyone spoke of it, everyone admired the ripe, rosy fruit.

Some could speak of having tasted them, and described their flavour and richness. Now, as this got noised about, the rich man's neighbour began to wish he too had such a tree.

In his weedy, neglected garden there was an apple tree, to be sure, but then it was dead. Year by year it remained so. Sunshine and rain, frost and dew fell upon it, yet its bare brown branches remained the same. "Why should not my apple tree bear fruit?" said the man. "Ah! I have it!" So he went out with money in his pocket and bought two bushels of apples, two balls of twine, and a basket of leaves, and all that glorious autumn day you might have seen him standing on a ladder, carefully tying on to every leafless, fruitless bough or twig, a rosy-cheeked apple and some leaves.

Friends came to see him the next day, and through his window he pointed out to them his well covered apple tree. They were astonished, they complimented him upon the splendid show of fruit.

"We thought that tree was dead," they said, "but it quite equals your neighbour's." And the foolish man was pleased.

That night a storm of wind and rain came on, down fell the apples and leaves like hailstones.

On, on, till in twenty-four hours the old apple tree reared its head once more, bare brown and dead. "Of course," you say, "just what I thought." Yes, I dare say. But why am I telling you this story? Because I think so many sensible boys, girls, ay, and "grown ups" too, fall into the same fatal mistake. Have you ever seen a Christian and wished to be like him?

Have you ever heard of the happiness and glory of knowing Jesus, and said, "I should like to know it too"?

Have you ever thought, "I really must become religious; I will begin to pray, and to read my Bible; in fact, I'll turn over a new leaf"? And you do. You try and try, and try to make yourself a Christian.

You try to love God; you are a much better boy or girl; everyone says so; teacher is quite pleased with you; you feel you are really quite religious. It all looks like the real thing outside, only God and you know that you are dead, and putting on the fruit instead of bringing forth fruit. You may even deceive your best friends, but God knows it. Do you see your mistake? You have been trying to live without life. What must you do?

How can you have the real thing that will stand against the storm of temptation and trial? Just come to Jesus. Begin it all by getting life. He will make you his living child if you come to Him. Begin with Jesus, by coming to Him at once; go on with Jesus, by coming to Him day by day; end with Jesus, by going at last to be with Him where He is.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN IN MOAB.

Those of our young readers who have heard any of this lady's lectures, or have read accounts of them will be interested in the following communication from her, which appears in the Sunday School Chronicle:—

We landed at Jaffa on May 1, having had a rough passage. A grand reception was given me next day—dinner, illuminations and fireworks, &c., in honour of my birthday. Next day we left for Jerusalem, and as it was getting very warm we left my mother here, and started off at once for the other side of Jordan, where we spent a delightful time amongst the Bedouins. The chieftain of the Jordan Territory, Sheik Raschid, accompanied us in person, and the governor of the city sent letters to the chieftains in Moab to receive us as their guests, so that our visit to them was not in the capacity of tourists, but of guests. Consequently, as soon as we crossed the Jordan Bridge over twenty mounted horsemen, with their long, flashing spears, met us by firing guns. They were accompanied by Sheik Sultan (the son of the great chieftain, Sheik Ali Diab, the famous warrior). The sight was most picturesque as they galloped backwards and forwards in their flowing garments. On arriving at the encampment the women all came out with songs of welcome, and a sheep was at once killed and roasted; water was brought to wash our hands and feet, and butter-milk to refresh us; rich carpets and silk and satin cushions and couches were spread for our repose. We spent a most charming and romantic evening.

Next day, accompanied by one of the chieftains, we left for Heshbon; here our tents were pitched near the great chieftain's, Sheik Diab, who is over one hundred and five years old. It was a most touching sight to me to see the old man rise, with the help of his attendants, and receive us with warm welcome; he raised his hands up and blessed me, as he exclaimed, "I thank God that He has allowed my eyes to behold thee, O thou daughter of our land." Again a sheep was killed, and rejoicings took place; a grand dinner was given us and all our servants. Sheik Ali Diab, the son of Sheik Diab, is now the great chieftain; the father is too feeble and old, so his son reigns in his stead. He is a magnificent-looking man about fifty, not tall, but has a fine Roman nose and eagle eye, and very courteous in his manner. All the women of course came to see me, and sang songs of welcome. Long poems were composed about me. Some of the princesses are very beautiful.

We spent a most delightful fortnight camping from place to place. The last night before our departure was a sight never to be forgotten. The chieftain and his followers spent the evening with us. Imagine a large circle of black tents on a grassy plain sheltered by hills. Our white tents looked like snow-flakes; we had Chinese lanterns hung all around them; rich carpets and rugs were strewn on the ground, and a couch of crimson satin, upon which were seated the chieftain, his wife, and myself; my brother on a rich rug, with the chieftain's sons close by. About seventy Bedouins in their picturesque garments sitting in graceful postures around, a huge fire of thorns burnt brightly, and cast quaint lights on their faces. They had three bards, and they sang beautiful songs, sometimes all the company joined in a chorus. Soon the moon rose, and the sight was like a fairy scene. Before breaking up, the son of the chieftain grasped the musical instrument from the hands of the bard, and sang a long poem full of the most beautiful imagery, descriptive of our visit to them.

The leave-taking next morning was quite trying, for all had become so attached to us, and we to them; they actually wept as they bid us farewell; and, accompanied by a large cavalcade and two chieftains, we left them, and again recrossed the Jordan into the land of Canaan; and here we are again safely in Jerusalem, very much sunburnt. We leave for Beyrout and Damascus in a few days.

THISTLES.

Beware of tattling tales; the talk in town
Is just as light, no doubt, as thistle-down.
It wafts on whispers here, on whispers there,
It floats so freely in the social air.
Alas! with all its lightness, 'tis the seed
That lodges somewhere, and springs up a weed!

A YOUNG COLONIST.

The following letter, received lately by Miss Stock, of the Home of Industry, Spitalfields, from a boy in Canada, who went out in one of Miss Macpherson's parties, will serve as a good illustration of the benefits that come to those boys and girls who have been transplanted to that bright and bountiful land:—

I have half an hour to spare, so I take the opportunity to write to you. I feel rather home-sick; I call the Refuge home; you know I have no other, and I felt happier while I was there than ever I did at my own home. This is a very nice country, and I like it very much. This is only a small farm. The people are all Christians, and we have prayers night and morning. There are no churches very near, but the one we go to is about four miles away.

We have a lot of cattle, and I have to feed them, and the horses and colts as well. I went with the "boss" out into the bush yesterday to get a log to take to the saw mills; it was a good big one, too. To-day I have the team rolling the wheat. At first the horses were rather hard to drive, but I soon got used to them. We are very busy, and I get very tired when bedtime comes, but I sleep all the better. I get as many apples as I can eat, and cake as well.

I know you have been praying for me, because I have such a nice home. These people have had boys from other Homes, but not one to suit them, but Mr. N—— says I do. But it is not me; it is what the Lord has made me. I know He is with me by the way. I am kept from sin. I have a good deal of trouble with the calves, so when they won't go into the right place I ask the Lord to guide them in, and as soon as I do that they march into their place, and I can tie them up then.

Will you send me The Christian every week? I don't know how much it is a year, but if it is any more than I have enclosed, you will tell me. When you write do tell me all the news. Tell me how you get on in the Bird Fair with the meetings, because I take great interest in them, and pray for them. I have sweet communion with God in my little room, and get a great blessing from it.—Yours sincerely, G. E. D.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, June 12, 1 Sam. vii. 1—17; Monday, June 13, 1 Sam. viii. 1—9; Tuesday, June 14, 1 Sam. viii. 10—22; Wednesday, June 15, 1 Sam. ix. 1—14; Thursday, June 16, 1 Sam. ix. 15—27; Friday, June 17, 1 Sam. x. 1—13; Saturday, June 18, 1 Sam. x. 14—27.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN.

Thee, Lord, this day we praise,
To Thee our hymn we raise,
On Thee we lean.
Safe in thy guardian hand,
Still may our country stand,
God bless our native land!
God save our Queen!

O Thou great King of kings,
Spread Thine Almighty wings
Our Queen around.
Her throne do Thou maintain,
Her heart do Thou sustain,
Long may she peaceful reign
Blest and renowned.

Oh, may thy Light Divine
Still on our Sovereign shine,
Pure and serene.
In Thee may she confide;
Do Thou her counsels guide;
Guard Thou on every side
Our own lov'd Queen.

Hark! over ocean's breast,
Borne far from east and west,
Broad seas between,
Deep sounds responsive rise;
Where'er her banner flies,
True hearts give back our cries,
"God save the Queen!"

Redhill, Surrey. M. A. Scott-Moncrieff.

[It has been suggested that Sunday-school and other gatherings of children on Jubilee day, June 21, should sing these excellent verses to the tune of the National Anthem.]

A WORKING CHURCH.

The vicar of St. Andrew's Church, Stockwell Green, E., expresses his conviction that "the Church ought not to be unused for a single hour on Sunday," and says, "I cannot forget that I am sent to those without, and the Church must close her eyes to no sores, her ears to no criticisms, her intellect to no difficulties, her heart and hand to no son or daughter of man. She has a message of light for all." The record of the year's work is an encouraging one, and shows consideration for the needs of the people. Sunday-schools, separate Bible-classes for men and women, children's services, provident clubs, district visiting, pure literature, temperance guilds, Church Army, club for young men, all add their quota of result, and keep the vicar and his three curates busy.

We echo the hope that the children's services "will prove a school of evangelical prophets, and nurture a band of preaching laymen; for in this age, as much as in the first century, 'it pleases God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.'" Regarding district visiting "nothing," says the vicar, "can take the place of personal sympathy. It is only thus we can hope to make the Gospel of the kingdom a reality to those who have never seen the ideal of Christ."

LONDON BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—The annual report of the Metropolitan Tabernacle branch of this Mission will gain many friends for the work by its winning tone. It points out how blessed is the gift of true charity. The flowers have a new beauty and a richer perfume as the thought of the pleasure they will cause the poor sufferers, to whom they are to be sent, grows upon the mind. Very beautiful are the stories of the work accomplished by these sweet messengers, or rather by the Word Divine which they so sweetly herald. Last year nearly 22,000 bunches of flowers, each telling of the Saviour's love, were sent forth into the various hospitals to do their blessed work of ministering to the sick and suffering. Tracts and books are also sent, and Sunday services are frequently held in the hospitals. Hampers (addressed, the Secretary, Bible Flower Mission, Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington-butts) should be forwarded in time for delivery in London by ten o'clock on Wednesday morning.

WHIT-MONDAY AT KILBURN HALL.

The early part of the afternoon meeting was thrown open for prayer, with thanksgiving, for which representatives present mentioned many persons and places, including foreign labourers generally, and Mr. Edward Hurditch's labours in Australia. The first address was from Mr. F. E. Marsh, previous to his departure for Sunderland. His subject was, "Realisation by faith of the spiritual power stored for the believer in Christ." Mr. Cooper, of the China Inland Mission, gave some interesting and encouraging details of work in that land. The power of Christ, he said, as witnessed in China, is sufficient to satisfy the missionary's soul and strengthen his faith. In one village of this province seventy or eighty natives are waiting to be received into fellowship. The history of one convert was very interesting. His eyes were opened by a tract from another native, and a third person directed him to Christians living thirty miles away, who were "always talking about the Jesus religion." After journeying to them, he returned and destroyed his idols and ancestral tablet. His nephew took home the report, "Uncle's gone mad." He was persecuted and temporarily disinherited, but the influence of a mandarin was exerted for toleration, and, called before him, the convert was questioned, "Why would you retain house and land? Jesus had none." He expressed willingness to sacrifice them, if need be, but contended for his natural rights, and has built a little shanty for himself at the side of his house, giving up the latter for preaching.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe said the disciples distributed the loaves and fishes equally to each row of the multitude, whereas we give an undue proportion of labourers and money to home work. A conviction of this fact has led some who have worked at home for years to devote their energies to the foreign field. Dr. Baedeker, with but one lung, is now preaching alone in the heart of Russia five times a day. Home work never was more important than now, when Romanism and Ritualism abound. But there are two sides to the globe. While the Lord works by solitary conversions, He also moves villages, towns, and provinces, and has often worked simultaneously in widely-separated lands, in answer to the prayers of some Christian, hidden, it may be, in a garret. In asking God to call forth the Lazaruses of China, Africa, and India, let us be careful that we do not hinder by unbelief. In moving these countries God will not leave London out of the blessing.

After an interval for tea, the evening meeting was opened with another season of prayer.

Mr. J. Hudson Taylor said that men with a knowledge of God do exploits. Such knowledge takes the anxiety out of life. Only the men who know little of God can worry. God has given us in Christ all that is necessary for time and eternity. A visit to China showed that, even where there are no missionaries, the people seem to feel a need they did not a few years ago, and it was saddening that so few could be evangelised. Mr. Taylor said that thirty-one of the 100 prayed for are already in China, twenty-three others are ready to follow, and the expenses of the outgoing missionaries are covered. In answer to prayer, there were more conversions last year than in any previous one. Over 400 were added to the church last year, and 226 were baptized in Shansi in April. One missionary had more conversions before April than in all last year.

Miss Campbell detailed the circumstances under which she was led to leave opening doors at home for China. She had asked friends to join in the prayer for 100 helpers this year for China, but had no idea God would honour her by including her among the number. Mr. Wookey, Mr. Marsh, and Dr. Popham also spoke.

THE CORPORATION OF LONDON has voted a contribution of fifty guineas to the funds of Mrs. Hilton's Crèche, Orphanage, &c., and a hundred guineas to the Bethnal Green Free Library Fund.

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS.

Of the twenty-nine schools now in existence in Syria which were founded by the late Mrs. Bowen Thompson, an excellent account is given in the Quarterly Paper recently issued. One striking fact in connection with the work is that Moslem prejudices have so far been broken down that now there are five hundred children in attendance at the various schools. One of the most beautiful things imaginable is to hear some little pupil teaching a Moslem new-comer how to pray to Jesus. Besides the eighteen Europeans, there are eighty-eight native teachers, nearly all of whom have passed through these schools, and are, therefore, well qualified to carry on the work.

The reports from the various stations occupied by the Mission are most encouraging, as showing that the Gospel is making very considerable progress amongst all classes of the people, many of whom eagerly listen to the reading of the Scriptures, and are continually praying to the Lord Jesus to give them new hearts. The Quarterly Paper may be obtained of the secretary, Miss Poulton, 18, Homefield-road, Wimbledon.

FACTORY HELPERS' UNION.

An interesting conference of workers in the E.C. district was recently held at "The Welcome," 6, Jewin-street. Mr. W. T. Paton, chairman, explained that the meeting had been called to discuss the special needs of the district as to agencies seeking the welfare of young women employed in factories. Representatives were present from the various churches, missions, and girls' clubs working in the district, several city missionaries engaged in factory visitation, as well as representatives of the Young Womens' Christian Association, Girls' Friendly Society, and Young Womens' Help Society. It was shown that much good work is being done for the better class of young women; but a need is felt for evening club-rooms, and Bible-classes, specially designed to reach the "rough" class of girls employed in a large number of factories. The plan proposed by the Factory Helpers' Union to provide evening club-rooms and improvement classes was explained by Miss Rawson, and openings for two such clubs have been offered.

The necessity for Bible-classes, and factory visitation by ladies, were spoken of by Miss Seton-Karr, who testified to the blessing received by the girls through the many classes held at "The Welcome," and in the factories. Mr. George Calvert spoke of the evils wrought by drink among the young women, and the great need of more united effort to win the factory girls over to the side of total abstinence. Miss E. Robarts said the object of the Factory Helpers' Union was to strengthen those agencies already established for the moral and spiritual welfare of the factory girls, and to facilitate communication between their superintendents, in order that girls removing from the neighbourhood of one mission may be transferred to the care of another; also to organise and sustain the following and similar agencies:—

1. Factory and workroom visitation during the dinner and tea hours.
2. Bible-classes and Sunday services.
3. Night-schools and cookery-classes.
4. Special evangelistic missions.
5. Temperance societies.
6. Excursions and entertainments.
7. Saving banks and clothing clubs.
8. Occasional employment agency and sewing-classes.
9. Evening homes, clubs, and recreation-rooms.
10. Institutes and lodging-houses.
11. Convalescent and holiday homes.
12. Training homes for domestic service and emigration.
13. Special missionaries, both men and women, to seek out girls in music halls, theatres, and public-houses, and bring them under the influence of the Factory Helpers' Union.

Workers are much needed, ladies able to take Bible-classes during the dinner and tea hour in the factories; also ladies are required to help in the evening clubs. Communications may be addressed to the hon. sec., Miss E. Robarts, 16a, Old Cavendish-street, W.

Letters to the Editor.

MISSIONARIES AND LICENSED SIN.

Sir,—The subject of licensed sin in India is occupying public attention at the present time. The awful effects of this iniquity upon missionary effort being so apparent, one cannot but express surprise at the almost total evasion of the question by returned missionaries themselves. A few days ago a gentleman—until recently a missionary in India, and one who had spent twenty years of his life in that country—was announced to preach on behalf of the society he represented in a small town not many miles from London. I attended the morning service, and, with others, was much surprised that no allusion whatever was made to the gigantic hindrance that Government-regulated prostitution is causing to missionary effort in India.

This terrible sin, so disgraceful to the British flag, was not even hinted at by the preacher! Still, it was evident, although of course not admitted, that missionary labour had been only too sadly frustrated by some cause, if not by reason of legalised iniquity; for the "success" achieved in the neighbourhood in which the rev. speaker had laboured was summed up in a few extracts from a "report" which informed us, as exemplifying that "success," how one man, a converted Hindoo, had manifested the genuineness of his conversion by persuading his mother not to buy currie on the Sabbath day; how another—a man of position—had lectured on "Major and Minor Morals," and enforced the returning of a borrowed umbrella; and, further, how a third Hindoo had, under most extenuating circumstances, "told the truth" even at the expense of great persecution.

By these observations I do not for a moment imply that the gentleman alluded to, with his companions in labour, had not done their very best in India, but I could not help feeling during the discourse, what a sad lack there was of anything like enthusiasm over conscious victory! The results quoted seemed altogether so inadequate to the vast amount of self-sacrifice which many Christian people must have made to support a missionary in India for twenty years, that I could not but be filled with a righteous indignation when reflecting on, what I assume to be, the cause of this unfruitfulness. Why such a mysterious silence? Ought we not to fear and obey God rather than man? As I thus mused, I could but pray that the day may soon come when the Christian leaders of the people will denounce this and all evil with unfaltering tongue; when God-fear shall have banished from them man-fear; and also when cruel and ungodly officialism shall be dethroned in favour of purity and right.

I believe that in the whole realm of philanthropy nothing can be more pleasing to God than an earnest desire and practical effort on the part of his people to extend the Redeemer's kingdom to the uttermost parts of the earth. Noble, indeed, are the men and women who, for the Master's sake, give up all—home, position, comfort, and often health—that they may carry the Gospel-light to the millions "who sit in darkness." But does it not indicate a lack of wisdom, to say the least, on the part of the churches which support missionary enterprise with so much fervour, that they, at the same time, in many cases tolerate silence upon the very cause which is rendering the expenditure of their money of little or no practical avail? A glance at the seventy-two districts in India (recently published) where licensed sin is enforced, will be conclusive to show how little Christian missions have been able to accomplish in the midst of a people who believe that licensed sin forms part of our religion. The figures speak for themselves with pathetic appeal. The talk about education, building of schools, &c., counts for little, for secular education makes the "last state" of the heathen "worse than the first," unless they receive the Gospel—the power of God unto salvation. For my own part, I can say that I attended the service above mentioned with the intention of giving to the extent of my means; as it was, I dropped a small sum into the box, and then seriously questioned whether I had not by so doing robbed the Lord.

Yours truly, Integrity.

ENGLAND AND THE POPE.

My Dear Sir,—It is well for our young people and others that you are so faithful to Protestant principles, while so many writers of the present day ignore the danger arising from the ignorance on this subject of many public men, and the connivance of others from motives of political expediency, so called.

The letter of your correspondent at page 23 in The Christian for May 26, headed "A Mighty Factor," with the Editor's note at foot, is useful, as showing how the uninformed are liable to be misled as to the true character of Popery. We must not be surprised if, ere long, under possible political circumstances, it is proposed that the Pope should be appealed to to mediate between Great Britain and Ireland.—Yours truly,

Martin Hope Sutton.

Cintra Lodge, Whitley, Reading.

This is far from unlikely. The Roman correspondent of The Daily Chronicle writes:—

> It is stated here that the Papal Nuncio for Munich, who will be Papal Envoy for the Queen's Jubilee, will be commissioned by the Pope to communicate his views to Lord Salisbury on the subject of the establishment of diplomatic relations with England, as also concerning certain questions affecting Catholicism in the British colonies. I now learn that the Duke of Norfolk was sent here by Lord Salisbury for the express purpose of negotiating with the Vatican for the resumption of diplomatic relations between England and the Holy See. The Duke will also present to the Pope a memoir, printed in French, on the Irish question, with the object of obtaining from his Holiness a formal condemnation of Parnellism.

On this The Pall Mall Gazette asks:—

> What is Lord Salisbury doing with the Pope? He has been after something for some months past, but we have never been able exactly to make out what. There has been a good deal of "nosing" round the Vatican ever since the Government came into office, and a good many people who ought to know are of opinion that Lord Salisbury is not indisposed to nobble the Pope—provided, of course, that it can be done. Prince Bismarck has done the trick, why not Prince Bismarck's ally? Certainly he stands in urgent need of some help from some quarter in Ireland just now. The landlords are only good at evictions, the Ulster men have just condemned his Land Bill, the Nationalists detest his Coercion Bill—what is a poor Premier to do? What, indeed, but to turn to the Holy Father, and seek at the chair of St. Peter the guidance and the support of which he stands so grievously in need?..His Grace [of Norfolk] has gone on a wild goose chase when he went to the Vatican to ask the Pope to cut the throat of Catholicism in Ireland..Lord Salisbury dare not offer to receive a Papal Nuncio at the Court of St. James, and without that promise he is like a man who goes penniless to market..What, then, has he to offer? Possibly four things:—
> (1) A British Envoy at the Vatican;
> (2) The establishment of denominational education in Ireland;
> (3) The subsidising of a Catholic University; and
> (4) The retention of the Irish Catholic vote at St. Stephen's.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

Sir,—I have read the "Note" in your last week's issue, and hasten to correct what appears to me to be a misapprehension on your part as to the results of the Keswick Convention. If you had been present at that notable meeting of young men held at Keswick last year, and seen upwards of three hundred fine young fellows rise at the invitation of Dr. Cummings as dedicating their lives to the service of the Master, you could never doubt that the Keswick Convention is able to "justify its existence by practical and beneficent results."

A band of "Keswick young men" was formed during the winter, and meetings have been held for six or eight months past with much vigour. In my opinion, no one who has had the privilege of attending these meetings can doubt that lasting good was done at Keswick.—Yours truly, L. W. H.

[In our note we thankfully and freely acknowledged the benefit derived from these meetings, but what we pleaded for was that more of the time should be given to a direct and definite consideration of the needs of the heathen harvest fields. "Dedication," even in a general sense, is good, but young Christians need to have a specific direction given to their resolves, and such a gathering seems to us a most fitting opportunity for this.—Ed.]

THE DORÉ GALLERY AND THE JUBILEE.

Dear Sir,—A short time ago I noticed in the pages of The Christian a paragraph to the effect that the proprietors of the Doré Gallery were issuing free passes, for Sunday-school teachers and members of Young Men's Christian Associations, during the month of June, "in honour of the Queen's Jubilee." Knowing the Christian stand you have always taken upon the subject of what is euphemistically called "nude" art, I felt sure that you did not know the fact that Doré was one of the most industrious painters of the "nude" of his time, having produced many hundreds of paintings and engravings of those subjects. Several of his largest works (life-size) are exhibited at New Bond-street.

It is a common feature of "nude art" artists of our day that they should be also painters of so-called "sacred" subjects, and M. Doré was no exception to the rule. One of the chief "religious" subjects at the Royal Academy this year is painted by the same man who is now exhibiting a "nude" production of his at a shilling a head, which is so gross that it was either refused by the authorities of the Royal Academy or was not offered for exhibition.

On the face of it, this offer of the proprietors of Doré's Gallery looks like an act of disinterested benevolence, but it must be noted that engravings of these "nude" and other paintings are on sale.

If the evil of "nude art" extended no further than the galleries in which it is exhibited, it would be bad enough; but that is not the case. Small photographs of these works are being sold and circulated by thousands amongst the boys and youths of London.

Our duty as Christians is very clear on this point. The human body is redeemed by Christ to be the temple of his Holy Spirit, and it is an act of profanity to unnecessarily expose it either in nature or in a copy of nature.

Faithfully yours, Maurice Gregory.

(Hon. Secretary Gospel Purity Association, Department for the Suppression of Immoral Publications.)

BAPTISM AND CONVERSION.

Dear Sir,—The question asked in your columns by a "Constant Reader" is rightly described by those who have sought to answer it as a most important one. Such teaching may be justified from the Book of Common Prayer, but in the Scriptures we look in vain for any support of it. It is, indeed, the outcome of that exaggeration of the importance of outward forms, which was sadly apparent in the Church from the early centuries of its history. The error of baptismal regeneration, plainly held and taught by the Romanists, was but very partially, if at all, removed from the formularies of the English Church at the time of the Reformation. It is a wonder to multitudes how godly evangelical clergymen who preach the necessity of regeneration and conversion in all cases can continue to use a form of service which manifestly teaches this deadly error.

Many of your readers, as they perused the candid and able letter of Rev. J. P. Watts in your last issue would be grieved at heart at such words as these:—"As for the minister himself, in regard to the Service, he may feel uncomfortable about it, and wish it were altered, but till that can be done he is obliged to use it."

Are not these sad words? Why is he obliged to use it? Is there any consideration which should lead a minister of the Gospel to make use of expressions in his public ministry which he feels are untrue and contrary to the teaching of God's Word? Mr. Watts finds comfort in the reflection that such a minister has the 6th Article to stand upon, which tells him that whatever is in the Liturgy which cannot be proved by the Word of God he is not required to believe or accept. This is, so far, well. But how sad is the position of a clergyman who does not accept or believe the teaching of the Baptismal Service because he perceives that it is contrary to the Word of God, and yet continues to teach and use that Service constantly.

Would to God the conscience of evangelical Churchmen were stirred on the important point! Who can doubt that a firm and conscientious refusal on the part of such to use a form of service which so plainly teaches a deadly error, would bring about a revision of the Baptismal Service, from which this leaven of error would be purged away?—Yours faithfully, John E. Martin.

The Manse, Erith.

TO CHRISTIAN TRAVELLERS.

Sir,—I was glad to notice in a late copy of your paper a suggestion that tourists and travellers should arm themselves with Gospels and tracts, to scatter far and wide in the various countries where they go. I beg to enclose a list of places where Bibles, Gospels, and tracts can be obtained, as it may be a help to some:—

In London—British and Foreign Bible Society, 146, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., only Bibles, Testaments, and portions. Religious Tract Society, 56, Paternoster-row, E.C., for tracts and cards in nearly all languages. For Children's Leaflets in upwards of thirty languages, beautifully illustrated, apply to Mr. J. Spiers, 13, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row.

For illuminated text-cards, in nearly all European languages, Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling, at 6d. for 50. Also excellent tracts in French. For illuminated cards only, Mrs. Grimkè, Hilton Park, Prestwich, Manchester; and Mr. James E. Hawkins, 36, Baker-street, London.

At Paris—Depôt Central, 4, Place Théâtre Français, for tracts, Bibles, &c.

At Basle—Messrs. Spittler, Stapfelberg, who will send by post all over Switzerland, "Contre Remboursement." Most of the large towns abroad have agencies for the B.F.B.S. and R.T.S., where supplies can be obtained.

I perhaps may be allowed to suggest that there is also another excellent work suitable to a stay abroad, for wet days or Sundays, and that is, printing or writing texts on cards for the London Hospital Flower Mission, the cards for which can be obtained at 1s. a 100 from Deaconesses' Home, Mildmay, London; and from F. V. Hadlow, Lithographer, Brighton; or Mr. Alfred Holness, 14, Paternoster-row, E.C. The cards, when done, will be thankfully received at Deaconesses' Home, Mildmay; by Miss Alice Day, Ariton, Blackheath; or Miss Laura Headley, 17, Cavendish-street, W. Alpine flowers, if pressed, add much to the attraction of these cards.—Yours faithfully,

T. R. Fothergill.

Hotel Kitterer, Clarens, Switzerland.

AGED AND INFIRM MINISTERS.—The annual meeting of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers was held at the Sunday-school Union House, 56, Old Bailey, on Tuesday, May 31. Mr. Frederick Nettlefold, of Norwood, presided. During the year just closed sixty-four ministers of the Congregational, Baptist, and Presbyterian denominations have been assisted by the Society, an increase of five on the number reported for the previous year.

FAREWELL TO MISSIONARIES.—The large hall of the Christian Institute, Glasgow, was crowded on Wednesday, June 1, to bid farewell to Mr. A. W. Bell, secretary of the G.U.Y.M.C.A. Missionary Society. Mr. Bell has gone to Central Africa to be one of the civil engineers in connection with the African Lakes Co. Stirring missionary addresses were delivered by Miss Fanny Boyd, who has just returned from China, Pastor and Madame Rodriguez, from Spain; and Miss Leitch, from Ceylon. Mr. Bell spoke at the close, and urged the friends present to give themselves more fully to the work of the Lord at home. A consecration meeting was held, and fully 600 people rose and expressed their willingness to do the will of the Lord. It was a solemn and a stimulating meeting.

BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.—Rev. T. W. Brown, secretary of the Turkish Missions Aid Society (7, Adam-street, Strand), in conjunction with Dr. Thomson, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and others, recently visited the Orphanage and Schools conducted by Mrs. Baghdasarian at Broussa. He reports very favourably of the work there carried on. Besides the examination in the ordinary branches of school work, with which much satisfaction was expressed, the pupils were addressed and questioned on Scripture subjects in English, which most of them seemed perfectly to understand. The premises are in an excellent condition, and, in commending the school to the support of its numerous friends in Europe, the report concludes thus:—"Mr. and Mrs. Baghdasarian have succeeded to no small extent in attaining their high ideal of so conducting the Orphanage as to render it a pure and happy home." Mr. Brown will gladly give further information to any interested in the work.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.

A large number of the friends and supporters of the Home for the Aged Christian Blind at Hanly-road, Crouch Hill, attended the annual meeting held last week in the Finsbury Park Y.M.C.A. Hall. There are at present 40 inmates—36 men and 4 women—whose ages range from 50 to 92. It is proposed to build a hall accommodating 400 people adjoining the institution, for the purpose of carrying on evangelistic and educational work among the blind of North London, who are not eligible for admission to the Home. Towards this undertaking, which will cost £850, there has already been raised about £350.

Mr. Walter Reynolds, of Highgate, who is a friend to every good work in the North of London, in his opening address as chairman, ably advocated the claims which our blind poor had upon the sympathy of the Christian community. Mr. John Hawkins commended the Home on the ground that the work being carried on by Mr. Bright is truly Christ's work. This had been proved by the blessing that God has showered upon it. Dr. Barnardo expressed his deep interest in the work for humanity which Mr. and Mrs. Bright are doing, and bade them Godspeed. Remarks were also made by Rev. T. Eynon Davies and Mr. W. O. Clough.

Mr. Bright intimated, amid applause, that the Chairman had signified his intention of contributing twenty guineas for himself, and ten guineas for his wife, towards the building fund, and doubling his annual subscription to the general maintenance fund.

Mr. TOWNSEND TRENCH in DUBLIN.

Referring to a note in The British Weekly respecting the evangelistic services conducted in Dublin by Mr. Townsend Trench, a correspondent of that journal writes:—

Mr. Trench is an extensive land-agent for Lord Lansdowne, amongst other wealthy proprietors, and finds himself in the forefront of the land war in some parts of Ireland. He is known to be a man of unflinching courage, an expert lawyer, and an unerring shot, and the leaders of the Plan of Campaign find him an awkward person to deal with. He maintains that he has never during twenty years evicted a tenant without having first offered him easy terms of settlement. For instance, he offered the Luggacurren tenants to accept one half-year's rent, charging them no costs where three half-years' rent were due, and to give them ample time for the balance. These were rents, moreover, that had been adjusted by the Land Court only two or three years ago, and the tenants in many instances boasted of their ability to pay, but contended they were fighting for a principle.

It is certainly a most remarkable fact, and says much for the forbearance and self-control both of the Roman Catholics and the Nationalists, that although the large hall in Dublin where Mr. Trench conducted his Mission was open to all, and was thronged every night by hundreds of listeners, the preacher never met with the slightest insult or interruption. Representatives of all denominations, including Roman Catholics, were to be daily seen in the audience, and many remained at the close of each service to the after-meeting. The workers were much encouraged by the results, although, of course, only the last day will declare what these may really have been.

THE CHILDREN'S CONVALESCENT HOME, BRIGHTON.—Those desirous of placing children needing special care, from hospitals or otherwise, at the sea-side, will be interested in learning that arrangements may be made for their reception at the Home for Children, established at 7, College Place, as a branch of the London and Brighton Invalid Home, Kemp Town. An experienced Christian matron is in charge, and the Home is under the supervision of the resident lady visitors of the Parent Home. Inquiries may be addressed to Miss E. S. Elliott, hon. sec., 66, Mildmay-park London, N.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.

The forty-ninth annual meeting of this Society, held in Exeter Hall on May 24, was very largely attended. Mr. J. R. Mackenzie (the secretary) said that nearly a million and a half of tracts were given away during last year—500,000 of these at exhibitions in London, Folkestone, Liverpool, and Edinburgh. Free grants had been made to a large number of Christian missions. With regard to the foreign work, the whole Paris stock has recently been given to the Paris City Mission, Rev. R. W. McAll's Mission, &c. The committee are also about to undertake special work in Spain, commencing at the exhibition to be held in Barcelona.

Sir R. Phayre, who occupied the chair, commended the work. He expressed his belief that the upper and middle classes could be reached only by such work as that of this Society.

Rev. Arthur Hall spoke of this as entirely different to the work of the Religious Tract Society. Rev. John Kinnings expressed his conviction that far greater and more blessed results would yet follow the work of the Society.

Rev. E. Brewer, Rev. J. Gosset Tanner, and Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, also spoke. The two first pointed especially to the aggressive work for Protestantism, which is greatly forwarded through the instrumentality of the tracts issued; and the last emphasised the claims of the better classes to a greater share in the evangelistic efforts being put forth.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES.

SOCIETY'S EXAMINATION, 1887.

The award is as follows:—In Bishop Butler's "Analogy": Second prize, Henry Rees, Curbar; third prize, John S. Appleby, Leeds; fourth, Elizabeth Cowen, Hoxton. In Professor Redford's "Handbook of Christian Evidence" (Part 2), Theism: Third prize, Walter H. Stapleton, Bow; fourth prize, James Fraser, Bow. In Mozley's "Lectures on Miracles": Third prize, William H. Butler, Warrington. In "Davison on Prophecy": Third prize, Edith Clarke, Château d'Oex, Vaud. In "Whately's Evidences" and Row's "Reasons for believing in Christianity": First prize, Annie Elliott, Belfast; second prize, Ada Field, Winterbourne Gunner; third prize, Frank S. Garnick, Cheltenham; fourth prize, Maggie Smith, Belfast; fifth prize, Ada Southwell, Child's Hill, N.W. First-class certificates, with honours, were awarded to S. Frances Garnick, Cheltenham; Minney Wisbey, Hoxton; and William Rian, Scarborough. First and second-class pass certificates were awarded in every division to other students.

Two features characterise the examinations just held:—(1) the increased number of students in several divisions of the advanced grade; (2) the relative superiority of attainment of those who studied in the elementary grade. The marks secured by the juniors are higher than those awarded to the seniors, an indication that, while good work has been done by some of the latter, better work has been done by some of the former. With a view to meet the case of those who have obtained marks which would justify the award of a prize, but for whom there are not sufficient prizes, the committee have created a new class to be designated "First Class with Honours," a distinction which will be noted on the certificates. All information respecting the Society can be obtained from the office, 13, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

WHITSUNTIDE WITH THE SAILORS.—The Seamen's Christian Friend Society's workers in Ratcliff-highway had a very blessed season with the sailors, both in the open air and in the chapel, on Whit Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday. After a sailors' tea on Tuesday in the reading-rooms a meeting was held in the adjoining chapel, and the place was filled with seamen. Captain Dalrymple (who presided), Revs. G. M. Murphy, G. Butler, and G. J. Hill, and a number of the workers, took part in the meeting. Perhaps the most pleasing feature was when a number of Christian seamen followed each other with telling testimonies.

CITY MISSIONARIES' OUTING.

It is an excellent custom with the officials of the London City Mission to give their faithful, hard-worked servants a day's outing in the early summer. No class of public workers need or deserve it more. All the year round they labour, in season and out of season, for the welfare of the humbler dwellers in the great city. Their daily duties, in most cases, bring them into contact with much poverty and sorrow, and into atmospheres that are anything but exhilarating and health-giving. It is therefore a real economy, as well as a token of kindly interest, to let them have a day's respite away from town in the beginning of the hot season.

This year Folkestone was chosen as the place of resort, and the special train that left Cannon-street on Wednesday morning last week carried to the seaside some 800 souls, including missionaries, their wives or daughters, and a few other friends. The secretaries of the Mission, Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Dawson, accompanied the party, as also did Mr. C. M. Sawell (who organises these outings), and other officials. On such occasions the weather is an all-important element, and this year it was tolerably favourable, with the exception of a sea-fog that crept over the land in the afternoon, obscuring the view.

These are not entirely "play" affairs; the conductors of the Mission wisely utilise the opportunity to awaken or increase among the natives of the place an interest in the Gospelising of the metropolitan city. At Folkestone a meeting was held in the afternoon at the Exhibition building, when there was a great concourse, filling the spacious building, and embracing many of the residents. Rev. J. Hutton, Wesleyan minister, having offered prayer, Mr. Walter, the local secretary of the Mission, gave a brief explanation of the character of the gathering, and spoke in glowing terms of the manner in which Mr. Sawell had made the arrangements for the excursion. He said he believed the London City missionaries were of more use as a moral and restraining force than all the metropolitan police put together.

Lord William Compton, who presided, at half an hour's notice, in the absence of the Mayor, said he had always taken a deep interest in the poor of London, and he believed it was laid to their charge to do the best for them both temporally and spiritually. Rev. C. Bosanquet, vicar of Christchurch, gave the missionaries and their friends a hearty welcome to Folkestone, and alluded to the fact that Lord Shaftesbury—who had done so much for the Mission—died in their midst. That event, Mr. Bosanquet said, had seemed to bestow a blessing upon the town. He thought the London City Mission worthy of liberal support, because, for one thing, its work would help to save London from the prevailing evils of the day. He hoped that meeting would deepen the interest of the town in their work. Rev. A. J. Palmer, Congregational minister, quoted Dr. Johnson's saying, that "Whoever was weary of London was weary of life." He thought, however, that if the great didactic doctor had been a City missionary he would have been glad to get away from London, for a day or two, now and then. Mr. Palmer forcibly urged the claims of the Mission on various grounds, saying that he firmly believed it was for the good of the commonwealth to send men to carry the Gospel to the poor, for the altar is the best safeguard of the throne.

Rev. R. F. Jeffrey, Baptist minister, followed with a hearty little address, in the course of which he said that London would never be won for Christ by the Christian pulpit as it is to-day. Rev. G. C. Martin, another clergyman of the Church of England, said the Gospel was the only solution of the social problems of the time. Mr. Dunn, late missionary to the public-houses, gave some personal testimony of the kind of work done by the Mission, and then the meeting closed with votes of thanks to all who had contributed to the enjoyment of the visitors.

The party reached London in safety at a somewhat late hour, but all seemingly pleased with the experiences of the day.

PRESBYTERIANS & PUBLIC MORALS.

The following motion was unanimously adopted by the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, during its recent meeting in Edinburgh:—

> That whereas there has been introduced into, and is being pressed upon, India and the Crown colonies, a system of regulated vice, which is seriously interfering with the work of the Christian Church in these places, it is expedient that a Special Committee be appointed to look into and watch over this matter, with power to memorialise or petition the proper authorities; such memorials or petitions to be signed by the Moderator. Also, that this Committee be empowered to take suitable steps for enlightening the public mind on this subject, with the view of bringing public opinion to bear on Government, and to resist any attempt, should such be made, to re-introduce the system in our own country.

The committee includes Dr. Rainy, Moderator of the Assembly, and Principal of the New College, Edinburgh; Professors Laidlaw and Lindsay, Mr. Ferguson of Kinmundy, and others. Rev. John Dymock, Kemnay, Aberdeenshire, is Convener of the Committee, and he will be glad to receive communications on the subject, and to lay suggestions before the Committee.

HARROW ROAD ON SUNDAY MORNINGS.

A correspondent writes:—Between Queen's Park and Willesden Cemetery may be seen every Lord's Day morning, from 10.30 to 1 o'clock, large numbers of working men. Indeed, they congregate there by thousands. What, it may be asked, is the particular attraction to this spot? Is it that there is a charm about the road itself? Do the men come to the temperance or social democratic meetings which are held along the line of roadway? Are they attracted to the open-air services and assemblies which at various points are held every Sunday morning? It cannot be said that such is the case. Those who hold these meetings simply avail themselves of the opportunity which the crowd presents to further the objects which they have in view.

That which has made this locality a centre of attraction is the fact that certain public drinking houses are wide open between the hours of ten and one o'clock. To see crowds of men pouring in and out of these houses at will, is a remarkable illustration of one of the most demoralising and degrading agencies tolerated in the north-west of London.

The police are there. They are either powerless to stay this Sunday morning "drink fair," or they are unwilling. In any case the whole scene is a disgrace to a civilised community.

No wonder that commercial depression exists and poverty abounds. To think of thousands of men drawn together, many of them from considerable distances, simply because they can evade the law, and occupy the hours of Sunday morning in getting intoxicating drinks, shows what fearful bondage is induced by these drinking customs.

Wherever the blame rests, this "plague spot" has been and is a weekly premium placed upon drunkenness, a constant incentive to lawlessness, intemperance, and degradation.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN.—The seventeenth annual report of this Home at Goldsmith's-place, Kilburn, states that last year eight new inmates were received, making the total number in the Home thirty-four. The pitifulness of the condition of these afflicted ones is very touchingly brought out in the report. Some are babies, weak, and specially needy; one is a coloured child, very delicate, from Sierra Leone. Six of those who returned to their homes during the year were incapable of learning, or in any way gaining their living. Others, happily, have benefited so much by the help given them that they are gaining their livelihood as teachers, and in other ways. This work of training blind children appeals strongly to the sympathies of all. Communications should be addressed to Miss Emma F. Newbery, lady superintendent, 127, Portsdown-road, Maida Vale, N.

A WORD FROM AUSTRALIA.

In grateful recognition of the continued receipt of The Christian, which has been sent to me for years by an unknown hand, I send to you a few jottings concerning Christian work in Australia. For eighteen years I have been engaged in mission work in Fiji, in which land your paper came to me as a cup of water to a weary soul, and was used by me to refresh others. Now I am beginning circuit work in the city of Goulburn, having been invalided up from the tropics, after many years of exhausting heat.

For the past twelve months I have been travelling through New South Wales and Victoria, and have observed many agencies of Christianity at work similar to those you have in England. There is much of sin and ruffianism under this warm sky, and in a land of "fulness of bread"; but there is much of spiritual life, religious observance, and evangelistic effort. The religious papers of the old country are widely read here, and there are similar publications issued from the colonial press. Then the great philanthropic and evangelistic associations have their counterparts here. A most pleasing instance of this I witnessed in the great Town-hall of Melbourne at a gathering of the Y.W.C.A. The large building was packed, the Governor's lady was present, and amongst the speakers was the Rev. Dr. Bevan, who had just arrived from England, and was impressed with the hall and the audience. To look from the platform upon the sea of faces there for so good an object, was to be made to "thank God, and take courage."

The cities of Melbourne and Sydney are growing fast, but wherever the suburbs extend churches are seen rising amongst the newly-built houses. The Salvation Army beats its drums down every country town, and Hallelujah lasses testify at the corners of the streets of the cities. The Anglicans and Roman Catholics, as well as the Presbyterians and Wesleyans, of Australia, have missions to the multitudinous islanders of the south. Yet missionary zeal and liberality can scarcely be considered as the most prominent characteristic of the people of Australia. They have to plant their own churches, and struggle with home difficulties; and many of their newly formed churches are little else than missions themselves. The terrible disaster to the coalminers at Bulli has evoked a vigorous effort throughout the land to provide a fund for the maintenance of the widows and orphans; and the Governor, Lord Carrington, made a special journey of sixty miles personally to condole with the bereaved.

The disgraceful persecution of Wesleyans in Tonga has virtually closed, by the deportation from the country of the remaining confessors of the Wesleyan Church, and by the prohibition of the Wesleyan European clergymen from teaching or preaching to natives. The Governor of Fiji, accompanied by the Chief Justice, has gone over to Tonga, in a man-of-war, to make certain inquiries in which the British subjects are involved. Much indignation is felt throughout Australia at the high-handed oppression that has been rampant in the Tonga Kingdom of late. The Premier, Mr. Shirley W. Baker, who is much blamed for these proceedings, narrowly escaped with his life from native conspirators, who alleged that they were tired of the oppression that reigned in the land. Mr. Baker's son and daughter were both seriously wounded.

Some considerable stir has been made in Sydney over the central panel of the reredos of St. Andrew's Cathedral. And another stir is still active in connection with the Goulburn Cathedral, one of the clergy and Captain Rossi, a trustee, opposing the Bishop and other trustees as to certain matters connected with the building. Roman Catholicism is acquiring property and erecting convents through the colony.

GIBRALTAR.

THE OPENING OF THE NEW INSTITUTE AT GIBRALTAR

FOR OUR SOLDIERS

SAILORS.

It is purposed to open, during the present year, the above Institute, which is being built at a cost of more than £3000. In order that it may be opened free of debt, £250 is still needed. Perhaps one of the best ways of celebrating Her Majesty's Jubilee is to provide for the spiritual and moral welfare of her brave soldiers and sailors; this the above Institute endeavours to do, and during the past ten years of its operations, God has owned and blessed the work to the real conversion of several. It is, moreover, the only resort out of barracks, in this large garrison town, where the men can obtain refreshments without the temptation of intoxicating drinks.

The new Institute provides Mission Hall, Reading-room, Library, Refreshment Bar, Bath-room, Bed-rooms, &c.

Meetings for Soldiers are held every evening, also special meetings for Soldiers' Wives and Children.

Any offerings towards the same will be gratefully received and acknowledged in The Christian, or by the Hon. Sec. and Treasurer, Col. H. S. Clarke, 6, Berkeley-terrace, Wimbledon.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE HOLIDAY

Many of the little Girls — Members of the Theatrical Mission—are looking forward to this Summer Outing. TEN DAYS at the SEASIDE works wonders for those whose nightly toil renders them susceptible of Consumption, Rheumatism, and St. Vitus Dance. Much Spiritual Blessing rested on the visit to Lowestoft last year. Littlehampton is proposed as the place of sojourn this Summer. Contributions are earnestly solicited, however small, by

Mrs. COURTHOPE TODD,

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

DISEASED LUNGS—ANOTHER CASE REPORTED BY THE PRINCIPAL of MARLBOROUGH COLLEGE, EXETER.

Miss Bessie Bamber—who has seen many marvellous results from my treatment, and who has recommended it for many years; and whose name will be found in connection with the case of a scholar of hers, reported in my work on Consumption (case 72)—writing me March 18, 1887, says:—

"A lady, aged twenty-six years (whose case I have omitted to name to you before), had severe inflammation of the lungs, which resulted in serious disease. The physician's report was alarming. She commenced with your remedy, and took that only. With that, and careful nursing, she got round. For several years she has been in perfect health.

"I have had many enquiries, and have replied, testifying to the truthfulness of your former details of cases, which really are far short of what might be said.

"I thank you for Sunday Words of March 6, containing a report of your Christian work at Brighton. And with kind regards and best wishes,—I remain, faithfully yours, B. Bamber."

Miss Bamber also adds:—

"My old pupil, whose case you reported some years since (case 72 of the book above referred to), is, at this moment, in robust health."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

A PILGRIMAGE IN SPAIN.

Mdme. Lopez Rodriquez, of Figueras, writes:—

"The revival of pilgrimages is another sign of our times, prognosticating trouble. Nothing is better fitted to fan into a flame the fanaticism of the masses of Popish Europe than these pilgrimages. Lines of pilgrims on the roads of Europe have, in former times, been the sure prelude of the march of armies for the extirpation of heresy. Nothing is easier than to transform a band of devotees with rosary and palmer-staff into a host of crusaders, who recite their breviary or sing their aves, clad in shirt of mail and begirt with consecrated sword for the rooting out of heresy. A signal from the Vatican, and lo, these psalmers would start up into warriors. Where pilgrims are now seen every summer wending their way in peaceful guise to some favourite shrine, armed crusaders may yet be beheld marching to fight the battles of the church."—Dr. Wylie.

At Figueras on the morning of April 11 the town was astir at a very early hour. At 6 a.m. every church bell rang out joyously for a special service. At 7, thousands were seen hurrying to the railway station, and there we took our stand to watch the great event of the day—the starting of the pilgrims for the shrine of "Our Lady of the Mountain" at Garriguella, a village among the Pyrenees. Presently the procession sallied from the church of San Pedro, and wended its way through the streets of the town, reaching at length the road leading to the terminus. Acolytes carried banners, followed by priests; then came a long file of poor people, carrying in one hand a basket of provisions, and in the other a rosary. Most of them were women, who wore white veils, or capuchins, as they are called. The younger amongst them also wore little medals with blue ribbon, indicating them to be "daughters of the virgin." To all the poor who consented to go the pilgrimage railway tickets were given gratis, also provisions, and a day's wages to those who had work. Many would have refused, but feared to lose employment. As the procession passed by, we noticed that very few took off their hats, and low whispers of scorn were heard on all sides.

Late in the afternoon the crowd again assembled to witness the return of the pilgrims. The procession, with its brilliant display of banners, which had marched so proudly and gaily in the early morning, was destined to break up in humiliation, disgrace and disaster. One of the priests, supposing the triumph to be complete, shouted out "Viva! Carlos VII! Death to the Protestants! Viva the Inquisition!" These insults had the effect of fanning the smouldering fire of public feeling into a flame. The impatient crowd broke the procession, threw down the banners, and smashed the crucifixes and images of the Virgin and saints. The pilgrims retorted by throwing stones, which were returned with interest, not so much aimed at the penitents as at the priests. One of the latter being so enormously stout that he could not make his escape as rapidly as the rest, received more than his share. Having been the originator of the disturbance, he was finally arrested by the civil guard, and carried off to prison.

Thus ended the long-talked-of pilgrimage which the priests had got up as a grand public demonstration against the Protestants. It is over forty years since such a thing has taken place in this province, and has certainly proved a failure. We trust it will turn out for the furtherance of the Gospel; let us pray that it may be so. English people, for the most part, fancy that Rome is changed and improved since the days of the Inquisition. Her unchangeable spirit of intolerance and antagonism to the truth is strongly manifested in the following extract from a Roman Catholic paper, entitled El Siglo Futuro (The Approaching Century), April 10, 1887:—"No peace, no pacification, no truce, no adjustment, no reconciliation, no armistice, no tolerance; only war, and war till death, inextinguishable, indefatigable, against all that is Liberal, against all that is Protestant, or Rationalistic, or Jewish, or Mohammedan, or Pagan.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

FRANCE AND SWITZERLAND.

That portion of the Church Militant known as the Salvation Army was well represented at Exeter Hall on Monday evening last. We speak not so much of numbers, though there was a large muster of "soldiers" from home and foreign stations. Far more impressive was the simple story of heroism and devotion, told in simplest language. Traces of the severity of the conflict were visible in the worn-looking faces of the female officers. In one place, said the Maréchale, where the hall was crowded with men, smoking, cursing, vociferating, it seemed as though they would not be able to get even a hearing. Making her way across the benches straight to one man who was acting as ringleader, she put her hand on his shoulder. He was awed into silence by the action, and she was able then to secure the attention of those around. Three other girl officers followed her example, and so in four different parts of the hall an effective witness for Christ and of the power of the Gospel was given. But, Mrs. Booth-Clibbern remarked, it needs perseverance and energy, born of the love of Calvary, to plod on night after night amongst such surroundings. Another feature of the work was the extreme poverty endured by those who are engaged in the task of breaking up this hard and stony ground.

Better evidence of the nature of the work could scarcely have been afforded than that contained in the testimonies of some of the converts. The first was known as the dynamite man, and the sketch of his life drawn by himself—and verified, Colonel Clibborn said—revealed a desperado of the fiercest character. Through hearing some members of the Army who visited his village say they were happy, and that everyone could be, he was led to wish for what he had never found. At length he learnt that this happiness was to be obtained by trusting in Christ, and now the testimony of others is that he is as kind and mild and loving as before he was cruel and ferocious. A German officer (from Basle, Switzerland), and two others in Indian costume, whose faces were more eloquent even than their words, gave their testimonies, which were remarkable for the complete surrender of themselves to the Salvation Army.

Colonel Booth-Clibborn gave some statistics of the work. On March 1, 1886, there were in France and Switzerland 32 stations and 116 officers and cadets. On May 1 of the present year there were 60 stations and 196 officers and cadets. Including 48 outposts there are 108 stations where meetings are regularly held. Eighty-five cadets have passed through the Paris training home. Thirty of these were French and thirty-nine Swiss. He also gave several illustrations of the wonderful way in which the power of God has been manifest in the conversion of some of the most hardened.

The Maréchale followed, and in words full of the deepest pathos pleaded the cause of the people for whose salvation she earnestly labours. She said there is a great awakening going on throughout France, evidenced by a general restlessness, a disgust for open sin and infidelity, and a thirst for something better. The cry of thousands is, "Make me believe in something!" Roman Catholics in great numbers are coming to the Salvation Army to inquire about Jesus, and, said the Maréchale, we believe we are going to have them saved by thousands. She gave some stirring details of the work at Calais, Nismes, and other places, which were such as to awaken feelings of gratitude to God for the work thus being accomplished.

We must not omit a reference to the beautiful rendering, by the foreign contingent, of several hymns. The literal translation of two or three lines of these was also very telling, as "Yes, yes, for each one He did shed all his blood," and "The love of God, it is so sweet."

PRAYER and the USE OF MEANS.

In the June instalment of his autobiographical retrospect, which Mr. Hudson Taylor is giving in China's Millions, there occurs the following interesting passage:—

On September 19, 1853, a little service was held in the stern cabin of the Dumfries, which had been secured for me. Then came the parting from my beloved mother, which I can never forget. Our voyage had a rough beginning, but many had promised to remember us in constant prayer. No small comfort was this, for we had scarcely got outside the Mersey when a violent equinoctial gale caught us, and for twelve days we were beating backwards and forwards in the Irish Channel, unable to get out to sea. The gale increased. When we had been out nearly a week, we lay to for a time; but, drifting on a lee coast, were compelled at last to make sail, and endeavour to beat off to windward. The utmost efforts of the captain and crew, however, were unavailing, and on Sunday night, September 25, we found ourselves drifting into Carnarvon Bay, each tack becoming shorter, until at last we were within about a stone's throw of the rocks. About this time, as the ship, which had refused to stay, was put round the other way, the Christian captain said to me, "We cannot live half an hour now; what of your call to labour for the Lord in China?" I had previously passed through a time of great conflict, but that was over; and it was a great joy to feel, and to tell him, that I would not for any consideration be in any other position; that I strongly expected to reach China; but if otherwise, at any rate, the Master would say it was well that I was obeying his command.

Within a few minutes after wearing ship, the captain walked up to the compass, and said to me, "The wind has freed two points; we shall be able to beat out of the bay." And so we did; and, though the bowsprit was sprung, and the vessel seriously strained, in a few days we got out to sea, and the necessary repairs were so thoroughly effected on board that our journey to China was, in due time, completed.

One thing was a great trouble to me that night. I was a very young believer, and had not sufficient faith in God to see Him in and through the use of means. I had felt it a duty to comply with the earnest wish of my beloved and honoured mother, and for her sake, to procure a swimming belt. But in my own soul I felt as if I could not simply trust in God while I had this swimming belt; and my heart had no rest until on that night, after all hope of being saved was gone, I had given it away. Then I had perfect peace, and, strange to say, put several light things together likely to float at the time we struck, without any thoughts of inconsistency, or any scruple!

I have ever since seen the mistake that I made—a mistake very common in these days, when erroneous teaching on Faith Healing does much harm, misleading as to the purposes of God, shaking the faith of some and distressing the minds of many. The use of means ought not to lessen our faith in God, and our faith in God ought not to hinder our using those means that He has given us for the carrying out of his own purposes.

For years afterwards I always took a swimming belt with me, and never had any trouble about it; for after the storm was over the question was settled through the prayerful study of the Scriptures. God gave me then to see my mistake, probably to deliever me from a great deal of trouble on such questions as are even now being raised. When in medical or surgical charge of any case, I have never thought of neglecting to ask God's guidance and blessing in the use of appropriate means, or of neglecting to give Him thanks for answered prayer and restored health. But to me it would appear as presumptuous and wrong to neglect the use of those measures which He Himself has put within our reach, as to neglect to use daily food, and suppose that life and health might be maintained by prayer alone when food was refused.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give a portrait and sketch of Professor De Launay, who is at present in England, delivering lectures on the Catacombs at Rome.

A beautiful story has been told of the late Dean Daunt; how on one occasion, when asked for advice by a girl who said that she had her doubts about a certain course of conduct, he said "Give Jesus the benefit of the doubt." The story has its commentary in the following passage from Amiel's "Fragments d'un Journal Intime," a passage worthy to be written in every Christian's note-book :—

> Whenever conscience speaks with a divided, uncertain, and disputed voice, it is not yet the voice of God. Descend still deeper into yourself, until you hear nothing but a clear and undivided voice, a voice which does away with doubt, and brings with it persuasion, light, and serenity. "Happy," says the Apostle, "are they who are at peace with themselves, and whose heart condemneth them not."

Sir Charles Cameron recently issued a report with regard to the public health and the sanitary work of Dublin. After mentioning that one main cause of the excessive death-rate of that city is "the poverty of a large portion of the population," he says the measures for lessening the mortality

> Must be sought for in the domain of political economy as well as in that of hygeia. Just in proportion as people are well fed, well clad, and well lodged, will they, by reason of their higher vitality, be able to resist the assaults of both constitutional and infective diseases.

We have no wish to discount these keenly practical remarks, for we are well aware that what are termed the "chances of life" of the upper classes are very much greater than are those of the denizens of the courts and slums. In reports of this class, however, it is but seldom that sufficient prominence is given to the terrible factor of drink, which produces so large an otherwise preventible loss of life. It would be next to impossible, without wilful blindness, to make such an omission in a report of the Irish Metropolis, and those who believe that wholesome dwellings would remedy all the moral and physical evils from which the labouring classes and the poor suffer, may take to heart the following words :—

> I do not agree with those who seem to think that an unhealthy population can be made a healthy one by merely providing them with clean and commodious dwellings. If the people of Dublin were well fed and clothed, and did not indulge in an excess of alcoholic liquors, I believe that the city would have a low death-rate, notwithstanding its wretched tenement houses.

We are rejoiced to see that our little contemporary, Brotherhood, to which we referred a week or two ago, has not hesitated, in its efforts to bring about "a juster and happier social order," to protest against the public-house as the greatest hindrance to the amelioration of the condition of the people. In its last issue there is a word for those Christians who do not feel any responsibility with regard to the drink traffic, and who, if they recognise the evils resulting from our national intemperance, do nothing to lessen them :—

> We are responsible for whatever we tolerate without emphatic protest, and we are responsible for what we do not, by every means in our power, try to put down.

If all our Socialistic papers would but speak out boldly on the drink question, as Brotherhood has done, they might do much more than they are doing at present to hasten forward a happier day for the working classes.

We have a placard before us which winds up with "All seats free. No collection." It is enclosed in a letter from the provinces, stating that the mission which it represents is in the greatest need of funds. Is there any common sense in this, sanctified or otherwise? If you can afford to give seats free in a hall or tent, well and good. But almost every cheerful giver is abundantly taxed and overtaxed in his own neighbourhood. Why should he be urged to provide for people, scores or hundreds of miles away, accommodation which they are very willing to pay for themselves? The command truly is to "preach the Gospel to every creature." There are those who have sufficient interest in the Gospel, or enough concern about their souls, to take a seat under shelter and listen to it. We know of no Scriptural reason why they should not have the opportunity of contributing to the expense incurred by the provision of this accommodation. Indeed, the evangelists' commission in Matthew x. evidently supposes that as the labourer is worthy of his meat, the responsibility of receiving and providing for him is laid upon those to whom he is sent. If it be objected, that this commission applied only to the twelve apostles, and to the house of Israel, we reply that in Luke x. the same directions are given to the "other seventy also," who were sent into Galilee of the Gentiles, and into the cities of Samaria. There is not a little morbid and unhealthy sentiment even amongst good men, which, as in the case before us, is very mischievous.

The New York Independent thus sets forth its ideal candidate for the Presidency of the United States :—

> If it is too early as yet to settle upon the man, it is not too early to decide what sort of a man the Republican candidate must be. He must be a man of the highest character, as well as a man of undoubted ability. The times are critical, and if the next standard-bearer of the Republican party be a man whose record is not as clear as crystal, the party is doomed to defeat. . . . We, therefore, urge all those who have the good of the whole country . . . at heart, to use now and hereafter every possible effort in . . . demanding as our leader in 1888 the wisest, the ablest, and the best man that can be found in the nation; a man who has proved himself worthy of the highest position within the gift of the people.

Nothing less than this, so far as moral worth is concerned, should be required from all candidates for office of any kind.

Mr. Stephen Burrows, of Naples, is now in England, and may be addressed, care of National Vigilance Association, 267, Strand. He purposes to resume his lectures on Naples Bay, which proved of much interest last summer. Through an unfortunate error in punctuation in a recent paragraph, it was made to appear that cases of outrage had taken place among sailors at the port of Pozzuoli, where a Strangers' Rest has been established. The reference to a diminution of disorder among seamen applied to Naples, not to Pozzuoli.

A Conference on the Second Advent of our Lord was held in Melbourne, Australia, in December last, one result of which was the designation of Rev. G. W. Gillings, on New Year's day, as travelling delegate, for the purpose of diffusing Second Advent truth in Victoria, a special fund having been raised for the purpose. A noteworthy feature of this movement is that the circular is signed by eight ministers, two of whom are Episcopal, three Presbyterian, one Baptist, and two, either now or formerly, connected with the "Brethren." The object in view is stated to be essentially practical, since, in stating the truth of the pre-millennial advent, it is desired to arouse and stimulate children of God to a more earnest recognition of their calling in Christ, and of their responsibilities in Christian life and service; and to win souls.

A significant discussion took place on May 25 at the fortnightly meeting of the Geological Society, and which turned on the antiquity of man. The veteran geologist, Professor Prestwich, F.R.S., disputed the large measures of time claimed for the Glacial period. He maintained that the close of this period was rather 8000 than 80,000 years since, and that Neolithic man (i.e., the maker of stone implements) first appeared in Europe 3000 or 4000 years B.C. Dr. Evans, a high authority on the matter, contested the evidence recently adduced from Wales of a pre-Glacial man. Dr. Geikie stated that Sir W. Thomson had enormously reduced his own estimate of geological time.

Apropos of the discussions on Church Hymnals, the words of such a composer as Lowell Mason may be quoted. Writing to the late Rev. John Curwen he said :—

> I look with sorrow upon some measures in relation to congregational singing. Mechanical aids for expression divert the mind. Go into your closet, and in offering prayer and praise there do you want these marks? I have seen congregational singing driven into a wilderness by a notation called "musical expression."

The prospect of reconciliation between the Roman Church and the kingdom of Italy does not improve. "The Pope," says The Times correspondent in Rome, "looks forward to a great European conflict, in which the influence of the Church will be so important, that it must be paid for at the Church's own price, which will be the restoration of the Temporal Power." This is the claim on which Papal journals are taking their stand. Connected with this subject, we may add that the new general of the Jesuits is a Swiss, of vast learning, uncompromising purpose, and he is making his influence on behalf of the Papacy felt in Italy.

The late Synod in Edinburgh of the United Presbyterian Church, is said to have been spiritually the most refreshing and stimulating held for many years. Upwards of 800 ministers and elders were present. Ten ministers were appointed to act as evangelistic deputies to stir up congregations to Christian zeal, and to hold conferences to promote spiritual life and aggressive effort. Nothing could be more timely amid embittering political agitations.

The Times reports as under. We can scarcely suppose that Cardinal Manning had any personal knowledge of this transaction; but we shall be interested in learning the result of the application to him:—

> At the Thames Police-court, a man who gave the name of Martin Pechenny, of 7, Ellen-place, Ellen-street, St. George's-in-the-East, asked Mr. Biron's advice respecting his daughter Ann Pechenny, aged thirteen, of whom he had heard nothing for six months. He said that some time ago a person, through the influence of Cardinal Manning and a Roman Catholic clergyman, was sent to fetch his child away. Although he had made all inquiries as to the whereabouts of his daughter he was unable to learn anything. Mr. Biron advised applicant to write to Cardinal Manning.

A correspondence has been carried on in The Times concerning "Politics in the Pulpit." Nothing seems to us to have been wiser than the following:—

> SIR,—I have modestly waited for someone whose name carries more weight than mine to say the obvious word in this controversy about politics in the pulpit, in which neither side—Nonconformists or Established clergy—can throw stones at the other. There is all the difference in the world between political preaching and party preaching. Politics is the science of living and religion is its inspiration. They ought never to be divorced, and the preacher who does not enforce this connection is as much wanting in his duty as the one who employs "coward's castle" as a platform for advocating his own views. There is plenty to say about politics, especially at election times, without touching upon party questions, and without giving a hint of the preacher's leaning. If it were oftener said, perhaps party feeling would not be quite so hot.
> I am, Sir, &c., E. C. HAWKINS.
> St. Bride's, Fleet-street.

It is stated that of fifty-six changes in the Revised New Testament, twenty-two are simply returns to the renderings of Wycliffe, whose translation was made from the Latin version of Jerome. There are but few people who are familiar with Wycliffe's version, a fact to be regretted, for it is of singular value in its quaintness, and as Hervey Baber's edition of 1810 is sometimes to be met with in the old booksellers' catalogues we would recommend students of the Bible to look out for it.

Readers of George Borrow's remarkable volume, "The Bible in Spain," who remember what difficulty the courageous English gentleman—half gipsy, half aristocrat—had a little over twenty years ago smuggling a few copies of God's Word into Spain, will rejoice to know that to-day there are in that land nearly 12,000 members of the evangelical bodies.

Archbishop Manning a little while ago was advocating the reading of portions of the New Testament in the schools. He does not appear to be at one with his co-religionists on the subject, if we may judge from The Universe, for in that Romish organ the British and Foreign Bible Society was recently designated a "criminal association," and "the most flagrant instance of systematised plunder undertaken for the worst of motives, and perpetuated by the worst of agents."

AN EXCELLENT RESCUE WORK has been begun in connection with the National Vigilance Association at Finsbury Park. A house is needed, suitable for a Home, somewhere near London. Have any of our readers knowledge of one that would be suitable?

LATTER-DAY DELUSIONS.

DELUSIONS increase and multiply. The least mischievous before us just now is that of Mr. Frederick Boyce, ex-City-missionary, who claims to be a special messenger with a special message. When a man makes such a pretension there is no knowing where his vanity may lead him. But there is not, so far as we are aware, any perversion of foundation truth in the teaching of the "messenger." On the contrary, there is much sound counsel and godly exhortation.

"The New and Latter House of Israel," whose head-quarters are at New Brompton, Kent, with branches in London, Manchester, Glasgow, America, New Zealand, &c., is a foolish and flagrant heresy. Its adherents are extremely diligent, and have now taken to Hyde Park. They pretend that the "Flying Roll" is God's latest book given to the latter-day Israel as an especial revelation. A correspondent, who joined their audience on Sunday week, writes to us thus:—

> These men and women quote Scripture, profess the Gospel of Christ, and on that proceed to perfection, as they say, by bringing in the most Satanic doctrine that can be propagated—that man may, can, and shall deliberately sin against God to the day of his death, and after twice dying (the Buddhist theory in part) be transmigrated to heaven.

The charges of adultery at the Agapemone, contained in Hepworth Dixon's narrative in "Spiritual Wives," are abundantly corroborated by their own printed documents, which may be found in the British Museum, and by living testimony. Yet men and women of blameless life, and others, are so deluded that they are spreading this Satanic doctrine, clothed as an angel of light, among young women wherever they can get a hearing.

Lastly, for the present, we have the astounding impudence and chicanery of "King Solomon" at Brighton, who declares that "the sealing of the Bride of Christ by the angel of Jehovah (Rev. vii. 2, 3) terminated on Sabbath, the 15th inst. [May], at twelve o'clock, midnight, and the cry went forth, Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet Him." "The day of the gospel of grace is ended, and eternity has commenced."

The tree is known by its fruits. The last number of the periodical issued by this "Army of the Lord" contains a "testimony" by "Rachel," who is the wife of a seafaring man at Birkenhead, and who writes to him that she never intends returning home to him, though she has seven children, the youngest a babe of fourteen months. She has sent her keys to her husband, who finds amongst her papers quite a pile of letters from Wood, showing that she had been in constant correspondence with him. A devoted Christian worker writes:—

> I enclose you a paper by this ——. It makes my heart ache to see how his influence is extending, even to our very door, and drawing away wives and mothers to his dancing saloon. But for God using us in warning, many others would have been ensnared, as telegraphs and letters have been sent to them from Brighton, saying that if they did not forsake all, and come up there, they would be left to pass through the dreadful tribulations which are coming upon the earth.

Here we stop to make two remarks. The false doctrine of "the redemption of the body," as a present attainment by faith, is at the bottom of these damnable heresies. The Apostle says, "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth together until now, waiting for our adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." And again: "We wait for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory" (Rom. viii.; Phil. iii. R.V.). We cannot wholly absolve even the most Scriptural of the late teaching concerning holiness from neglecting, at least by silence, this side of the truth; while those who teach and profess the eradication of sin from the nature in the present life, and therefore have no sin, or sinfulness, to confess, but smite upon their breasts and say, not "God be merciful to me a sinner," but "The Prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me," are directly responsible for leading inexperienced and untaught converts to the edge of the precipice, over which they are enticed by men having eyes full of adultery and that cannot cease from sin. Peter's photograph of the deceivers and the deceived is of great value at the present crisis:—

> For, uttering great swelling words of vanity, they entice in the lusts of the flesh by lasciviousness, those who are just escaping from them that live in error; promising them liberty, while they themselves are bondservants of corruption; for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he also brought into bondage.

We earnestly hope that at Keswick, and all other Conventions for the promotion of holiness, this frightful danger will be warned against. For it must not be forgotten that it is in the line of unsound teaching with respect to holiness, faith-healing, and perfection, that these heresies have in these latter days sprung up.

Our second remark is in the form of a question. Why is it that some, whom we cannot but believe to be real and zealous Christians, have been drawn away by these pretenders? Is not this one reason?—That they read in Scripture of a power of the Holy Spirit, of which they see almost nothing in ordinary Christian life, and, therefore, when they see something which professes to be a spiritual influence, whether it be the mild and decent delusion of Mrs. Girling, or the wild indecencies at Brighton, or the refined and loving courtesies of the adulterous Agapemone, they say, as the Samaritans said of Simon Magus, "This is the great power of God."

The only way really to meet these devices of Satan is for all true followers of Jesus to receive and make manifest the power of God the Holy Ghost. "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is riot; but be filled with the Spirit; speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody with your heart to the Lord; giving thanks always for all things in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to God, even the Father: subjecting yourselves one to another in the fear of God."

BELFAST PRISON GATE MISSION.—At the annual meeting of this Mission, held last week, it was stated that during the year eighty-five women have been admitted to the Home at Tudor Lodge, the inmates of which earned £800 towards their own support. The Home accommodates thirty-two persons (exclusive of the matron and her assistants), and has been constantly full. The rescue work and that of waiting at the gate of the prison have been regularly maintained, and there have been many evidences of blessing. Encouraging and grateful letters have been received from those who have found work and comfortable homes across the Atlantic, and it was remarked that a greater percentage of those who go abroad seem to remain true to their good resolutions, than of those who, under apparently most favourable conditions, remain at home.

YOUNG WOMEN IN GLASGOW.

The memorial stone of the new Y.W.C.A. building, at 80, Bath-street, Glasgow, which will provide ample accommodation for those who seek to avail themselves of the advantages of this Home, was laid by Mrs. J. B. Mirrlees, on Friday last, in the presence of about fifteen hundred of the friends interested in the work. The proceedings were throughout of a most interesting character.

Mr. J. Campbell White, who presided, gave a résumé of the work of the Association during the twelve years of its existence, showing how it has grown steadily year by year, until larger premises became an absolute necessity. The membership numbers 1200, and last year the boarding-house was always full. Three thousand servants placed their names on the register, and many of these were sheltered till they got a place. The branches in different parts of the city are doing good work, and affiliated meetings are held from time to time in the suburbs and various churches of Glasgow. The site for the new premises, he added, cost £7000, and the buildings and furnishing would cost £7000 more, of this about £11,500 is in hand.

At the conclusion of the ceremony a procession of some 150 young men and women marched along Renfield and Sauchiehall-streets, singing Gospel hymns. They attracted considerable attention, and at the corner of Douglas-street an open-air meeting was held, several young men giving their testimonies. Subsequently a praise meeting was held at the Christian Institute, when twenty-three young women told the story of their conversion, and testified to blessing received at the Y.W.C.A.

The new building will be a handsome structure of five floors, and will be fitted throughout in accordance with the latest improvements.

MOUNT HERMON ORPHAN HOMES.—The annual sale of work for the benefit of these Homes will be held in Brondesbury Hall, Iverson-road, N.W., on Tuesday and Wednesday, June 14 and 15. One hundred and twenty orphans will sing at intervals. The sale will be opened on Tuesday at two o'clock.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The annual Conference of this body will be held this year in Aberdeen, commencing on September 20. There will be three sittings on each of the two following days. The programme of subjects will include the following:—"The Power of Christian Union as distinct from Ecclesiastical Union"; "Christian Union essential to the Evangelisation of the World"; "The insidious advances of Romanism and Infidelity"; "The true qualifications for Christian service"; "Modern examples of Christian heroism in Missionary enterprise at Home and Abroad"; "Christianity in relation to Modern Socialism"; "Testimony in doctrine, life, and work, the best defence of Christianity"; "Study of the Word of God—the remedy for present-day worldliness and erroneous teaching."

GROVE STREET INSTITUTE, GLASGOW.—For twenty-seven years this Mission has faced the question of "How to raise the Masses," and during that time has employed a great variety of agencies. After all these years of varied effort, in the report just issued there is the statement, "Our faith remains unshaken in the Gospel as the great elevating power—the power of God unto salvation of body as well as soul." The Institute consists of eighteen halls and classrooms, the largest capable of holding 900 people, and provides work of different kinds for about 250 workers. Every room is in use throughout the whole of Sunday and every week evening. Children, young men and maidens, old men and matrons here learn to "praise the name of the Lord." The number of persons reached through the various agencies is enormous. One branch, the staff of which is composed of a number of Christian young women of the working classes, guided and helped by about forty young ladies and several gentlemen, has under its care some 300 young women, who are taught in eighteen Bible-classes on Thursday evenings, and in sewing and social gatherings on Monday evenings, while on Sundays a fellowship meeting is carried on. This record of a year's work among the masses of a great city is indeed deeply interesting. The secretary is Mr. Godfrey Pattison, 86, North Oswald-street, Glasgow.

A MISSIONARY BREAKFAST.

The annual missionary breakfast organised by Mr. Frank H. White, of the Talbot-road Tabernacle, Bayswater, was held on Whit Monday, and was largely attended. The object of the gathering is to stimulate interest in foreign missionary work; the stirring addresses which were delivered by Mr. White, Mr. Elbert S. Clarke, and Rev. J. Gelson Gregson could not have failed to contribute towards this purpose. Mr. White observed that though the Church had slumbered for centuries over missionary work, it is scarcely possible for her now to sit at ease, while the cry to save the heathen came from all parts of the world. It would be awfully criminal if the Church slept while so many souls remained to be won for Christ.

Mr. Clark gave a highly interesting and encouraging account of the work carried on by himself and his devoted Christian wife for the last twelve years among the Zulu Kaffirs at Rock Fountain, Ixopo, and other parts of Southern Africa. He recited the many difficulties which he with other missionaries had experienced in pioneer work, and told of many remarkable conversions to God. He convinced his hearers that as Christianity was spreading in Africa, the hindrances to the extension of Christ's kingdom are gradually, but surely disappearing. Mr. Clark stated that though his mission is unsectarian it is closely connected with the Society of Friends. He trusted the time is not far distant when the Friends would wake up to a true realisation of their responsibility in connection with foreign mission work.

Mr. Gregson deplored the want of labourers in India, and declared that if the Church of Christ could only be properly aroused to its duty, in five years' time every town and every village in that country would hear the Gospel. "And," added he, "is not that a thing worth doing?" If in the right spirit we asked God for men to do the work, He would supply them. Missionaries must be God-sent men. If they are, there will be no failure in the work of saving the heathen world. He was confident that the Lord would send both the men and the money necessary to save India.

RAGGED SCHOOLS AT THE THEATRE.—The Record states that Mr. Henry Irving's offer to admit 2000 ragged-school children to a special performance at the Lyceum Theatre has been declined.

MELBOURNE Y.M.C.A.—This Association recently conducted a series of suburban lectures on "Infidels and Infidelity," by Mr. Wilmot Oakey. The programme consisted of half-hour lectures, then half an hour to questions, finishing with half an hour's Gospel testimony from any present. The interest and usefulness of these lectures have been very great. The general secretary subsequently gave a series of Sunday evening readings in "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress" to large meetings in the Association Hall. It is scarcely necessary to add that the Gospel comes to the front in them. Prior to sailing for England by the Valetta on April 6, the retiring president, Mr. Robert Gillespie, was entertained at breakfast by the Board of Management. Resolutions were passed commending the guest of the evening to the goodwill of fellow Christians in the old country.

LEYSIAN MISSION, WHITECROSS-STREET.—A remarkably successful meeting took place recently at this Mission, 199, Whitecross-street. It originated in the need keenly felt for a long time of getting hold of the fathers of the Sunday-school children, and interesting them in the work. An "at home" was therefore arranged for their special benefit, the time fixed being nine o'clock. The hall was beautifully decorated with flowers, and after a good meal, during which there was some excellent music, the secretary, among other announcements, said it was proposed to organise a Working Men's Club, and also a company of the Boys' Brigade. The men promised their hearty support and co-operation, and also expressed the great pleasure they had derived from the meeting. On the following Saturday evening a goodly number came together and drew up a code of rules for the club, which has thus made a good beginning.

A CHILDREN'S FESTIVAL.

Dr. Stephenson's recent Jubilee festival at the Albert Hall, in connection with the Children's Home under his care, was a grand success. A procession of nearly five hundred children, representing all branches of the Home, with the exception of the Canadian, formed a most pleasing feature Lord Harrowby, who presided, alluded with deep feeling to the pitiful necessity for such homes which supply to the gutter children that "most blissful of all possessions, the English home." Pointing to the 14)0 who have already passed through the Home, he said that Christian folks who had helped to support them have also the ineffable blessing of feeling that, by God's providence, they had been the means of rescuing them in many cases from an early grave, and from a fate worse than death itself.

Dr. Stephenson in his address expressed his thankfulness that, in the sixteen years since the Home was founded, its organisation had been accomplished, and that now he and his friends can look forward to some years in which to devote their whole energies to the actual prosecution of the work. Ninety-five per cent., he added, of those who have passed through the Homes are now living respectable, useful lives. It is proposed to build two additional houses at the Princess Alice Orphanage.

OBITUARY.

REV. JOHN STEWART, SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

This faithful minister of the Gospel, before h went to New Zealand in 1877, conducted missions for the Scottish Evangelistic Society in most of the towns of Scotland. He won the public esteem by his faithfulness to Gospel truth and his kind ness of disposition. Mr. Stewart was born a Kirriemuir, Forfarshire, and had been pastor of the Jamestown (South Australia) Presbyterian Church for two years preceding his death there on April last.

BAPTIST CONGO MISSION.

The latest mail brings the sad news of the sudden deaths of Messrs. James H. Shindler and Frank C Darling. Mr. Shindler, who was but twenty-eigh years of age, and who left this country in Augus last, died on March 19 from exposure to the sun the heat recently having been very great and especially trying. Mr. Darling's death took place from blood-poisoning, owing to a large internal absces from which he had suffered. He was in hi thirtieth year, and left England in 1884. He wa for several years connected with Glossop-road Baptist Church, Sheffield, and it was only in January last that he was married to a lady from that town, who is now on her way back to England

A GREEK JUDGE AND MORALS.—Dear Si —Your readers will be glad to hear that the Publi Prosecutor at Athens has taken stringent measure against publishers and vendors of immoral literature The first delinquent was condemned by the judg to one and a half month's imprisonment. Severa others who were in Court at the trial, and wer themselves accused, on hearing the sentence mad a run for the door; but the judge condemned them each one to six week's imprisonment. I wonde whether the Public Prosecutor in England woul have the courage to do likewise, and whether th judges would consider that indecent literature is s vile a thing in England as it is in the eyes of th Greek judges. A YEAR OF LIFE-BOAT WORK.—The report o the Royal National Lifeboat Institution states tha during last year twenty new lifeboats were place on the coast, all of these being furnished with th latest improvements. Altogether the Institutio now has 293 lifeboats, by whose aid 601 lives an thirty-three vessels were saved. The committee als paid rewards for the rescue of 160 persons by mean of shore-boats. No stronger appeal for the support o the institution could be found than in the fact tha nearly thirty-three thousand persons have bee saved from a watery grave, through the instrumentality of the Society, since its establishmen Reference is made to the painful disasters to lif boats during the winter. Besides medals an binocular glasses, a sum of over £6000, includin the grants to widows and orphans of lifeboat me drowned on duty, was awarded during 1886 f saving life.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JUNE 12.—PSALM CXXVII.

In the first seven "Songs of Degrees" we have traced the experience of God's pilgrims from their first cry to God until their coming again with joy bringing their sheaves with them. This eighth Song of Degrees is "for Solomon," and, as is the case in Psalm lxxii. (the only other with this title), "a greater than Solomon is here." It is a distinctly Millennial Psalm. The house is at last built, when the Lord is the builder. The city is at last secured, when the Lord is its keeper.

1.—Except the Lord build the house.—The house which David was not permitted to build, Solomon at last erected (1 Kings viii. 19), but Israel's failure, which commenced in Solomon himself, caused it to be overthrown. The second Temple, which succeeded it, has been "laid even with the ground" for many centuries. The earthly house which the Lord builds is yet to come, but we have a glimpse of its glories in Ezek. xl.—xlviii., where Jehovah calls it "The place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever." Except the Lord keep the city.—No city has been taken so often as Jerusalem, nor will it be impregnable until the time when "the name of the city from that day shall be 'The Lord is there'" (Ezek. xlviii. 35).

2.—So He giveth his beloved sleep.—"Sleep" is used adverbially, and should be "in sleep" (R.V. margin). The allusion is to wisdom (to attain which men toil night and day) being given to Solomon in his sleep (1 Kings iii. 5—15). The Hebrew for "beloved" is the same as in Solomon's other name Jedidiah (2 Sam. xii. 25), and points prophetically to "the Beloved," in whom his people stand accepted, out of whom they were taken (as Eve out of Adam in "a deep sleep," Gen. ii. 21), and to whom they are given, that through them "might be known the manifold wisdom of God" (Eph. iii. 10).

5.—Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them.—Happy is the man who can say "Ye are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus" (2 Cor. i. 14). "In Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel" (1 Cor. iv. 15). The literal meaning, too, will be true in Millennial days (Is. lxi. 9, lxv. 23).

MONDAY, JUNE 13.—PSALM CXXVIII.

A touching picture of Millennial blessedness. "The happiness of a citizen of Zion in his temporal prosperity, in his family enjoyments, and in the peace and honour of his country, is rehearsed. Human delights in family order and general earthly blessing will be the portion of Israel in the days of the kingdom."—Bellett.

2.—Thou shalt eat the labour of thy hands.—See this thought expanded, Isa. lxv. 21—23.

4.—Thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the Lord.—The parallelism between this Psalm and the close of Isaiah is very striking. Compare Isa. lxvi. 2:—"To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word."

6.—Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children.—"Patriarchal family happiness is here expected; for that will be revived in the kingdom on earth, as it was when 'Joseph saw Ephraim's children of the third generation'" (Gen. l. 23).—Bellett. It may be that as three generations are calculated to go to a century, so in the Millennium life on earth may be lengthened tenfold, and three generations go to the thousand years. Isa. lxv. 20 seems to point to death at a hundred years old as abnormal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 14.—PSALM CXXIX.

This—the tenth of the "Step-songs"—is a retrospect. Delitzsch entitles it, "the end of the oppressors of Zion." It reminds one of Christian in the "Pilgrim's Progress," who, when at the gate of the Celestial City, "turned his head to look back," and saw the fate of Ignorance. It seems to be the close of the first series of these "Songs of Degrees," the number ten thus completing the first series.

1.—Many a time have they afflicted me.—"The same company have a remembrance, as in the two preceding Psalms they had a prospect, in their minds...They look back here, as there they had been looking forward." There, it was their expected blessing in Jerusalem; here, their recollected griefs in Babylon. And they look for righteous judgment upon the haters of Zion."—Bellett.

4.—The Lord is righteous.—Compare Rev. xix. 2, "True and righteous are his judgments: for He hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand."

5.—Let them all be confounded and turned back that hate Zion.—"The quick destruction of the enemy and the wicked, in the latter day, even in the very moment of their fullest pride, may be intimated. For this will be the fate, it would appear from the Word of God, both of Babylon and the beast" (Dan. xi. 45; Rev. xviii. 17).

6.—Let them be as the grass...which withereth.—A final retribution on the enemies of Zion in the professing Church, corresponding to the falsity of their profession at the first, "because they had no root they withered away" (Matt. xiii. 6).

7.—Neither do they which go by say, "The blessing of the Lord be upon you."—If not partakers of the blessing, there remains only the curse (see Matt. xxv. 34, 41; comp. Isa. xxxiv. 5), where Edom (type of the merely professing church) is called, "The people of my curse."

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15.—PSALM CXXX.

Apparently the commencement of a second series of "Step-songs," consisting of five, as the first series did of ten. Though a shorter series, it is in some respects a more important one than the first, as giving a deeper view of the prominent features of the Christian's course.

1.—Out of the depths have I cried unto Thee, O Lord.—The first series began with, "In my distress I cried unto the Lord, and He heard me." Here we have the same view of the first step in the pilgrim's course, but a far more full analysis of its nature. Luther called it a "Pauline" Psalm, and Delitzsch says, "the condemnability of the natural man, the freeness of mercy, and the spiritual nature of redemption, are expressed in a manner thoroughly Pauline."

4.—There is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be feared.—"He forgives, as it is expressed elsewhere (lxxix. 9), 'for his name's sake.' He seeks therein the glorifying of his name. He gives the sinner occasion, ground, and material for reverential thanksgiving and praise, by bestowing 'forgiveness' upon him in the plenitude of absolutely free grace."—Delitzsch.

5.—In his word do I hope.—When the soul is brought to this point, deliverance is sure, this is the turning-point of regeneration. See 1 Pet. i. 23—25; Jas. i. 18.

8.—He shall redeem Israel.—The Hebrew word for redeem here used comes from a root which means "to cut loose from" (Gesenius). Compare the correct reading of Rev. i. 5, "Unto Him that loveth us, and loosed us from our sins in his own blood" (R.V.), contrasted with Prov. v. 22.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16.—PSALM CXXXI.

The soul that is "born again" by the word of God (see cxxx. 5) is as a "new-born babe" (1 Pet. ii. 2). "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. xviii. 3).

1.—Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty.—"Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. xviii. 4). Things too high for me.—It is part of the true humility of a new-born soul to admit that there are things "too high for" it. The proud self-confiding rationalism of the day finds nothing "too high for" it.

2.—As a child that is weaned of his mother.—R V. renders more accurately, "Like a weaned child with his mother, my soul is with me like a weaned child." The Hebrew expresses a parallel between the new position of a weaned child with regard to its mother, and the soul's position with regard to "self." To be weaned from self is no slight attainment in the Christian's course. Delitzsch preserves the parallelism thus:—

> Like a child that is weaned beside its mother,
> Like the child that is weaned, is my soul beside me.

The thought seems to be that as the child when weaned has done with the mother as a source of support and strength, so should it be with souls that are "weaned from the milk" of nature. See Isa. xxviii. 9. For the better milk provided for such, see 1 Pet. ii. 2.

3.—Let Israel hope in the Lord.—Souls that are weaned from self will turn to the Lord for the supply of all their need (Phil. iv. 19).

FRIDAY, JUNE 17.—PSALM CXXXII.

"The view that it was composed by Solomon himself, when the Ark of the Covenant was removed out of the tent on Zion into the Temple, is favoured by 2 Chron. v. 5, &c."—Delitzsch. See also 2 Chron. vi. 41, where Solomon uses the words of ver. 8, 9.

1.—Lord, remember David and all his afflictions.—"By 'afflictions' are meant all the care and trouble which David had in order to procure a worthy abode for the sanctuary of Jehovah."—Delitzsch. These were but typical of "the sufferings of Christ," which had for their object the erection of a temple for the Lord (Eph. ii. 21).

4.—I will not give sleep to mine eyes, &c.—"How am I straitened till it be accomplished" (Luke xii. 50). "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up" (Ps. lxix. 9).

6.—Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah.—"Ephratah is the name of the district in which Kirjath-Jearim lay (1 Chron. xiii. 6)"—Delitzsch. "Ephratah" is also the ancient name of Bethlehem (Micah v. 2), and its use here is prophetically significant of the birthplace of Him of whom the Ark was but a type.

11.—The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David.—From this to the end of the Psalm is one of the most glorious passages in Scripture descriptive of "the everlasting covenant, even the sure mercies of David" (Isa. lv. 3), which mercies we learn from Acts xiii. 34, have been made "sure" by the resurrection of Christ from the dead. See 2 Tim. ii. 8; Heb. xiii. 20. See also the distinct reference to this Psalm in Luke i. 69. The soul that has grasped the full meaning of all these "covenant" promises has gained no slight step in knowledge of the things of God.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18.—PSALM CXXXIII.

1.—To dwell together in unity.—The words "in unity" are not in the Hebrew, and though they may be a fair expansion of the idea conveyed by the word "together," they must not be supposed to convey anything like the thought of mere external Church organisation, which often hinders rather than helps brethren "dwelling together." It is also well to remember that what is contemplated as "good and pleasant" is not the formation of a brotherhood by people dwelling together, but that those who are "brethren"—children of the same Father—should "dwell together," which can only be effected by making God the dwelling-place (1 John iii. 24, iv. 13—16).

2.—Like the precious ointment upon the head.—The allusion is to the holy anointing oil, the type of the Holy Spirit (Ex. xxx. 22—33). "The sons of Aaron were only sprinkled with this anointing oil; but Aaron had it poured on his head; hence he is called "the anointed priest," whilst the other priests are only anointed in so far as their garments, like Aaron's, were also sprinkled with the oil together with the blood of the ram of consecration (Lev. viii. 12, 30)."—Delitzsch.

3.—As the dew of Hermon [and as the dew] that descended upon the mountains of Zion.—By inserting in italics the words in brackets, our translation has lost the whole point of this comparison, which is that dew formed on the lofty snows of Hermon should descend so far off and refresh the barren and arid mountains of Zion. So the Spirit descends from the Head enthroned in heaven upon his people here below who long for Him "in a barren and dry land where no water is." Both these illustrations point to "the unity of the Spirit" (Eph. iv. 3), rather than to any unity of ecclesiastical organisation, which if it be of an exclusive kind, is far from being either "good" or "pleasant."

MESSAGES from AFRICA and JAMAICA

CONTRIBUTED BY MISS LUCY GUINNESS.

We have received a letter from a coloured sister, Mrs. Juliana Thompson, who is personally unknown to us, but who has met a former Harley House student, who is now in the field. Her pleasing introduction of herself and her people, and her touching question "Won't you love us too?" we are sure will interest many besides ourselves. She writes:—

"We read in The Regions Beyond, with much sorrow, of the cruel murder of Bishop Hannington, and as true daughters of the dark continent do weep, mourn, and blush at the wicked action of the young king! We feel deeply for his wife and dear children, and do sincerely pray to God to support them in their great loss. Alas! Ethiopia does seem a long time stretching her hands unto God, when African kings will kill and not receive missionaries! But knowing that He that has promised is faithful we have only to hope on.

"Our mission field lies on the West Coast of Africa, in the Sherbro country, where the United Brethren are doing much work; we are in charge of a school just about two miles from the head station at Shangay. Your love seems entirely centred on the Congo opening, and your heart seems to yearn in everything you write concerning that mission, as doth the heart of a mother watching a growing babe. I feel so jealous of the Congo Mission having all your love and attention, that I will ask, Won't you love us too in the Sherbro country? We are not fast growing, nor are we so distressed as the Uganda Christians, who went to be baptized, though death awaited them; we are just thirty-four helpless school children, and a small gathering of forty elder men and women on Sunday. We stand in need of help to erect a small chapel, and of picture books for our school-room use. Our address is, Mrs. Juliana Thompson, Lesher School, Senehoo, Shangay, W.C.A."

If our hearts had been centred on the Congo, and the Congo only, as Mrs. Thompson supposes, we think we should have been obliged to make a little room in them for our African sister, and the "thirty-four helpless school children"!

From Mrs. Collie (wife of a former student at Harley House), Waldensia, Falmouth, P.O., Jamaica, West Indies:—

"Do you know of anyone who loves the Lord's work who would give me £12 a year to let me keep a child here with me? Hitherto except such as I hire for servants I have not taken any till about two years ago, when we were removed from Clarendon and came here. I then brought a girl with me to keep. Her father was dead, and her mother very ill when I took her, and her mother died about six weeks after we took her. She is a brown girl, the parents were decent people, rather above the common black people, and these are generally the ones who suffer most. I am now preparing this girl for the Government Training College. She will go up for the entrance examination next year, August, as she will then be sixteen years old, and that is the age for admission here. We are so thankful that the Government has begun a college for female teachers; it was only opened about two years ago, but it is a great step forward, and a good opening for our native girls. I would be glad if I could manage to keep another, as the two could share the same room, &c., and would only be much the same teaching.

"I have been thinking that in this Jubilee year, when in England and your great London so much money will be wasted on self, perhaps some lover of God and good works might provide the means to let me keep a girl or two here to be taken out of the foul sin of immorality, which is the leading vice of this country, and to be trained both for this life and that which is to come. The Lord has not given us the means, and our income is very small and very uncertain.

"My husband is very well, and always busy. We do love our work here, and only wish we could do more than ever for the dear Lord whose we are, and whom we serve. I would be glad to know of anyone with whom I might correspond, or who would be interested in Jamaica girls for Jesus' sake."

ANCIENT MERCHANTS' LECTURE.—During June the subject of the Merchants' lecture at Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields, E.C., is "The Problems of a Great City." The forthcoming lectures are: Tuesday, June 14, Rev. Alfred Rowland, LL.B., "Wealth and Poverty"; June 21, Rev. Colmer B. Symes, "Practical Christian Unity"; Rev. Robert F. Horton, M.A., "Municipal Reform and Spiritual Work." The hour of meeting is 12 noon.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON INEBRIETY.—The council of the Society for the Study of Inebriety announce a number of papers on various phases of inebriety as a disease, and on legislation for the cure of inebriates, to be read at the Congress to be held at the Westminster Town Hall, on Wednesday, July 6. In the morning Dr. Cameron, M.P., will preside; Dr. B. W. Richardson in the afternoon; and Dr. Norman Kerr at the public dinner in the evening. A reception to Dr. T. D. Crothers, hon. secretary of the American Association, at the rooms of the Medical Society of London, on Tuesday, and a visit to the Dalrymple Home, at Rickmansworth, on Thursday, are features of the gathering.

EVANGELISTS AT WORK.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

These brethren have just concluded a fortnight's mission in Stockton-on-Tees, under the auspices of a committee representing the Nonconformist congregations. Their coming was prepared for by a series of meetings for special prayer, held in different places of worship; and at these meetings was experienced a foretaste of the coming blessing. A feeling of earnest longing and lively expectation was awakened; and now that the mission is over, there remains a deep sense of thankfulness for the measure of blessing which has attended it. The results have not been indeed precisely of the kind anticipated; the altogether careless and non-church going classes have scarcely been affected at all; but a large number of professing Christians have been quickened, and many young people connected with the various congregations have been brought to decision.

The deep impression made by the simple, earnest, and powerful addresses of Mr. Fullerton was intensified by the effective singing of his colleague, Mr. Smith, aided by a large choir, whose faithful attendance night after night was specially noteworthy. On Sunday, May 15, and again on Saturday, May 21, special services for children were held in the afternoon, at the first of which the place of meeting, the Exchange Hall, was closely packed. On the afternoon of Sunday, May 22, there was a meeting for men only, in the Exchange Hall, which was again crowded; and another for women only, in the Baptist Chapel, which was conducted by Mrs. Fullerton, by whom a similar meeting was also conducted on the following Tuesday in the Congregational Chapel.

Peculiarly solemn and impressive was the scene at the close of the last meeting, on Thursday, the 26th; when, after a powerful address on Deut. xxx. 19, "Choose life," Mr. Fullerton requested all who had decided for Christ during the mission to stand up, and when, many persons, old and young, had at once responded to this invitation, he further asked all who were desirous of joining these to stand up also. When this second request was responded to, by persons rising here and there all over the hall, a feeling of devout thankfulness filled many hearts, and earnest prayer was offered alike for those who had publicly confessed Christ, and for those who had indicated their desire to be his.

The visit of Messrs. Fullerton and Smith to Stockton will not soon be forgotten: we rejoice to believe that many will thankfully remember it through all eternity.

On behalf of the committee,
John Bogue, } Secretaries.

Gospel Tent, Shropshire.—This work has now been carried on for twelve years. We pitch the tent in about eight or ten places during the season, and in these spiritually dark districts we have seen most blessed results. Many of our old helpers have passed away to their reward, consequently help is much needed. The treasurer is Mr. Radcliffe, Aston Grange, Newport, Salop.

Woldingham, Surrey.—The iron room which Mr. Fegan had undertaken to erect upon a site kindly given by the Lord of the Manor, Mr. Gilford, was opened on Whit Sunday. Nearly one hundred and fifty were crowded into the room. The Sunday-school, too, in the morning and afternoon, was commenced most promisingly. On Whit Monday services were held in the afternoon and evening attended by friends from various places. Many had to stand all the afternoon, but lost all thought of inconvenience and fatigue while listening to the searching, pointed exhortation which Lord Radstock gave upon the importance of soul-communion and life-communion with God. After tea, Gospel addresses were given, and closed a happy day spent in Christian intercourse amidst lovely rural surroundings. It has been arranged for similar meetings to be held (D.V.) on Jubilee day, afternoon and evening. The iron room is about a mile from Marden Park Station on L.B. & S.C.R.

Camelford, Cornwall.—There has been lately a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit in this neighbourhood. "Milk for babes" and meat for older Christians will be much needed. Earnest prayer and the help of friends are asked by Mrs. G. Male.

Haddington, N.B.—Mr. James Nelson, evangelist, of Glasgow, who during the past four months has ministered at the East U.P. Church, Haddington, has received a call from its members and adherents. The various agencies in the congregation are in a most active and healthy state, the regular attendance has much improved, while the membership is also steadily increasing. The present year is a remarkable one in the history of this church, being the centenary of the death of John Brown, author of the self-interpreting Bible, who ministered here for thirty-six years.

Dr. Munhall's work at Toledo, Ohio, U.S.A., has resulted in a great revival amongst the churches, and in a great ingathering of souls. Over a thousand young men assembled in the Memorial Hall on the second Sunday of the mission, and the address on the well-known words in Eccles. xi. 9, "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth,...but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment," was very impressive. At the close a great throng arose to their feet in evidence that they would accept Christ. In the evening again the hall was crowded, and Dr. Munhall preached a most powerful sermon from 2 Cor. v. 10, "For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ." Overflow meetings have been held at the Central Congregational Church, and the whole place has been sensibly affected. The Toledo Evening Bell, speaking of the "great revival," says:—"Dr. Munhall and his helpers, Professor Towner and wife, and Secretary Cobb, have by their labours made many hearts rejoice, and added jewels to their own crowns."

BELFAST SAILORS' HOME.—The report presented at the annual meeting held last week speaks in encouraging terms of the work of the year. There had been some falling off in the number of boarders at the Home, in consequence of the depression in the shipping trade; but the statistics prove that the sailors who remain in Belfast greatly appreciate the advantages of the institution. Reference was made by the Mayor, who presided, to the care taken of the effects of the men, as shown especially in the case of one who died there, the things belonging to him being then sent to his relatives. Sailors well understood and appreciated the value of such care. The recreation-room is well attended, and tends to induce men to remain in the Home during the evening. During the year fifty-one shipwrecked seamen were comfortably sheltered in the Home.

CHINESE IN NEW SOUTH WALES.—About sixteen miles from Glen Innes is situated a mining locality, where there are congregated about 2000 Chinese. Here, as in China, they worship a wooden god; they have their "joss house," and perform the same heathen ceremonies as they do in their own country. They show themselves eager to learn the white man's ways, manners, and customs; would they not as eagerly grasp the "precious truth" if it were only made known to them? What is sadly wanted here is a missionary who can speak Chinese, and tell them of the Saviour. I am sure a good work could be done amongst them, not only in the locality mentioned but in several others all over the Colony. I should feel grateful if your readers would send me tracts in Chinese for distribution amongst them. Richard Curtis.

Clairvaulx P.O., Glen Innes, New South Wales.

DEACON ABRAHAM'S ORPHANAGE.—An interesting letter concerning Deacon Abraham's work at Oroomiah, Persia, has been forwarded to us. The writer says he occasionally visits the orphanage, and is present at the lectures and meetings, especially when at the beginning of each month the pupils meet to pray for their spiritual and temporal needs. The orphans are taught to look to God as their Father, and it is often seen "how the voice of sixty or eighty children in prayer moves the mighty arm of God." Many young men, good Christians, are going forth from the orphanage, some as carpenters, teachers, and preachers, and this boys' and girls' orphanage is a great blessing in the district, and in the mountains of Koordistan. Mr. Shipley, of the Evangelistic Mission, Breachwood-green, Welwyn, Herts, who sends the letter, says the deacon has lost nearly the whole of his herd of cattle by a murrain, and this, added to the loss of the crop on his farm and vineyard, has been a serious trial.

WHO IS HAPPIER BECAUSE OF

"Who is happier because of me? Birds sing a the branches; flowers bloom; cool breezes fan my and the sky is deep and blue—all make me happie were made for that; but I am doing very little t following this beautiful example which nature s lavishly before us...I wish I knew somebody who n me. Not that I should have any one in trouble, so I might have the privilege of relieving him; but be I would like to do good in the world."—Miss Wil "Nineteen Beautiful Years."

Do any hearts beat faster,
Do any faces brighten,
To hear my footstep on the stair,
To meet me, greet me anywhere?
Am I so like my Master,
Dark shadows to enlighten?
Are any happier to-day,
Through words that they have heard me

Is mine a welcome visit,
Wherever I may linger?
Am I a sunbeam on the path?
A rainbow on the cloud of wrath?
Is life a boon, or is it
Touched with death's fatal finger,
A plague, a fever, spreading doom,
A shade, a shadow of the tomb?

Some are so sad and weary!
Some are so often falling!
Can I not speak a word of strength,
Till stumbling ones grow strong at length
Life is so dark and dreary!
So many tempters calling!
Can I not stand beside some heart,
Until its lonely fears depart?

Life were not worth the living,
If no one were the better
For having met thee on the way,
And known the sunshine of thy stay.
Give as thy God is giving;
To no one be a debtor!
So hearts shall faster beat for thee,
And faces beam thy light to see.

William Luff

DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.—In Toilers of Deep for this month, Mr. E. J. Mather tells in b outline the story of the origin of the Mission was privileged to commence. He asks fellows in prayer and thanksgiving on Sunday ne June 12, the fifth anniversary of the prayer-me ing out of which it grew.

HOME OF REST, BEWDLEY.—During the months that this Home of Rest for Young Wom was open last year twenty-three inmates were ceived, and it is known there was much spirit blessing to many, as well as benefit to health. T Home was closed during the winter months; b if (as was the case last year) sufficient for the p pose is sent to Mrs. C. E. Gowan, 20, Beauchan square, Leamington, it is intended to make a fr start, this time at Kenilworth, which has ma attractions.

Y.W.C.A., UPPER HOLLOWAY.—The four annual report of this Association, known as t Cambridge Institute, states that during the ye one hundred members have been enrolled, the to number of associates being now two hundred a forty-four. All the classes are well attended, a the number of visits nearly 9,000, and this eveni home shows how much it is valued. The boardi house has been a cause of much thanksgivi having been constantly attended. The membe themselves, in letters and other ways, often expre their deep gratitude for the help they have receive and many have been led to a complete trust Jesus as their Saviour.

MR. VON SCHLUEMBACH.—There has pr bably been no such plain Gospel preaching her says a San Francisco paper, since Mr. Moody's la visit, a number of years ago, as that by the Germa evangelist, Mr. Von Schluembach. He led t noon meetings at the Y.M.C.A. Hall for sever weeks. The meetings, which generally gather audience of forty or fifty persons, took on su new life under Mr. Von Schluembach's leadersh that at times as many as three hundred were pr sent. Every one who had the great privilege hearing him must have gone away from his mee ings a stronger Christian than before. The Spir of God was upon him. He expects to go Germany and work during the summer, and retu to San Francisco next winter.

The Book World.

PRAISE: Meditations in Psalm ciii. By Rev. ARK GUY PEARSE. 2s. 6d. T. Woolmer. This bject is one after Mr. Pearse's own heart, and in ese glowing chapters he seems to revel in the un- ding of it. Every page is lit up with the glow heaven's sunshine, and if the reader of the book es not join the band of praising ones, it will not because the book does not show good cause for it.

D. L. MOODY AT HOME. 2s. 6d. Morgan & ott. This volume, by an American journalist, ntains several chapters describing graphically the rroundings of Mr. Moody's Massachusetts home, d the great work he carries on there, in connec- on with his Girls' and Boys' Schools. The maining chapters give choice extracts from ldresses delivered by the evangelist and other ell-known speakers, at the Northfield Conferences.

THE STORY OF OUR LORD. By FRANCES OUNGHUSBAND. Longmans, Green & Co. 2s. 6d. his is a nicely-arranged life of Christ, compiled om the Gospels, and told in good English prose, as to form a consecutive narrative. It is pro- sely illustrated with quaint head and tail pieces, d copies of pictures from the old masters; but, owever valuable these latter may be as a work of t, we cannot think that many of them are calcu- ted to give correct ideas of the incidents they are ipposed to represent.

THE ATTRACTION OF THE CROSS, and other ermons. By Rev. A. FURST, D.D. R. D. Dickinson, 89, Farringdon-street. A series of houghtful discourses on Old and New Testament ubjects—e.g., "The Call of Abraham," "Elijah nder the Juniper Tree," "Faith," and "Rejoice Evermore." The writer's style is suggestive rather han expository or hortative. His teaching is piritual and evangelical, but on such a subject as he Prodigal's reconciliation with his father, we hould like to have seen the doctrines of grace nore emphatically brought out.

THE "VERILY VERILYS" OF CHRIST. By Rev. J. H. ROGERS, M.A., Chaplain of Holy Trinity, Pau. Nisbet & Co. 3s. 6d. In an age when man's words are infinitely multiplied, we ought to thank anyone who sets us meditating on the words of our Lord. Taking as a keyword the double "Amens" of Jesus, Mr. Rogers traces an interesting and by by no means forced connection between the discourses they introduce. Between the "Verily" addressed to inquiring Nicodemus and the "Verily" said after the resurrection to Simon Peter, no less than twenty-three intervene. On each of them the writer dwells in a thoroughly evangelical spirit, and with a style always incisive, sometimes very striking.

DRUM TAPS. By ELIZABETH REEVES SWIFT. 101, Queen Victoria-street. 1s. and 1s. 6d. A series of testimonies to the value of the Salvation Army's big drum, showing how many of England's "heathen" have been drawn by its noisy attraction to hear for the first time of God, and to find a Saviour. It is well written and attractively bound, but would be better without the miscellaneous quotations which preface the chapters. Surely the children of light should have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, nor quote from the works of an author who wrote solely for worldly fame, and whose writings have had little good influence on the minds of men.—CALLED OUT, and what Comes of it (6d.), consists of a number of articles by various officers of the Army, collected by Herbert H. Booth and Emma M. Booth, and graphically describes their work in all its branches.

GLEANINGS FROM THE BOOK OF RUTH: or, The Book of Ruth opened out by comparison with other parts of Scripture. By ROBERT BROWN, author of "Outlines of Prophecy," &c. S. W. Partridge & Co. This is an interesting and remarkable work. It differs from an allegory proper in being a true history allegorised after the manner of Gal. iv. 21—31. The Goel, that is, kinsman and redeemer, in Israel, was a type of Christ; and as kinsman and redeemer, Boaz comes before us in the sacred narrative. The reader keeping this in memory cannot fail to be struck with Mr. Brown's analogies. He does not expect all his readers to agree with him in every detail of interpretation. But what is of highest importance is, that here every believer will find established his "standing," or perfect acceptance in Christ, and the connection of that standing, when fully apprehended by faith, with that plenitude of the Spirit which is the power of an overcoming life and qualification for efficient service. While this book gives us sound doctrine, and generally in the words of inspiration, after the manner of inspiration it gives a doctrine to us also in that concrete form which most affects and impresses us.

SUNNY SUNDAYS. By S. M. HOLDWORTHY. J. Nisbet & Co. 1s. 6d. A praiseworthy attempt to make Sunday an interesting day to children above the class who attend Sunday-school, by afternoon gatherings backed up with "strawberries and cream." There is nothing striking about the teaching, and those who would imitate might improve upon the plan with advantage.

SERMONIC FANCY WORK. By JOHN PAUL RITCHIE. 2s. Whittingham & Co., 91, Gracechurch-street. A third edition of a work we have before reviewed. Wit and humour when sanctified have an important function to fulfil, and in this case they are employed to good purpose in pointing useful lessons of moral and social value. From our old nursery rhymes striking and sensible truths are cleverly elicited.

HARPS OF GLADNESS; or, HELPS TO CHRISTIAN JOY. By ALFRED C. THISELTON. Elliott Stock. 1s. A series of readings for every day of the month on passages of Scripture bearing on joy and praise. The author justly observes that many neglect to cultivate Christian gladness. They are like the elder brother in the parable who refused to go in to the festive joys of the father's house. Such will be stirred to thankfulness and hope by reading this bright and suggestive little volume, while those who already rejoice will find it a means of increasing their joy in the Lord. Eminently fitted to cause the tongue of the dumb to sing.

DANIEL'S MYSTERIES UNVEILED. By FRANCIS J. B. HOOPER, B.A., Rector of Upton Warren. Elliot Stock. We cannot look upon this work as helpful in the elucidation of prophetic truth. It collides with the received view touching Nebuchadnezzar's image, affirming that the Roman monarchy is not foreshadowed at all therein; that Antiochus Epiphanes is Antichrist; that the Roman kingdom is the stone cut out of the mountain, and that the kingdoms indicated in the vision were the Babylonian, Median, Persian, and Grecian. The author's treatment of the whole question of numbers is intricate, and altogether we feel that his book by most readers will be deemed obscure.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PRAYER-MEETINGS. By Rev. F. E. CLARK. Funk & Wagnalls. In advocating these important adjuncts to Christian work among the young, and in giving wise and timely counsels as to their theory and practice, the author confers signal benefit on all who have this special work at heart. All the more so, because his utterances are the outgrowth of experience and personal effort. Though devoted to one class of the community, the book contains much that is suggestive as to the conduct of prayer-meetings in general, which often suffer greatly from lack of wise management. The addition of a list of fifteen hundred topics suitable for use in meetings for the young is a very valuable feature of a volume which for its real utility ought to be in the hands of all who are concerned in the instruction and godly upbringing of youth.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN, AND DIVES AND LAZARUS. By ANGLICANUS. Elliot Stock. The first part of this work is almost entirely a compilation of Scripture texts bearing upon the coming of Christ to be the Saviour of the world, as predicted in the Old Testament, and upon the life of Christ as narrated in the Gospels. In his treatment of the parable the writer pleads that its true meaning is to be found in its application to the Pharisees and Jewish hierarchy in their rejection of Christ. Dives represents the former, Lazarus the latter. The teaching is, therefore, not in his view designed to throw light on a future state, but simply denotes the condition of the Jews apart from Christ. The conclusions arrived at do not strike us as being either helpful to a clear understanding of the terms of the parable, or true to its real import, they rather lessen its value by modifying its terms.

DAYS OF BLESSING IN INLAND CHINA. Morgan & Scott. 1s. 6d. This is the title of a book containing an account of Mr. Hudson Taylor's visit to the province of Shan-si last year. It includes full verbatim reports of the special meetings held at T'ai-yuen, most of the addresses having been revised by the speakers. An abridged account of these meetings was given in our December number last year. The testimonies of the native speakers at the Hung-t'ung, P'ing-yang, and Hsi-ts'un Conferences are also given, together with additional matter and later intelligence. An instructive account of the whole province, taken from Dr. Wells Williams' "Middle Kingdom," is appended; and the whole is made more interesting and intelligible by a valuable map of South Shan-si, and a plan of the villages and towns of the H'ung-tung and Ch'au-cheng circuits, under the care of Mr. Stanley P. Smith and Mr. D. E. Hoste.

RIGHTEOUSNESS AND LIFE. By J. G. HOARE, M.A. Seeley & Co. In brief and compact form the author gives us the substance of a series of Bible-readings on the first eight chapters of the Epistle to the Romans. His exposition will be found to be strictly evangelical, presenting the fundamental truths of the Gospel so clearly that it is impossible to miss their point, or avoid their application. Just the book to put into the hands of earnest inquirers.

STUDIES IN THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PETER. By Rev. J. J. CYNDDYLAN JONES, D.D. Vol. i. 5s. F. W. Bourne, 26, Paternoster-row. We have read this volume with special pleasure and profit. Its pages sparkle with light, and are rich in developments of truth adapted to strengthen and increase the spiritual life of its readers. Vigorous assaults are made with telling effect upon modern latitudinarianism; the supremacy of revelation is maintained, the cross of Christ gloried in, and the Gospel of the grace of God earnestly set forth.

OUR SOVEREIGN LADY. By the Author of English Hearts and English Hands, and by L. E. O'R. 1s. and 2s. Nisbet & Co. "Jubilee" Lives are numberless, and each has its distinctive features. Miss Marsh, who generously acknowledges her niece's co-authorship, writes her graphic sketch from the standpoint of a thankful Christian. In every chapter, though full of facts, some fine or strong touch connects the world below with the world above. The last chapter, entitled "The Coming Glory," describes that Jubilee day when the King of kings, surrounded by dazzling millions, shall visibly assume the crown of a blood-bought world.

PRECIOUS FRUIT; OR, THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT. By Rev. J. M'DONALD INGLIS, M.A. Messrs. Seeley & Co. The author presents us in this volume with a sound, thoughtful, and practical exegesis of Galatians v. 22, 23, a passage which, he justly remarks, "has received too little attention in the world of letters." Though adapted to all readers, the style of the writer is scholarly and chaste; his treatment of the subject is thorough, while an appendix is added containing a valuable and suggestive excursus on the Epistle to the Galatians, specially addressed to students. We cordially commend this work as calculated to help greatly all who seek conformity to the mind of Christ.

WHAT IS TRUTH? 6d. William Hunt & Co., 12, Paternoster-row. The Bishop of Liverpool in this spiritual sermon, preached on Easter Tuesday, shows that the only answer to Pilate's question, which is being repeated now on every hand, is to be found in "that old-fashioned thing, Scriptural Christianity."

GERM THOUGHTS ON BIBLE HOLINESS. By Rev. James Cuthbertson. 3d. T. Woolmer, 2, Castle-street, City-road. This little book, the subject-matter of which was given in an address at the Newcastle Convention, last year, contains a very careful exposition of the Scriptures, bearing on the practical and experimental aspects of holiness.

THE JEW IN RELATION TO THE EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co. The statement that Rev. John Wilkinson is the author of this pamphlet will give the key to its contents. It is both interesting and instructive to follow the line of reasoning by which it is demonstrated that Christ's order for the preaching of the Gospel is "to the Jew first," and that this has been neglected by the Church with disastrous results.

The Jubilee Portrait Plate, presented by the proprietors of The Illustrated London News, is a reproduction of Angeli's picture, and is likely to eclipse anything yet attempted by journalism. It shows the highest finish, and represents Her Majesty in State robes, standing near her throne. The plate accompanies a pictoral history of Her Majesty's reign, enclosed in a wrapper printed in gold and tints, the whole forming a marvellous shillingsworth of modern journalism.

Among the Churches.

 We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Sydney has left England for his diocese.

About 22,000 children and teachers took part in the annual Whitsuntide procession of the Sunday scholars of Manchester and Salford.

Canon Camidge, the newly-appointed Bishop of Bath hurst, is (says The Rock) not only one of the most devoted clergymen in the diocese of York, but is also sound in Evangelical truth, and has no sympathy with sacerdotalism.

The Bishop of Rochester, speaking at Sion College, said the colleges and schools contributed some £5000 annually towards mission work in South London, and at least ten men to its living working staff. The Bishop will this month open the last of the ten churches in South London.

Canon Wilberforce is not getting much rest in America. The National Baptist of Philadelphia says he "rested" by speaking once or twice a day, Sundays and week days alike. After a powerful address on the subject of Temperance to thousands of persons in Bethany Church, 800 signed the pledge.

Rev. Brooke Lambert, Vicar of Greenwich, is about to try the experiment of allowing laymen to lecture on secular subjects after the usual service on Sunday evenings. Mr. H. C. Burdett, formerly secretary to the Seamen's (Dreadnought) Hospital, is to deliver the first lecture on the subject of hospitals.

CONGREGATIONAL.

It is proposed to form a Congregational Lay Preachers' Association for Norfolk county.

Rev. A. J. Griffith, the pastor of the church at Sandown, Isle of Wight, is about to leave this country for Sydney, N.S.W.

The memorial stone of a new Sunday-school in Charles-street, Westminster Bridge-road, intended as a memorial of the late Lord Shaftesbury, was laid last week by Rev. Newman Hall. It will accommodate 350 children.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Special services, to extend over ten days, were commenced at Regent-square Church on Sunday evening.

During Mr. MacNaughton's ten years' pastorate at Nottingham, the membership has increased from thirty to two hundred and fifty.

The congregation at Hull (Rev. J. G. Train, pastor) occupies a front rank in missionary liberality, its latest collection for foreign missions amounting to £311.

Rev. R. Barbour, son of the late Mr. G. F. Barbour, of Bonskeid, succeeds his father as president of the Scottish Association for Aiding the China Mission of the English Presbyterian Church.

It is asserted that a proportionately greater number of students trained in the Free Church College at Aberdeen have gone abroad as missionaries than have gone from either Edinburgh or Glasgow.

Dr. Happer, the veteran Presbyterian missionary in China, is raising money in America for the college in Canton. He has received a subscription of 25,000 dollars for a professorship in the new college.

How much the little people can do! Mr. Stevenson, of Santal, says that eleven orphans are supported in Santal by the various schools throughout Scotland; and Mr. Macdonald, of Caffraria, thanks the children for the gift of a new church.

BAPTIST.

Mr. J. P. Briscoe, of London, has been conducting special services in South-lane Chapel, Downton, Wilts.

The Sword and Trowel for June contains a portrait of Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, and an article by the editor, "My Brother: a Tribute of Love," &c.

In the June number of The Baptist Magazine there is an interesting sketch, with life-like portrait, of Rev. A. G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle.

Mr. Stanley has, it appears, obtained the use of the steamer Peace, belonging to the Baptist Mission at Stanley Pool, notwithstanding the instructions of the home committee.

A country pastor's wife, in a letter to The Baptist concerning Rev. Mr. Meyer's suggestion of a Prayer Union amongst Baptist ministers, expresses the hope that "one of our sisters will take up the formation of a Prayer Union for ministers' wives."

At the annual meeting of the Essex Association, held at Braintree, Rev. J. Bradford, of Leytonstone, delivered an address on "The need of enterprise in our methods of work." A resolution was passed in favour of the Sunday closing of public-houses.

Dr. Clifford, moved by the invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury to the head masters of the public schools to an "all-day" meeting for the cultivation of the devout life, suggests similar gatherings of ministers in different localities for prayer and consultation.

The Baptist suggests that while the Methodists are entering upon a mission in the metropolis, there is a large field for Baptist effort in the counties of Surrey and Middlesex, where are to be found some of the most spiritually destitute spots in England. Ministers should arrange an organised campaign, and hold services on the "village greens" while the evenings are light.

SALVATION ARMY.

At Longton, in the Potteries Division recently, about thirty recruits joined the Army ranks.

Staff-Captain Perry, who is now in charge of Denmark, has had a very successful opening in Copenhagen.

The Marshal and Mrs. Ballington Booth have had most successful meetings in Boston, Washington, and Chicago.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The subject of pastoral work is agitating American Friends. How to have efficient and voluntary service is being discussed. There are several pastors supported by willing Friends, while the practice is questioned by others.

Although denuded of many supporters who were at other meetings, the Friends' Temperance Union's annual meeting (May 25) was a real success. Friends as a body are in hearty sympathy with the work. Mr. William Noble was a speaker on the occasion. The meeting too on social purity was enthusiastic. Mrs. Ormiston Chant was the able speaker.

METHODIST.

A series of social and religious gatherings were held at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Trinity-street, Borough, on Whit Monday.

Services held for some time past in a cottage at Great Bentley (Ainger's-green) have been so blessed that a mission chapel is now being built.

Rev. Thomas Wakefield, after twenty-six years' labour in Eastern Africa, has been obliged to return to England on account of the state of his health.

At the annual meeting of the Pimlico Juvenile Missionary Society it was stated that the amount collected during the year was £52 6d., being an increase of nearly £14.

A special revival mission was commenced on Sunday in the George's-street Chapel, Dublin, by Rev. Charles Inwood, assisted by Rev. William Maguire, the superintendent.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse preached the Sunday-school anniversary sermon in Elm-street Church, Toronto, and on the following evening gave a Bible reading in the same place.

At an early morning lovefeast on Whit Sunday morning in the large Centenary Chapel, Dewsbury, hundreds were present from various parts of the circuit, and sixty-six testimonies were given in one hour.

Mr. W. Thorpe, of Nottingham, has concluded a ten days' mission at Staincross, Barnsley. The service for men only was densely crowded, and there were tokens of God's saving power during the whole of the mission.

The Primitive Methodist Conference opened at Scarborough on Wednesday. In addition to Baptist and Congregational churches, seven pulpits in Wesleyan chapels will be supplied by Primitive Methodist brethren on Sunday.

Revival mission services, extending over twelve days, conducted by Mr. B. Cawood, district evangelist, have been concluded at West Boldon, near Sunderland. The chapel was filled night after night, and much blessing was realised.

Rev. Dr. Meredith has been called to succeed the late Henry Ward Beecher. He comes of an Irish Methodist family, which contributed more than one honoured name to the Methodist ministry in Ireland and in America. Dr. Meredith began his ministry in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

It is proposed to erect a permanent building on a site in Brookfield-road, Homerton, where for the past eleven years the Primitive Methodists have conducted a Sabbath-school and various other religious services. There are forty persons in church fellowship, and about 150 children in the school. The iron building in which these gatherings have been held has now been condemned by the Board of Trade. Messrs. T. A. Denny and Josiah Goodman have each promised £100 towards the required amount, £1000.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Dr. M'Ferrin, the Nestor of Tennessee Methodism, and one of the most distinguished representatives of the Methodist Church in America.—Rev. Thomas Spencer Baynes, Professor of Logic in the University of St. Andrew's.—Rev. T. W. Bray, Presbyterian minister, formerly of St. Paul's, Aberdeen. — Rev. Maurice J. Evans, a well-known translator of theological works from the German.—Mr. John Aitken, the husband of Carlyle's favourite sister.—Rev. J. R. Conor, incumbent of St. Simon's Church, Liverpool.—Rev. M. W. Currie, Rector of Hingham, in the diocese of Norwich.— Captain John Burn, one of the deacons of the Congregational Church at Sandown.—Mr. H. Clarke, overseer of an Ipswich paper, who for several years officiated as minister of the Baptist congregation at Waldringfield. —Rev. Prebendary Dainty, Vicar of King's Bromley.— Rev. John Wilson, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Knightsbridge.—Mrs. E. Jackson, an active member and class leader for more than half a century of the Methodist church at Golden-hill, Leyland.—At Auburn, Canada, Rev. John Turner, formerly Wesleyan minister at Birmingham.—Rev. John Mould, a well-known minister in the Wigan Primitive Methodist circuit.—Mr. William Jenkinson, a guardian representative of the Methodist New Connexion, at Southport.—Rev. J. Martin Strongman, of East St. Kilda, Melbourne. — Mr. W. H. Councell, of Clevedon, a model class leader and faithful local preacher.—Mr. T. J. Catting, of Selby, an ardent Methodist. — Mr. Joseph Oldknow, a venerable and much respected Wesleyan Methodist, Darley Abbey, Derby.—Rev. J. Tomlinson, formerly well known as a Methodist minister.—Mr. John Trant, of Dovea, Thurles, Ireland.—Rev. Robert Kerr, of Rathmines, Ireland, a minister of the Primitive Wesleyan Church for more than forty years.

The London Medical Record states that at Bordea
owing to wine drinking, there are more deaths f

A great international gathering against the abuse

MRS. MEREDITH'S WORK.

Jubilee Fund.

THIS year of national thanksgiving it is desired to form a in aid of the great and successful Institutions established by rs. Meredith.

The fact that they were founded by women, for the relief of women d children, suffering from the worst moral and physical evils of life, is suitable appeal on the occasion of celebrating the QUEEN'S JUBILEE, To remove the difficulties of these workers would be a graceful mode of arking this year's charities.

The statistics of the Prison Mission work for the past year give the eat number of 831 women employed; 16,328 days' work were given em. Every one was paid daily wages, and had two meals provided on e premises. These women washed for the public, at a moderate charge, 0,664 articles; and for the sick poor gratis, 51,141 garments and dding; 3485 women had breakfast at the Prison Gate Mission, Mercy ouse, 48, Grosvenor-road; 1481 of them were employed at sewing (felt ippers, church kneelers, hassocks, &c., &c.).

All the Prisons of Great Britain, the Colonies, America, and many reign countries, are communicated with by the Prison Mission, so that e number of women applying for help multiplies continually. 12,672 ospel Letters reached the hands of prisoners at home and abroad last ear, and encouraged many to seek Divine help for their salvation. This escue Work appeals for itself, and a large response is earnestly licited, that the labours which so largely benefit society may be pursued ith increased effect.

Then, too, the work of Rescuing Children needs more accommodation than the Princess Mary Village Homes, at Addlestone, provide. £2000 is wanted to build Dormitories and Wards at the Clapham-road premises for receiving girls who, on account of ill-health, or other causes, cannot be sent to the Cottages. Next, the sum of £600 is required to complete the building of the Children's Chapel at the Homes.

The Women's Missionary Institute, on the Clapham-road, which includes the Medical Mission for Women and Children, urgently needs additional bedrooms for Students and Sisters, and for patients who cannot be treated in their own homes. £5000 is required for the necessary buildings. Last year 3070 patients were relieved at the Dispensary, where a meeting for Prayer and Gospel Addresses is held before medical advice is given; and one hundred and eighty-three mothers were attended by a lady doctor and her students, for whom is thus formed a Training School for Women's Medical Missions to Heathen Women. In the Schools of the Princess Mary Village Homes ladies find useful practice in teaching; and in these two Institutions they are prepared for Mission Work at Home and Abroad.

Contributions for the maintenance of The Prison Mission, Missionary Institute, and Medical Missions, and to the Jubilee Fund, are payable to Mrs. Meredith, 143, Clapham-road, S.W., crossed to Messrs. Barclay and Bevan.

Money for the Princess Mary Village Homes is payable to Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson, Bart., M.P., crossed to the Union Bank, Charing-cross, or to Mrs. Meredith, as above.

"Mercies countless as the Sands."

CHRISTIAN WOMEN, can any one of you reckon up the mercies—national, social, and personal—of which she has been the recipient during the reign of

Our Gracious Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria?

Do not countless mercies call for repeated and ungrudging thank-offerings to Him

"Who giveth all,"

and ought not the blessing of giving, which is greater than that of receiving (Acts xx. 35), to be more highly valued than it has ever yet been?

Let the Royal Jubilee present itself as an opportunity for the expression of your thankfulness, and "send portions" to the spiritually needy.

The Society for Promoting Female Education in the East had been established just three years when Her Majesty ascended the throne, and it was then the only one in Europe formed for the purpose of taking the Gospel into the seclusion of Eastern homes, and of telling "The old, old Story" to the women and girls of Asia and Africa. It is the oldest Zenana Society in existence.

Out of gratitude, then, to the King of Kings, who has for fifty years preserved the Sceptre of this Realm in the hand of a Woman, and out of pity to the millions of heathen women who are still sitting in darkness, Christian Women, her subjects, are invited to send their Thank-offerings to this Society, which the Lord has so long owned and blessed.

And will not Christian Men also join in these gifts? Have they no Mercies to remember connected with their Queen, their Mothers, their Sisters, their Wives, and their Daughters?

Jubilee Thank-offerings will be gratefully received by Miss E. Rutt, Lower Clapton, E.; Miss L. Hope, 7, Ovington-gardens, Brompton, S.W.; Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall-Bridge-road, S.W; and by Miss Tait, 68, Wilberforce-road, N.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS

FARNINGHAM AND SWANLEY (Commenced 1863).

President:—THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

THE COTTAGE HOMES AT FARNINGHAM

Are for 300 Little Boys, homeless or in danger of falling into crime. They are clothed, fed, educated, and taught a trade, and then provided with outfit and placed in situations, while they are looked after as "Old Boys."

THE ORPHAN HOMES AT SWANLEY

Are for 200 Orphan or Fatherless Boys, who are wholly maintained and educated, and receive technical instruction in lithography, telegraphy, photography, chemistry, and other subjects, to fit them for a working life.

BASIS:—"The Institution is Scriptural, but Unsectarian; and the boys are educated in the fear of God and in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures."

FUNDS are URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 500 Boys now in the Homes. Over 1000 have already been sent out into the world.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Congregational Collections, and Bequests are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, Office of The Christian; or the Secretary,

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

Tracts for the West Indies.—Mr. H. G. Allder, Trinity Mission House, Georgetown, Demerara, British Guiana, West Indies, would be glad of a supply of English, Chinese, and Coolie tracts. He says:—"There is a large field here; there are thousands who never heard of the Saviour, and I want to do all I can to bring some of these poor souls to Jesus. I more especially need tracts in the Chinese and Coolie languages."

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.—At the annual meeting of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society, held last week, it was stated that the work of itinerant evangelisation has been steadily carried on. Among the congregations already organised there has been an increasing desire to spread the Gospel beyond their own limits. Interesting details were given of the progress of the work, special reference being made to the Mission at Puerto del Torre, near Malaga, of which the British chaplain speaks in the highest terms.

PADDINGTON-GREEN CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL—A gratifying feature of the year's work has been the steady support given by the working classes, whose offerings have amounted to £133. There are twenty-seven beds in the hospital, and the total number of in-patients during the year was 209, while there were more than ten thousand new out-patients, the total attendances numbering nearly thirty-two thousand. Two "In Memoriam" cots were founded last year. Attention is drawn in the report to the fact that, the existing accommodation for out-patients being very insufficient, new rooms, involving an expenditure of upwards of £2000, are shortly to be built. The secretary is Mr. D. H. Pearce.

ST. HELENA SAILORS' REST.—This rest, opened in October, 1883, has since then been the means of much good among the bluejackets of the Cape squadron and the soldiers of the garrison. The weekly Bible-class, conducted by Miss Owen, assisted by a staff-sergeant of the garrison, is well attended. Under the management of Mr. Lewis, the Rest is self-supporting, and this is a great deal to have done in a place where there is so much to contend against. About £40 are now needed to replace, with teak, a flooring which has been attacked by white ants, and for other repairs to the building, &c. Miss Weston is deeply interested in the work. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Arthur N. St. Quintin, Ordnance Department, Royal Arsenal, Woolwich.

BRIGHTON AND HOVE TOWN MISSION.—The thirty-seventh annual report states that last year was one of great and special blessing in every part of the town in which the missionaries are labouring. Many volunteer helpers have come forward, and one missionary reports that by "their aid the whole of his district is visited each week." The prayer-meetings held in the various mission halls have been specially blessed, and the work among the children is carried on with great success. At one school there is an average attendance of 220. More than six hundred persons have been induced to sign the pledge. The work in the common lodging-houses has also been productive of much good. The missionaries, it is said, are welcomed everywhere. Capt. the Hon. R. Bingham, 8, Denmark-terrace, is the superintendent.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE

AND THE

Twenty-First Year of 'Dr. Barnardo's Homes.'

THE Trustees and Committee of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" have decided to celebrate the 50th Anniversary of our beloved Sovereign's accession to the throne of this realm, and the Majority, or 21st Year of life, of the "Homes" themselves, by an endeavour to enlarge the scope of these comprehensive and national Institutions, thereby placing them upon a still wider and more solid basis.

They are convinced that no object can well be conceived more in harmony with the tender and womanly sympathy ever displayed by Her Most Gracious Majesty towards the suffering and the sorrowful, or more likely to be in accordance with Her own wishes, were she free to express them, than a project to promote the extension and increased usefulness of Institutions like these, whose chief work it is to rescue friendless and orphan children from the perils of the streets, and to afford to them not only education, useful training, and Christian care, but also all that is involved in the endearing names of "Home" and "Friend."

Here then, is the Scheme proposed for the hearty co-operation of all loyal subjects of Queen Victoria who love and pity helpless little children, and who may be willing, at one and the same time, to raise in Her honour and on their behalf an Enduring Memorial, the benefits of which shall be lastingly recorded in the history of multitudes of young lives.

1. To establish in a central position a Shelter for Homeless Street Children, to be called the Jubilee Shelter, which shall be always open, night and day, to afford immediate and temporary succour to any little waif or stray who seeks admission. This Shelter would soon become an important feeder of the Parent Homes—a kind of net thrown out into the wide sea of London child-life, into which many of those "ready to perish" would be gathered.

2. To develop, under skilled and competent control, the 5,400 acres of land already acquired in Manitoba (N.W.T. of Canada), by the establishment thereon of an Industrial Farm for the employment of the older and rougher lads rescued from the streets and low lodging-houses of our great cities and towns, and trained in the Labour House for Destitute Youths in East London. The whole settlement in Manitoba, some seven miles square, and charmingly situated near Birtle, on the Shell River, is to be called, in honour of the Queen, Victoria Regina.

3. To rebuild the Infirmary, for Sick Children of the absolutely Destitute and Homeless class, already in operation in Stepney, but which, owing to its small size and grave structural defects, is unfitted for its purpose, and which has therefore long since been condemned. The new building, which will have all modern appliances needful for the medical and surgical treatment of 65 little patients, being most urgently required, has already been begun, and will be called Her Majesty's Hospital for Sick Children.

4. To erect in our Village Home for Orphan and Friendless Girls at Ilford, Essex, a Memorial Cottage, to shelter in perpetuity twenty little rescued "waifs," who will therein find a happy home. A freehold site stands ready amid the fifty other buildings which constitute the Village; and there it is hoped may soon arise the new Memorial Cottage, to be called simply The Queen's Villa.

5. To redeem and set free from Rent, Mortgages, and all other Charges, several of the Parent Homes (already in occupation) upon which rents and interest of mortgage have to be paid, thereby relieving the Annual Income of a heavy and continuous drain.

To accomplish the whole of this Scheme, the Committee and Trustees of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" propose to raise Jubilee Fund of £50,000, in two several sums of £25,000, one of which shall be collected from among the existing onors, and the other from the General Public.

As regards the first of these amounts, it is estimated that if the very large number of Donors already on the books of the stitutions are willing each to contribute The Small Sum of Ten Shillings, the £25,000 required would be at once supplied.

But the Committee and Trustees of Dr. Barnardo's Homes now earnestly appeal to Christian people generally for nations towards this Jubilee Fund, in the hope that they will respond in sufficiently large numbers to secure the collection the other moiety of £25,000.

If each reader of this advertisement will, within one week of observing this notice, send to the office of the Institution a bilee Gift of not less than Ten Shillings, the sum required from the General Public (£25,000), will in all probability ve been received before the Twenty-first of June, the day fixed by Her Most Gracious Majesty for the celebration the 50th Anniversary of Her Reign.

JUBILEE GIFTS of any amount in response may be sent direct to the Offices, 18—26, Stepney Causeway, E.; to e Bankers (London and South Western Bank, Bow Branch, E.; and Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler & Co., 50, rnhill, E.C.); or to any of the following:—

SAMUEL GURNEY SHEPPARD, Chairman.

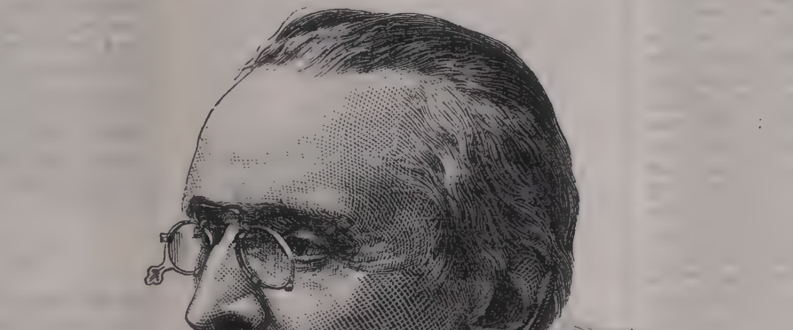
PROF. JULES DE LAUNAY, PH.D.



(From Photograph by Mr. Henry Pickering, Manchester.)

THE life of this aged servant of God is one well worthy of study, for it is full of religious facts, with God's hand leading and directing everywhere. Professor JULES DE LAUNAY comes of a Norman family. He is related on the paternal side to the last commander of the Bastille, and on the maternal to a long list of savants, magistrates, and men of letters. He was sent to school at an early age, and graduated at the university of Angers, completing his regular college course at LaFerté-Macé and Mayenne. There he obtained first honours, and was sent back to Paris, where he entered the far-famed theological seminary of St. Sulpice.

After a course of three years at this college, Mr. De Launay was sent to Rome to be made perfect in all branches of his theological studies, and to be prepared for entering the Romish Priesthood. With this object his uncle, the Baron des Acres de Valpinçon, took charge of him and his education, intending to provide liberally for him when he became a priest. In leaving the Church of Rome, therefore, our friend had to renounce all his family honours and earthly prospects.

In Rome he was put to study at the feet of the sacred College of Cardinals. Père Rozaven, Vicar-General of the Jesuits, his spiritual adviser, finding in him a gift for acquiring a knowledge of languages, recommended him to the care of Cardinal Mezzofanti, the most reputed linguist of his day. The Cardinal took especial care of his studies, instructing him how to acquire and become master of the most difficult languages in the shortest time; and it is to Cardinal Mezzofanti that Monsieur De Launay is indebted for his extensive knowledge and labours on the Chinese origin of our numerical and alphabetical signs—a work which he has for publication. From this of Dactylology, or the language-by-finger speech used in the days of Cadmus, contemporary with Moses. At this time the Roman Catholic Board of Foreign Missions cherished the thought of sending Monsieur De Launay out as a missionary to Cochin-China; but, by the advice of Father Rozaven, he was joined to the Company of Jesus, and was sent to Fribourg. Here, while preparing to enter as a novice, an attack of typhoid fever brought him to the verge of death. With eternity opened before him, and all his past life revealed in its true character, instead of seeing himself a great man, with a wonderful future open before him, he found he was "poor and blind and naked"; all his self-righteous-of Him who searches men's hearts, and in his feverish imagination he saw the fires of purgatory ready to swallow him. He felt he had everything but the one thing needful—a true and pure knowledge of the living God. He had not yet found out that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses us from all sin. He saw the Lord but darkly; like Paul of old, he was blinded. He was groping in the dark, with no man to point him to the truth as it is in Jesus. In his terror and anguish of soul he sent for a priest, one of his own associates when at college, to bring him the Viaticum, or last communion. The priest, whilst lifting up the sacred host, exclaimed in a loud voice in Latin, "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." "Come unto Me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." These words were a light in the darkness to his agonising soul, but the clear, bright sun of simple trust was not yet apparent. The Lord has his own ways of leading his children.

After recovering from his three months' sickness, he crossed the Simplon to return to Rome and his studies, hoping much from the milder climate of Italy. Reading, writing, studying were all forbidden by the doctors, but an active mind like his could not repose altogether. He therefore made it a point to attend the lectures given at the "Sapienza," on the antiquities of Rome, and those given in the Colegio Romano by Padre Marchi, on the Roman cemeteries. With Padre Marchi and some students he made frequent peregrinations among the catacombs; and it was here, amidst the sombre repose of the first Christians and early martyrs, that his seeking spirit found the pearl of great price. As the light in full radiance flashed in upon his darkened soul, he exclaimed, part in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." Christ, the Son of the living God, became to him the one and only Mediator between God and man.

Among these tombs of the sainted martyrs his troubled spirit found peace, joy, light, and repose, in beholding, reading, and sketching the pictorial records and inscriptions upon the tombs of the martyrs. Here he learnt how far Popery had wandered away from the truth and teachings of Christ. In the first three centuries of bloody persecution he found nowhere a prayer for the dead, nor to the dead—nowhere a cross, but the signs and symbols of the resurrection—nowhere among these miles and miles of graves a prayer to Mary; she is not even named. Here there was no grovelling devotion to sculptured images of wood and stone; neither pope, cardinal, nor prelate, figured as head of the church.

In these daily subterranean excursions he formed the acquaintance of his excellency Monseigneur Rézé, first bishop of Detroit, Michigan. Accompanied every day by this prelate, with their lamps tied to their ankles, they both went in search of truth. Bishop Rézé had been summoned to Rome to answer charges of heresy, preferred against him by the Holy Propaganda College, and during his stay in Rome was confined in the convent of St. Lorenzo. In this convent Professor De Launay visited him many times, and received much truth from his lips. Here it was that this prelate said, "Fly Rome, my brother; you want too much light on the Scriptures to please Rome. Come with me to America and you shall be my grand-vicaire, and the president of my college in Detroit." But all at once this friend disappeared, and to this day the fate of Bishop Rézé remains a mystery. Professor De Launay says of him: "We visited the Holy Inquisition in company. Bishop Rézé was disgusted and horrified as well as myself with what he saw in those infernal regions. I have often thought the Bishop was murdered there."

One day, he and his two Professors of Theology and Languages, Padre Marchi and Cardinal Mezzofanti, went down into the catacombs together. Monsieur De Launay remarked that the religion of the early Christians and martyrs in the catacombs was what the New Testament taught, but not the Church of Rome, and added, "I have no more faith in our church, I cannot conscientiously remain a Roman Catholic." Then replied these two good men, "Dear brother, what you have said here in the silence of the catacombs to us will not be repeated; but do not repeat what you have said to us now to anyone else when you go above in the city, or you will disappear, and no one will know what has become of you; your death will be a mystery to your friends." Monsieur De Launay then determined to leave Rome, and go to America.

This purpose he carried out, though on landing at New York he was without friends, almost without means, and scarcely able to make himself understood in English. Happily he crossed the path of Bishop Horatio Potter, who very kindly rendered him help, and remained his firm friend as long as he lived. Through his influence employment was obtained in tuition, till M. De Launay was elected Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages in the State College of Louisiana. Here he married his first wife, Miss Goodale. Very soon he felt he could do more good preaching the Gospel than by remaining in a college. Giving up his position in that university he went about received and appreciated everywhere, especially in the colleges he visited, such as Yale, Princeton, Dartmouth, Amherst, &c., where he gave lectures on the Roman Catacombs and Biblical Archæology. He went from church to church preaching the truths to which the catacombs and the martyred lives of the early Christians bore witness; illustrating them by diagrams sketched by himself during his residence in the Eternal City.

He has been the humble instrument, in the hands of God, of bringing thousands into a clearer light in the Scriptures, of deepening their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and of making many infidels believers in the Crucified One. From Mobile to Halifax, from Topeka to Savanna, he preached the Gospel freely, depending on his fellow Christians for support.

After the death of his first wife, he made a tour through the churches in Canada. While there, he married his second wife, and shortly after was appointed missionary to Paris, his native city. God has blessed his work there. With his wife he has laboured in this noble self-sacrificing work for eight years. They have been so successful that strangers of all denominations, in coming to visit the Mission and seeing its workings, have exclaimed, "Evidently the hand of God is here."

The Professor is now in England, and is giving lectures on the Roman Catacombs and early Christianity, in aid of his work in Paris. Communications for him may be addressed to the care of our publishers.

MISS SHARMAN'S ORPHAN HOME.—We much regret to hear that Miss Sharman has not yet recovered from her serious illness. Consequently the annual report will not be issued till the autumn. There are now 320 orphans in the Home, and the prayers of our readers are asked that the work may not suffer on account of this trouble.

INVALIDS' HOME, MENTONE.—Some of our readers may remember, in one of the most lovely spots of Mentone, a Home for invalid ladies. It has been a peaceful and happy resting-place for many since it was founded twelve years ago by Mrs. Dudgeon. In the end of last October, when on the point of leaving England for Mentone, the Master's call was heard, and a few days' illness closed a bright and useful life on earth. One of Mrs. Dudgeon's parting wishes to her daughter was that she would care for the Home, and with this care has now come a heavy and unexpected charge. Repairs, needed in consequence of the recent earthquake, to the amount of £120, will be necessary before the Home can receive next winter's invalids. It is hoped that many friends will help in restoring a house which has been so blessed, and is so much needed for weary and over-

A DEBT OF HONOUR.

The New Haven Register publishes a remarkable story without giving the names of the parties to whom it relates. The substance of it is as follows:—

At the beginning of the Civil War a wealthy Southern grocer, who had recently taken his young book-keeper into partnership, fearing that his property would be confiscated, decided to go North. He told the book-keeper to use the property, valued at about $400,000, as he thought best, and that he would rely upon the book-keeper's honour for a settlement at some future time. The merchant then came North and settled in New Haven. Six years ago, wondering what had become of his estate in the South, the merchant placed the matter in the hands of Judge Morris, with instructions to investigate and collect if there was anything to collect. After some correspondence with the book-keeper at the South, the latter forwarded an acknowledgment of the claim, and an inventory showing his indebtedness to his former employer to be $648,000, and expressing his desire to return the property, but requested time to perfect his arrangements. He began remitting several years ago, and last week forwarded the last payment, including the interest. Judge Morris declines to give the details further than that his client is listed as a millionaire, and that the Southern gentleman is now a wealthy banker.

The "grocer" in this case put his property into the hands of the "book-keeper," and simply trusted to his honour in respect to a future settlement. He had no means of enforcing the claim. A sense of honour, however, led the book-keeper to refund the whole amount. That man may be set down as an honest man in the highest and best sense. An honest man is said to be "the noblest work of God."—New York Independent.

OUR BLUEJACKETS.

By the kindness of the Duke of Westminster, a very large company assembled at Grosvenor House, on Wednesday, June 1, to hear from Miss Weston an account of the progress of her work. The Duke, who was announced to preside, but was unavoidably prevented, wrote a letter warmly approving of the work, and promising a donation of £100.

The meeting was presided over by Canon Fleming, and Miss Weston gave an account which was listened to with great interest. She stated that she had purchased and paid for the three public-houses, buying up the licences as well. At the present moment she needed money to build a house for God on their site. She told many touching anecdotes, especially one of a seaman dying at the Royal Naval Hospital, from alcoholic consumption, who, between his gasps, said, "Have you got the 'Dock Gates Inn'?" "No," she replied; "but I hope soon to do so." "You will," he whispered, grasping her arm with his skeleton hand. "I'm praying to God, night and day on my bed, to give you that place; there I learned to love the drink that has brought me here, and you'll get it and build a house to save bluejackets." Miss Weston stated that she needed £6000 for building, and £2000 to enable her to commence at once.

The Chaplain of the Fleet, and Mr. John Taylor, one of the trustees, followed with earnest commendation of the work and workers, and the meeting was closed. The collection realised £250.

THE EAST END LIGHTHOUSE.—This beneficent institution has been earnestly at work during the past year, as in the preceding twelve of its existence. The Sunday services, especially those for children, when the large room in which they are held is frequently packed, have been well attended. The attendance at the Sunday-school has also largely increased. Mothers' meetings, benevolent fund, and evening classes minister to the wants, spiritual and temporal, of those in the neighbourhood of this Old Ford Mission at Tredegar-road, Bow. Mr. C. G. JUBILEE HYMN.

By NEWMAN HALL, LL.B.

God bless the Queen of England! so noble, good and great;
Our senators and judges, and those who guide the state;
Breathe over all their councils, wisdom and patriot health,
Thy faith and fear directing our regal Commonwealth.

God bless our English people! brave, loyal, trusty folk,
Free from all chain of bondage, scorning each sinful yoke;
May rich and poor together labour and love as one,
A happy, royal priesthood, and so thy will be done.

God bless our dear old England! with cliffs so bold and white,
Round which the angry billows so vainly roar and fight:
God bless our sons and daughters, and make them pure and brave;
By righteousness, the nation, O righteous Father! save.

God bless our beauteous England; this cultured garden fair;
With orchard, meadow, corn-field, lovely beyond compare:
Adorn her with the beauties of holiness and grace,
These fruits and flowers reflecting, O Lord, thy smiling face.

God bless our grand old England! with proud historic name;
And may she yet outrival her thousand years of fame:
But chiefly—make her steadfast in godliness and truth,
Wisdom of age uniting with all the zeal of youth.

God bless the wealth of England! her industry and trade;
And ne'er by vile ambition may she her power degrade;
First in the roll of nations let her by justice be;
Rich in good works and pleasing, O God of Peace, to Thee.

God bless our home of freedom; her oldest, dearest shrine;
Sacred by blood of martyrs guarding the "Right Divine:"
Still may the flag of England o'er freemen only wave;
But chief, from sin's dominion thy chartered people save.

God bless our land of churches! where spire and tower are seen
Thick foresting the cities, and gladdening the green:
Make all their pastors faithful, bless every house of prayer;
When Christians meet for worship be with them everywhere.

Old England! Heaven defend her! God bless our native land;
Beside her in all danger do Thou her Guardian stand.
God bless our dear old England! and may she ever be Exalted 'midst the nations, by faith, O Lord, in Thee! Amen.

THESE FIFTY YEARS.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST, F.G.S.

The Jubilee in Israel began on the evening of the Day of Atonement. That day brought the past to remembrance; the Jubilee was more expressly a preparation for the future. The trumpets, which sounded joyfully on that holy night, told the weary labourer that the morrow brought a year of rest from the tilling of the earth; introduced (as scholars, such as Carpzov and Ewald, conceive) a period for more systematic teaching of the nation; retrieved for families who had fallen into poverty their patrimonial land; and thus ushered in, through instruction, rest, and the renewal of family feeling, a greater future for God's people.

The half century since our beloved Sovereign came to the throne will doubtless be commemorated by numerous and manifold references to what must hereafter be gratefully remembered as the Victorian era. I would, on the other hand, join those who will contemplate the national celebration with a view to the duties of the future, and would offer a very few thoughts which may indicate the lessons of encouragement and monition which the fifty years we are closing teach, and wherewith we may enter on the momentous years which are to come.

In The Fortnightly Review for this month, among other Jubilee papers, the progress of science during the Queen's reign occupies a prominent place. But certainly, during the later years of that reign, science has moved in a direction which was not intended by some of its foremost expounders. Their goal was the constant sequence of natural law without the action of the supernatural. The truth is now becoming incontestible of a magnificent order and system in nature, and a fundamental plan of living structures, which reveal an all-wise Creator. Our planet dwelling-place is becoming dearer to us, because its construction is increasingly seen to be the work of God. Its early formations and proportions of land and water; its ocean beds, and boundaries, and currents; its distributions of mountain ranges, continents, islands, deserts, and prairies—all (through the scientific researches of the Victorian era) are now disclosing, not the accidents of blind forces, but an adjustment for the human period, the majestic benevolence of which it is not in the power of human words to represent.

And that may be affirmed of the Word of God which is true of his works. I remember well, as a boy, the abounding infidelity at the beginning of the Queen's reign. As that reign proceeded, literary scepticism was distressingly strengthened by such writers as Strauss, Colenso, and Renan. But now we see these names dropping out of the world's thought. The vast learning and world-wide researches of the Victorian period, have, instead of discrediting, furnished overwhelming proofs of the historical position, literary reliableness, and authenticity of the Books of the Bible. Unscathing criticism has been overruled to confound its own advocates, and technical investigations have given a voice to ancient lands in verification of what the Scripture affirms. In the interpretation of the blessed Book there may be yet much to learn; but, as the organ of the Divine Spirit, the Bible never stood on such an unassailable foundation as at this Jubilee, when we enter on a new era.

Moreover, it has been during the last half century that the prophecy of the day of Pentecost has been fulfilled. The gift of divers tongues was a foreshadowing that the Gospel would be preached unto all nations; and the words of the British and Foreign Bible Society on this year of our Jubilee are—"There no longer exists a large language without the Bible." Amazing and unparalleled fact! Surely the blessed angels have heard the sound with acclamations of thanksgiving. Thus in nearly three hundred tongues the British and American Societies have, and mainly since the accession of Her Majesty, issued 160,577,463 copies of sacred Books that tell men everywhere of Him who came forth from the Father "MIGHTY TO SAVE."

Along, however, with these encouragements of Divine overruling, the past teaches an important lesson. Brilliant beyond all former times were the twenty-one golden years of Victoria and Albert. Education became a national aspiration. Schools of art and music were founded with high hopes. Literature poured out unwonted treasures. Questions of political economy and social science engaged a general attention. Matters touching landlords and tenants, domestic servants, model lodging-houses, savings' banks, improved horticulture and practical agriculture, marked, in an unusual manner, those years. Meanwhile the kingdoms of the earth sent their products to our Industrial Exhibitions and it was in measure believed that these international communications would put an end to war. What, however, do we now witness? The Continental nations spending on their war forces six hundred millions yearly! As to ourselves, it was said in the British Parliament two months ago, and by a member whose words carried authority, "I fear there are too many tokens that this country is going backwards in the matter of morality: an insidious laxity is creeping over society; wickedness in high places is condoned, and profligacy threatens our national life." To this picture we are compelled to add that race-hatred here, animosities there, and lawlessness elsewhere, waiting its opportunity, are the grief and peril of our period. Meanwhile in the professing church immeasurable time and talent spent, during half a century, on mere ecclesiasticisms, have rather tended to separate than to promote a spirit of unity and concord.

Far be it from us—and this should be affirmed with emphasis—to teach indifference to great social questions. But, on the other hand, after a most auspicious trial of their effects, our expectations respecting them may well be moderated. Whatever advantages our political, ecclesiastical, and social agitations have brought, they have assuredly been attended by enormous and guilty waste of time and opportunity. Nations cannot be elevated except on a foundation of personal goodness. What man needs is what Christ taught him in his prayer to ask as the crown of all things else, "Deliverance from evil." Thank God, we see what pure Christianity has been doing during our Queen's reign. There are large numbers of workmen and servants, temperate, thrifty, law-abiding, and with a beautiful dutifulness, and the inspiring motive has been the Christian religion brought home to them. The hope of our times is found in the hundreds of noble-minded young men in our cities who have been connected with Christian Associations and agencies.

The lesson, therefore, which the past fifty years of national history enforces is this, that the hope of the world does not lie, as some tell us, in ecclesiastical, political, or social reforms, but in the saving knowledge of Christ, fully, widely, and lovingly taught; and the future should witness the restraining of energies on secondary matters, that we may more habitually throw ourselves into the spirit of our religion, and be more inspired by the one enthusiasm of witnessing for Christ.

Tunbridge Wells.

DR. PARKER'S PEOPLE'S BIBLE.*

Another volume of this work has soon succeeded that which we noticed a few weeks ago. The present issue fully maintains the character and quality of the previous volumes. The more widely we differ from a man, and the more mistaken or even reprehensible we may imagine him to be, the more thankful we are for such utterances as present him in a more favourable light; remembering that "as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." "Charity" (or love R.V.), says the Holy Spirit by Paul, "rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;" and although we have been severely criticised for speaking favourably of these expositions by Dr. Parker, we must repeat that they contain not only manifold results of shrewd observation of men and things, but spiritual insight and discriminative exegesis. We know no series of expositions which so remarkably read the principles of Scripture into the events and circumstances of daily life, or so luminously illustrate daily life by the electric light of Scripture. And this makes us all the more regret that the writer and preacher should not exercise the personal spiritual influence as a Christian minister which these discourses would lead us to expect.

These are eminently chapters for the people. The style is terse, and the language homely. The culture is of the best kind—intelligible to everybody; happily free from that refined obscurity attained in the schools, and not "understanded of the common people." The book abounds with home-thrusts like this from the chapter on "Manoah's wife":—

> You would not be half the man that you are except for your wife, and yet you never say "Thank you" with any degree of heartiness and sincerity. You listen to her suggestions with a half contempt, as if she did not know what she was talking about, and then you go and work out her ideas, and get the profit of it, and say what a clever man of business you are. That is not honest; it is not just. "Thou shalt not steal."

Is not that true to life? It may do the reader good, and bring a new element into his matrimonial relations. And here is a word for women, whether wives or maids, young or old:—

> Oh woman, talk of your mission! Here is your mission described and exemplified in the case of the wife of Manoah. What do you want with your School Board and platform experiences, and those mysterious abstractions which you call your rights? Here is your field of operation. Cheer those who are dispirited; read the word of God in its spirit to those who can only read its cold meagre letter, and the strongest of us will bless you for your gentle ministry. Did not Paul write to the Church at Rome saying, "Greet Priscilla and Aquila"—putting the wife's name first, and that in no mere spirit of courtesy, but probably in recognition of her supreme influence in spiritual direction and consolation? Was it not Helen Stirk who said to her husband, as they were both carried forth to be executed, "Husband, rejoice, for we have lived together many joyful days; but this day herein we die together ought to be most joyful to us both, because we must have joy for ever. Therefore I will not bid you good-night, for we shall suddenly meet within the kingdom of heaven."

We have said that we find in these discourses discriminative exegesis. For example: almost incidentally and, as it were unintentionally, the key is given to the choice of Gideon's three hundred:—

> "Men are chosen now by curious signs…Men are noting one another; seeing whether they lie down on the ground and devour the water, or whether, being men in wise haste under self-control, they lap it, and pass on. The little local incident has changed, but the principle of curious and even eccentric election is operating in all life, and the men who deny the Bible, live over again its most curious instances.

In like incidental manner the true view of the apostolic (not the Divine) choice of Matthias is indicated. With reference to the sign of the dew upon the fleece, asked by Gideon, it is said:—

> Even in apostolic days the freak of the lottery was tried, and we hear but little of the happy consequences which flowed from the adventure.

We may regret the satirical form in which this criticism is expressed, but the light is there. The disciples were bidden by their departing Lord to wait for the promised Spirit. Nothing could have been more alien from the letter and spirit of that command than to undertake to elect an apostle, and to endeavour to ascertain the mind of God by lot; whereas the Spirit for whom they were waiting was the very one who was promised to guide them into all truth. So that it is wisely added:—

> We have nothing to do with tests for God now.… This is the age of the Spirit, the age of true spiritual or religious faith.

Another correction of a very general misconception, and one which must surely have occurred to those who think out the narrative of Scripture, occurs in the chapter entitled "Shibboleth," an extract from which we will give in an early issue.

Dr. Parker takes for granted the general view that Samson was a giant. There is nothing in the narrative to support this. There his deeds of might are attributed to the Spirit of God, who moved him at times, and who never failed him in time of need until he fell into Delilah's snare. Then he was as weak as another man. This is inconsistent with the idea that he was naturally a man of gigantic size and strength.

If preachers would study these expositions, which, indeed, are all pulpit discourses, they would perceive how it is that at noon every Thursday, in spite of his egotistic mannerism and his "voices loud and low"—too loud and too low—Dr. Parker draws a congregation largely composed of business men, including some who take a railway journey of many miles to hear words which help them in the blatant battle or the silent suffering of life.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

A note of thankfulness that the winter is past, and that, therefore, the sufferings of the poor will be lightened for a time, is first struck in the occasional paper just issued by this Mission. Some illustrations of the severity of these sufferings are given, and whole volumes of information concerning the value of such work are compressed into the single sentence, "During the first three months of the year over 6000 cases received medicine from the dispensary, and over 400 persons were visited by the physicians in their own homes, the greater proportion of these latter being supplied with such nourishing and suitable diet as they required." In the same period there were over five thousand attendances at the mid-day Gospel meetings.

Such work as this is in itself a strong plea for generous support, which is intensified by a reference to the Convalescent Home, where last year 139 patients were received, and to the Holiday House for children who attend the school, and who here spend a brief season of delight. Mr. F. A. Pring, 47, Endell-street, St. Giles, is honorary secretary.

A SYMPOSIUM ON A CONVERTING MINISTRY.

At a recent gathering of members of the Somerset Congregational Union, the train-service gave the assembly an hour and a half of leisure. It was therefore resolved to employ the time so placed at their disposal in a fraternal conversation on the subject of the kind of preaching that arouses the unconverted. About fifty brethren, most of whom were ministers, attended the debate. A layman presided, opening the proceedings in a few well-chosen words, and a free discussion in very short speeches followed. Eighteen speakers in all gave utterance to their views. The following is a summary of the discussion, the points being noted in the order in which they were expressed.

Preaching ought to aim at conversion; it is little use speaking of mere generalities of faith or conduct; every sermon should seek to produce a definite impression on the religious and moral character and life, consequently every sermon ought to "appeal" directly to the conscience of the hearers.

The preacher must himself have a firm belief in the absolute necessity of conversion; there are some preachers who do not believe in it; sacramentarians have been known to speak of the doctrine of conversion as a "Dissenting dogma"; no man can convert others unless he is himself converted, and believe in converting grace.

To reach the heart and change the life, the Lord Jesus Christ must be distinctly set forward as the Saviour, in such a way as to create a profound sense of need in the sinner.

There ought to be a clear statement of the way of salvation; man's ruined state by nature, and the possibilities of his sanctification by grace, must be explained with definiteness and force.

The exceeding sinfulness of sin should be a frequent burden of the preacher's theme; it is necessary to deal with particular sins, and, if possible, to reveal the sinner to himself, so that he may see himself as lost beyond hope, apart from saving grace. To produce impressions such as these a minister must beware lest anything in himself, in the way of levity, ostentation, pride, and uncharitableness, or other sin, should cause his hearers to stumble, and so hinder the unconverted. It is his duty to follow up impressions, specially where he finds signs of the working of the Spirit; pastoral visitation often brings anxious souls to decision, who would fall back if they had not personal help from a pastor.

The pastor must try to keep in touch with his people; if he is a stranger to them, or if he falls out with any, there is a corresponding restraint on those influences that lead to conversion; love does wonders in touching the heart. The mode of presenting the truth is not unimportant; a preacher should be full of his subject, so that it may lay hold of him; Thomas Jones' saying, "It is no use a man having a sernon, unless the sermon has got hold of the man," goes to the root of the matter; earnest preaching comes of faith in one's theme and intimate acquaintance with it. A farmer who formed one of the company suggested that the fault lay sometimes with the congregation; they did not come with prepared hearts, they were too critical. There is something of good, he said, in the very poorest sermon. A duck in a ditch is searching in a dirty place possibly, but it is searching for what it believes to be good. That is the way to listen, to lay hold of what is good. The critical spirit prevents all possibility of the heart being spiritually impressed.

Such is a brief report of a most useful and inspiring conversation.—British Weekly.

"FOUNDATION TRUTHS."

ADDRESSES BY MR. DENHAM SMITH.

Many of your readers would like to know of the meetings again held at Clapton by Mr. Denham Smith. For nearly twenty-five years has he visited this, one of the scenes of his London labours. Twice a year (with only once illness preventing) has he done so in the building erected by his friend Mr. John Morley, of Upper Clapton, whose name in association with the spread of vital truth and in connection with the labours of Mr. Denham Smith (at Freemasons' Hall and Hanover-square Rooms) has been so long and well remembered.

On Sundays during May, the hall built by Mr. Morley, in the Alkham-road, at the cost of some eight to nine thousand pounds, has been crowded, many souls confessing to have received blessing. On the week evenings he delivered lectures to large, solemnised, and, it is believed, most receptive congregations, on "Foundation Truths," of which the following is a very brief and necessarily imperfect summary:—

"Foundation truths" were those that were vital truths. They concerned our eternal interests. All builders looked well to the foundations, and it behoved us to mark well the foundations. "Mark ye well her bulwarks." The first thing requisite was faith; for "without faith it was impossible to please God." The word was absolute—"He that believeth shall be saved: he that believeth not shall be condemned." In Rom. v. 1 we read: "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God"; or, according to the R.V., "Let us have peace with God"—let us enjoy it. Unless we have Christ in this life there will be no peace, and when we come to die it will be an awful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

is a foundation truth, and this, too, is absolute. Except a man be born from above, he can never enter heaven, but will go into eternity in the corrupt nature in which he was born. God has so spoken, and that ought to be enough.

Atonement is a vital truth. If a man denies the atoning blood of Christ, there is no salvation, no peace, and he is outside the pale of God's heaven. Whosoever denies the atonement, that man cannot be a Christ-man. Christ became man that He might suffer, and was God that He might satisfy. "Without shedding of blood there is no remission," no salvation.

This is a day of deepening unbelief. The Lord told the Jews (John viii. 44) because of their unbelief, that they were of their father the devil, a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth. This showed that there was a time when Satan abode in the truth; but because Christ told them the truth they believed Him not. Clever people are saying now there is no devil; and that God will not punish; and that the Bible is only here and there inspired; and very soon they will get men to disbelieve the Word of God altogether. People were asleep about these things as if Satan had given them an opiate.

There were two most important things to notice—that our sins were imputed to Christ, and that God's righteousness in Him is imputed to us. How was Abraham justified? Because "he staggered not at the promises of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God." Scientific men stagger, and believe not. Oh! the sweetness of having no doubt, like a child. We are either believers or unbelievers. Abraham was fully persuaded that what God had promised He was able also to perform; and therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness. When God promises us pardon, peace, justification, new heavens, and a new earth, and the promise of his coming again, we are not going to stagger at these things. Further, "It was not written for his sake alone, that it was reckoned to him, but for us also, to that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead." This is where we get our foundation. When we come to die our service and life are all rotten, for God will not have works put in the place of his Son "who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." The great obstacle to a soul's conversion is

We cannot alter the word that has gone out from the lips of God—"He that believeth shall be saved," and the awful alternative, "He that believeth not shall be damned." "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be accursed." The denial of these fundamental truths was going on everywhere—in the family, in the shop, in the pulpit, and in many Christian papers, so called, until very soon nothing will be left but a bloodless sacrifice, like Cain's offering. God says plainly enough, the man who believes on Christ is justified. All my sins are reckoned to Christ, and all his merit to me. Here is the cream and kernel of the Gospel; and the results are peace and access to God and Divine joy. Satan will keep a Christian years from having this peace, keep him waiting for "good feelings." But our fancied goodness is worse to God than our sins. Let us not stagger at the fourfold gift of God—faith, peace, grace, and glory. We cannot enter heaven unless justified and sanctified.

The Apostle having made the assertion, he now proceeds to apply it, and these are the fruits by which we can ascertain if we have faith (Rom. v. 3):—"And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also"—because there is a Divine submission to the will of God—"knowing that tribulation worketh patience"; i.e., a meek submission of mind acquiescing in all that God does, as right—"and patience experience," or proof. How proof? It brings me to God. I confess my sins, tell all out to Him, and acknowledge that I deserve all that has been put upon me. Now, who brings me to such a state? Is it Satan, or my own self? No. It is the Holy Ghost—experience, a proof that He dwells in a believer; "and proof, hope: and hope maketh not ashamed," it strengthens hope. It is easy to be quiet when all around is peaceful; but when a tornado comes, he will be steadfast, unmoveable, because his faith is upon a rock that no storm or even the damp grave can touch. "God so loved the world that He gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life;" and "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Before creation God had the sinner as an object of his affection. "We love Him because He first loved us." Love awakens love. If we believe this simple testimony, and, like Abraham, do not stagger, we shall not perish, but have heaven—everlasting life; "being fully persuaded that what God has promised He will perform." "Therefore, being justified by faith, let us have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Those who are familiar with the preacher's forcible and lucid style of presenting truth will perceive that the foregoing remarks are a very faint representation of the way in which the subject was handled. The vital truths of the Word were brought out in their solid form and present application to the consciences of men. The doctrine of sin, so much denied, and of judgment for sin, were especially dwelt on. J. A.

MISS DE BROEN, writing in reference to the report of her Belleville Mission, given in our issue of June 3, points out that the soup kitchen is only open during the winter. From the wording of the report it might have been inferred that it is in operation at the present time.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—A goodly company of friends gathered at the recent monthly meeting of workers to hear the address on the Holy Spirit by Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester. It was stated that during the previous month there had been evident tokens of God's blessing on the work, both at the open-air services and inside the house amongst English, Germans, Jews, Scandinavians, and others. Reference was made to the need of more help by personal service, the want of a larger number of sailors' book-bags and also an

AT WORK IN SPAIN.

Dear Sir,—The question has sometimes been put to me, "What can women do in Spain?" The following letter may serve as an answer. The writer is an English lady who is living in Valladolid in the house and under the auspices of your correspondents, Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong. The letter describes a three days' visit to the village of Fudela, where the Spanish evangelist has been, and was at the time, working. The companion referred to is a Swiss lady:—

"Early on Sunday afternoon the people began to assemble; all the chairs and stools in the house were brought into the little reception-room, and these were soon occupied; those coming later sat on the floor, or else stood in the doorway. After two and a half hours they were still unwilling to leave, and this unwillingness seemed to increase with each meeting. An old woman, and a middle-aged man and his wife yielded to the Spirit's strivings that first evening, and prayed aloud for mercy. It was very touching to hear those two—the wife first, and afterwards her husband—at ten o'clock on Sunday night. It was nearly eleven before all left, and we gathered together with those in the house to praise God for his goodness.

"We had more than fifty women on Sunday afternoon; they could not all get in, but stood outside the window, in the little yard, and in the passage. At night from twelve to fifteen men were present, besides women and children. Some of them wanted to stay and pray after ten o'clock; as they were women we told them to come at two o'clock the next afternoon, and we would pray before the meeting. We expected two or three. However, before that hour, the room was full, and it was impossible to have the quiet moment then; but before the close they were all kneeling and repeating some simple words of prayer after Dr. R. Many, no doubt, only followed the example of others, but not a few were deeply moved, as silent tears testified. It was very difficult to get away; they wanted to know when we would return, and begged that it might be soon. On the Monday morning we had visited the school. The master has about forty boys who, at the request of their fathers, read the Scriptures every day. The old teacher is deaf and feeble, but he loves his work. His two granddaughters assist him."

While this visit was being paid, the faithful labourers, Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong, were engaged in visits to villages in the southern province of Jaen, on the slopes of the Sierra Nevada, where there had been a previous Gospel awakening. We, dwelling in a land where religion walks in silver slippers, have little idea how much these simple mountaineers are enduring for the sake of Christ. They suffer not now from torture or imprisonment, but from deprivation of work, often reducing them to a state bordering on starvation. Mrs. Armstrong writes, dating May 23:—

"For three weeks we have been living out of the world. The Lord's work grows in these mountains, but the persecutions, the trials, and the poverty are very great, only the real ones can bear them." Again, on May 24:—"In la Canāda we saw again, and for the third time, a manifestation of the Holy Ghost, and in Iznatoraf further proof that the church there is a part of the Church of God which He has purchased with his own blood. But the difficulties and trials are even increasing for the Christians, human aid seems almost to harm them, taking their eyes off the Saviour and so weakening their faith in Him, as the only one who can carry them over the raging waves which at every moment threaten to engulph them, and which would do so unless God prevented it, but He will (Matt. xvi. 18). The Spanish Christians can explain that verse well from personal experience. It is grievous to us, whose strength is failing for the mountain service, to see that no younger and stronger labourers offer themselves for it."

Will your readers pray that the faith of these Christians may not fail, and that other labourers may be led to go out and devote themselves to the work of winning souls in Spain.—Yours faithfully, S. Southall.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.—6.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., Leicester.

OBADIAH—A CONTRAST!

1 Kings xviii.

After many days the word of the Lord again summoned Elijah to be on the move. Three years and a half had passed in the retirement of Zarephath; the widow and her son had become bound to him by the most sacred ties; the humble home, with its loft and barrel of meal and cruse of oil, was hallowed with delightful memories of the unfailing carefulness of God.

It must have been a great trial for him to go; and how great was the contrast that awaited him! He had probably heard of Ahab's search for him through all the neighbouring countries. There was not a nation or kingdom whither the incensed monarch had not sent to seek him, demanding an oath from the rulers that he was not in hiding there. It was not likely therefore that he would be received with much courtesy. Nay, the probability was that he would be instantly arrested; and perhaps put to torture to extort a revocation of the words which had placed the realm under the terrible interdict of drought; and, as he contrasted the tumultuous roar of the waves foaming outside the harbour-bar with the calm peace that reigned in the haven of rest which had sheltered him so long, he might well have shrunk back in dismay. But he had no alternative but to go. He who had said, "Go hide thyself," now said, "Go show thyself." What was he but a servant, bound to obey? And so, with the implicit obedience which has arrested our attention more then once, "Elijah went to show himself unto Ahab."

In this new departure the prophet evidently encouraged himself by the words on which he had leant when first he entered the monarch's presence, "The Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand" (ver. 15). And there may have rung through his spirit a refrain, throbbing with heroic faith, uttered centuries before by a kindred soul: "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, came upon me to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell. Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident."

But though Elijah's spirit was thus fortified against fear, it must have been very bitter to him to see the devastation which had been wrought in the land. The music of the brooklets was still. No green pastures carpeted the hills or vales. There was neither blossom on the fig-tree nor fruit in the vines, and the labour of the olive failed. The ground was chapt and barren. The hinds calved in the field, and deserted their young because there was no grass; and the wild asses, with distended nostrils, climbed the hills to snuff up the least breath of air that might allay the fever of their thirst. And, probably, the roads in the neighbourhood of the villages and towns were dotted by the stiffened corpses of the abject poor, who had succumbed to the severity of their privations. We have no idea, in these temperate regions, of the horrors of an Eastern drought. All this had been brought about instrumentally by the prophet's prayer; and it would have been intolerable, had he not eagerly hoped that his people would learn the exceeding sinfulness and evil of sin. "Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backslidings shall reprove thee; know, therefore, and see, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God."

Though the famine was sore everywhere, it seems to have been most severe in Samaria. "There was a sore famine in Samaria." And it was this famine that brought out the true he would set himself to alleviate the miseries of his people; and, above all, that he would have turned back to God; but, no, his one thought was about the horses and mules of his stud; and his only care was to save some of them alive. And so he starts on a mission, such as is still undertaken by the petty chieftains of Eastern tribes, to find grass. What selfishness is here! Mules and asses before his people! Seeking for grass instead of seeking for God!

And yet such selfishness is as rife to-day as ever. Selfishness like this prompts the great ones of the earth to dash myriads of men against each other in the shock of battle, for the gratification of a mere personal pique, and regardless of the untold misery inflicted on thousands of hearts and homes. Selfishness like this makes men of wealth and fashion loll on beds of down, roll in sumptuous carriages, and feast sumptuously every day, indifferent to the hopeless wretchedness of those who earn their wealth, and are paid a starvation wage. Selfishness like this still spends on an equipage, a horse, a dog, the keeping up of a shooting-box, the round of amusements, more than it can afford for the maintenance of God's work, or for the relief of the poor. Are professing Christians clear in this matter? Are there not many who spend as much on a single dinner party as they do on the needs of a dying world? And what is this but a repetition of the sin of Ahab, who went out to find grass for his beasts, whilst his people were left to take their chance! Oh that this spirit of selfishness were exorcised by the Spirit of Christ, then missionary societies would not be hampered in their operations for want of funds; then the coffers of charitable institutions would be filled; then many a hard-working toiler would be able to give effect to schemes now blighted and arrested by the east wind of want! I do not blame Christian men for maintaining themselves in that position of life in which they were called; it is their apparent duty to retain that position as a sacred talent (1 Cor. vii. 20, 24). But I cannot understand a man daring to call himself a Christian and spending more upon the accessories and luxuries of his life than he does upon that service of man which is so dear to our Lord. This is surely the selfishness of Ahab.

It is startling to find such a man as Obadiah occupying so influential a position at Ahab's court. "Obadiah was the governor (or steward) of his house." Now, according to his own testimony, Obadiah had feared the Lord from his youth (ver. 12). This is also the testimony of the sacred historian concerning him: "Obadiah feared the Lord greatly" (ver. 3). And he had given conspicuous proof of his piety; for, when Jezebel had swept the land with the besom of persecution, hunting down the prophets of the Lord, and consigning them to indiscriminate slaughter, he had rescued a hundred of the proscribed men, hiding them by fifty in a cave, and had fed them with bread and water. But though a good man, there was evidently a great lack of moral strength, of backbone, of vigorous life, in his character; otherwise he could never have held the position he did in the court of Ahab and Jezebel.

There is no possible harm in a Christian man holding a position of influence in a court or society where he can do so at no cost of principle. On the contrary, it may enable him to render priceless service to the cause of God. Where would Luther and the Reformation have been, humanly speaking, had it not been for the Elector of Saxony? And what would have been the fate of our Wiclif, if John o' Gaunt had not constituted him his ward? But very few can occupy such a position, without putting kid on their hands and velvet on their lips; without dropping something of their uncompromising speech; or dipping their colours to the flag of expediency. And there is every indication that this was the weak point with Obadiah.

Obadiah did not believe in carrying matters too far. Of course he could not fall in with this new order of things; but then there was no need for him to force his religious notions on everyone. He was often shocked at what he saw at court, and found it hard to keep still; but then to throw up his situation, for he would be sure to lose it, if he spoke out. He was often sad at heart to witness the sufferings of the prophets of the Lord, and half inclined to take up their cause; but then a single man could not do much, and he could, perhaps, help them better in a quiet way by keeping where he was, though it might sometimes be a little strain on his principles. The poor man must often have been in a great strait to reconcile his duty to Jehovah with his duty to his other master, Ahab. And Elijah shrewdly hinted at it, when he said, "Go, tell thy lord, behold Elijah is here!" Imagine a courtier of Oliver Cromwell trying to be true to the Commonwealth, and to the cause of the exiled Stuarts! The life of policy and expediency is a species of rope-walking; it needs considerable practice in the art of balancing.

There are scores of Obadiahs everywhere around us, and in the professing church. They know the right, and are secretly trying to do it; but they say as little about religion as they can. They never rebuke sin. They never confess their true colours. They find pretexts and excuses to satisfy the remonstrances of an uneasy conscience. They are as nervous of being identified by declared Christians, as Obadiah was when Elijah sent him to Ahab. They are sorry for those who suffer persecution for righteousness sake; but it never occurs to them to stand in the pillory by their side; they content themselves with administering some little relief to them, as Obadiah did to the harried prophets; and, whilst they conceal that relief from the world, they put it in as a claim to the people of God for recognition and protection, as Obadiah did. "Was it not told my lord what I did?" (ver. 13). They sometimes are on the point of throwing up all to take up an uncompromising attitude, but they find it hard to go forth to suffer affliction with the people of God, so long as they are well provided for within the palace walls.

What a contrast between Obadiah and Elijah! And it is with the purpose of accentuating that contrast, and of bringing out into fuller relief the noble character of the prophet, that we have sought to elaborate this sketch of Ahab's steward.

I. There is a contrast between the inside and the outside of the camp for witness-bearing.—There is much said on both sides of the case. Many amongst us advise that the children of God should stay in the camp of the world, joining in its festivities, going to its places of amusement, taking the lead in its fashion and its course. In this way they hope to temper and steady it, to level it up, to make it Christian. It is a fair dream, exceedingly congenial to our natural tastes, and, if it were only true, it would save a world of trouble. The poor prophets of the Lord might come back from their caves; Elijah might become Ahab's vizier; and Obadiah's conscience might settle to rest. Indeed, Elijah's policy would be a supreme mistake, and we had better all become Obadiahs at once.

But there are two insurmountable difficulties in the way of our accepting this theory of levelling up from within. (1) It is in direct opposition to the teaching of Scripture.—"Come out from her, my people," is the one summons that rings like a clarion note from board to board. "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord; and touch not the unclean thing." There is not a single hero and saint, whose name sparkles on the inspired page, who moved his times from within; all, without exception, have raised the cry, "Let us go forth without the camp," and have joined the constant stream of martyrs, confessors, prophets, and saints, of whom the world was not worthy, but who can trace their kinship to Him of whom it is written, "He suffered without the gate." The only Scriptural course for God's witness-bearers is to go out to Him without the camp. In the world, but not of it. Wearing the pilgrim garb, manifesting the pilgrim spirit, uttering the pilgrim confession.

(2) This theory will not work.—The man who goes into the world to level it up will soon find himself levelled down. Was not this the case with Obadiah? Instead of getting Ahab to think of water and unto all brooks to find grass for his horses and mules. Surely this was a miserable errand for one who feared the Lord greatly! But this is only a sample of the kind of things which must be borne and done by such as try to serve two masters. Compare the influence exerted on the behalf of Sodom by Abraham, on the heights of Mamre, with that of Lot, who, not content with pitching his tent towards the city gate, went to live inside, and even became one of the aldermen of the place (Gen. xix. 1). Remember that Lot was carried captive in the sack of Sodom, but Abraham rescued him. But why need we multiply instances? This matter is undergoing daily proof. The Christian woman who marries an ungodly man is soon dragged down to his level. The servant of God who enters into partnership with a man of the world cannot keep the business from drifting. The church which admits the world into its circle will find that it will get worldly quicker than the world will become Christian.

The safest and strongest position is outside the camp. Archimedes said that he could move the world, if only he had a point of rest given him outside it. Thus, too, can a handful of God's servants influence their times, if only they resemble Elijah, whose life was spent altogether outside the pale of the court and the world of his time.

II. There is a contrast between preventive and aggressive goodness.—Obadiah sought simply to prevent a great harm being done. He shielded the prophets from the sword of Jezebel, and from the touch of famine. And this was well. Preventive goodness like this serves a very useful purpose. It rears Homes, and Refuges, and bulwarks of defence, behind which persecuted and threatened lives may thrive. But, after all, the world needs something more. It is not enough to deal with the poisoned streams, a hand is needed to cast the healing salt into the fountainhead. There is an urgent demand for men like Elijah and John the Baptist, who dare oppose the perpetrators of evil deeds, and arraign them before the bar of God, and compel them to bow before the offended majesty of a broken law.

For this there is needed a positive enduement of power, which cannot be had by the half-hearted, but is the glad prerogative of those who, from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, are servants of God. Obadiah had no power of this kind. How could he have? On the other hand, Elijah was full of it; and, because he was so, he succeeded in arresting the tides of sin when they were in full flood.

It is not enough to shelter the prophets, we must go and show ourselves to Ahab. We may be as sugar; but we must also be like salt, that stays the progress of consumption. The preventive and ameliorative, the healing agencies are good, but the aggressive are better still, because they deal with the hidden causes of things. May God send to his Church a handful of lion-like men, like Elijah, of whom this is the majestic record: "Elijah went to show himself unto Ahab"; to confront the royal culprit, to lay the king under arrest.

III. There is a contrast between the caution of expediency and the fearlessness of faith.—When Elijah told Obadiah to tell his master that he was awaiting him, the astonished courtier was incredulous. He knew how irritated and incensed Ahab had been, and that his anger was at white heat still; and it seemed madness for the prophet to expose himself to its flames. Indeed, he thought either that the prophet did not know the way in which the king had sought for him; or that the Spirit of the Lord would carry him off, before they could meet. It never occurred to him that Elijah dare meet the king if he really knew how matters stood. And, even supposing that he were foolhardy enough to adventure himself, surely God would prevent him from stepping into the lion's lair. In any case, he wished to have nothing to do with it. He was more anxious for himself than for the work of God, or the wishes of Elijah. Twice over he repeated the words, "he shall slay me." And it was only when Elijah appealed to God as the witness of his solemn oath, and assured him that he would surely show himself to Ahab ere the Ahab, and told him. How unable he was to form a true conception of the fearlessness of Elijah!

And what was the source of that fearlessness? Surely it is unfolded to us in the words of Elijah's sublime asseveration: "The Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand." God was more real to Elijah than Ahab. He was a courtier in the throne-room of the King of kings. How could he be afraid of a man that should die, and of the son of man that should become as the grass of the mower's scythe, withered by the noontide heat? The fear of God had made him impervious to all other fear. Faith sees the mountain full of horses and chariots of fire. Faith can hear the tread of twelve legions of angels marshalling for its defence. Faith can detect the outlines of those Almighty hands which hide the children of God in their hollow. And so, with unblanched face and undismayed heart, God's Elijahs go on to do his commands, though their way is blocked by as many devils as there are tiles upon the housetops. The Obadiahs assert that they will never dare to carry their proposals through, but they live to see their predictions falsified, and their mean suggestions shamed.

IV. There is a contrast between the reception given to these two types of character by the ungodly.—Ahab could tolerate Obadiah, because he never rebuked him. When salt has lost it savour it does not sting, though it be rubbed into an open wound. But as soon as he saw Elijah he accosted him as the great troubler of the time. "It came to pass, when Ahab saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, Is it thou, thou troubler of Israel?" (ver. 17 R.V.). Years after, speaking of another devoted servant of God, whose advice was demanded by Jehoshaphat, this same Ahab said, "I hate him; for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil."

There is no higher testimony to the consistency of our life than the hearty hatred of the Ahabs around us. One of the most scathing condemnations that could be pronounced on men is contained in those terrible words of our Lord: "The world cannot hate you; but Me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil." Who would not undergo all the hate that the Ahabs can heap on us, rather than incur that sentence from the lips of Christ! "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad." If all men speak well of you, you may begin to question whether you are not becoming mere Obadiahs. But if Ahab accuses you of troubling him, rejoice, and tell him to his face that his trouble is due to a broken commandment, and to the idols before which he bows. If there should read these lines those who are in trouble, enduring affliction, their life smitten with drought, let them ask whether the cause is not to be found in broken vows, in desecrated temples, in forfeited oaths. If so, return at once, with tears of penitence and words of confession, unto the Lord. "He hath torn, and He will heal; He hath smitten, and He will bind up."

There, face to face, we leave the Ahab and Elijah. We need not ask which is the more royal of the two; nor need we spend our time in looking for Obadiah. We cannot but admire the noble bearing of the prophet of God. But let us remember it was due, not to his inherent character, but to his faith. "By faith he quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness was made strong, stopped the mouth of this lion." And if we will acquire a similar faith, we may anticipate similar results on the meaner platform of our own lives.

THE COPENHAGEN STREET HOME.—The thirtieth annual report of this Industrial Home for Boys states that the buildings maliciously destroyed by fire have now been restored. The average number of boys in the Home during the year was fifty-seven, this much smaller number than usual being caused by the suspension of admissions in consequence of the fire, and by an outbreak of scarlet fever, which happily was soon subdued. The school inspector's report is very good. Col. M. J. J. Mignon, 182, Sinclair-road, West Ken-

SETTING LITTLE ONES IN FAMILIES.

"Ye did it unto Me." Just at this time we are called to observe the contrast between work done for love of the Saviour, and that of the lovers of their kind, as in the case of the St. Pancras Guardians and their "boarding-out" experiment. Dr. Barnardo, with the same material in hand, produces very different results from that of the Poor Law Guardians. Both parties use humanity, indeed, but the great Christian labourer has the sanctified sort, while the other only applies the common salve of earthly kindness.

Let your light so shine before men......and may glorify your Father which is in heaven. For this reason we must make our boast in the Lord, and I venture to send these few words of comment that the readers of The Christian may be encouraged to take notice of the events of the day from the true standpoint of godly motive, and Divinely-guided action.

In my little way I have to rejoice and give thanks that the practice of "boarding-out," both little children and adults, brings out most holy, happy feelings, and the results show much service "unto Him" that only at the judgment of the saints will be published.

I know of rural districts and of town streets where this work of "setting the solitary in families" is being done for the Lord's sake with much comfort, and I can report from my own knowledge that the well-known Foundling Hospital has grand success in the practice of this system.

The secret of this special kind of action is in the faithfulness with which inspection is done. For this work, no doubt, Dr. Barnardo employs the most highly cultivated Christian intelligence he can procure. The Foundling Hospital has made good selection of inspectors in its long experience, and I am happy in the work of my "sisters," who undertake to superintend the little ones. And now, let me urge Christian ladies to offer to do these services for the young, and to make a clear testimony that they do it unto the Lord.

Charitable institutions will gladly receive their help, and even public bodies will not long stand out against the economy of employing unpaid officials. There would be no difficulty in the working of such posts of honour, if the management of destitute children were solely vested in the State, and not in the Poor Law Guardians, who, however well they may manage in the case of paupers, can hardly deal fully with children's affairs. The connection between volunteer workers and the Government, in the management of schools, under the Industrial and Reformatory Acts, proves the practicable and beneficial nature of the combination. These remarks are offered for consideration in hope of inducing similar movements; and of promoting the exercise of pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father, as given us by St. James (i. 5).

Such holiness in act and deed is well pleasing to the Master, and may profitably replace the words which are often in these days all that can be seen of Christian life. S. M.

PADDINGTON HALL AND HYDE PARK MISSION.—The annual report tells a pathetic story of work: to name especially two classes, amongst fallen women, and those toiling in the dust yards. This is, indeed, work amongst the poor and heavy laden, whose wrongs and sufferings are such, when understood, as to excite the deepest pity and sympathy. Any who doubt this should send for a copy of this report, which may be had of Mr. John Davidge, 90, Church-street, Paddington Green, W. The evangelistic work in Hyde Park and in the hall, as well as that to which reference has already been made, has been productive of many blessed

A MISSION TOUR IN INDIA.—1.

The growing importance of mission work amongst the lepers of India, and the increasing interest awakened in their spiritual and temporal welfare amongst Christians at home, decided our Committee on sending me out to make a tour in India. The object of my going was to visit as many leper asylums as possible, and to make general inquiries into the condition of the lepers, with a view to extending our work amongst them.

Through the good hand of God I have been enabled to complete my long tour in health and safety. During a five months' stay in India I travelled over 9400 miles, visiting the Bombay, Madras, and Bengal Presidencies; the Central and North-west Provinces, Oudh, the Punjaub, and Rajpootana, besides visiting several of the native States. During the whole time—such is the hospitality of Indian life, especially amongst missionaries—I was only once obliged to stay in a hotel.

I left home on November 4, 1886, and, travelling by the overland route, reached Bombay on the 22nd of the same month. I was very fortunate in having among my travelling companions Bishop Parker (who was on his way out to take up the late Bishop Hannington's work), Mr. and Mrs. Roberts, C.M.S. (going to Nasik), Mr. Jones (Chaplain, Bellary), and Messrs. Johnson and Insell, of the L.M.S.; so we had a good band of kindred spirits. Bishop Parker left at Aden for Zanzibar, the rest of us going on to Bombay.

November 22.—Through the kindness of Dr. Vandyke Carter I was enabled to visit the Leper Ward of the J. J. Hospital. Amongst others I found four Eurasian lads (two Protestants and two Roman Catholics); one of them was a very awful sight to look upon, but, indeed, all were bad enough. The poor fellows seemed cheered by my visit; I had an interesting talk with them, and had the privilege of pointing them to the Saviour. I afterwards sent one of them a Bible which he had promised me he would read. I heard through these men of the death of two European lepers whom I had before known in this hospital; one of them (who will be known to some of your readers as the subject of a leaflet entitled "Rejoicing in Hope") bore, they told me, a good testimony to the last.

In the afternoon of November 23 the veteran Rev. George Bowen and I visited the Bombay District Benevolent Society's institution in Byculla; it is called the Dharmsala, that being the native name for a charitable institution. This place is intended for all kinds of destitute natives, but considerably more than half the inmates are lepers, who live in a part railed off rom the others. To give an accurate description of the horrors of this sad community of 150 doomed ones would be impossible; suffice it to say that it requires no little courage to pass up and down those chambers of living death. Here are to be seen "wifeless husbands, husbandless wives, children without parents, and parents without children," who have been driven out of house and home by their relatives as soon as it became known that the fell disease had laid hold upon them. We saw there a man and wife, both lepers, who had six children, several of whom are living with their parents. There were young girls there in whom the disease had only just begun, and yet they were doomed to dwell amongst those who were in the last stages of the terrible malady, and see the steps by which they too must descend to the grave. One especially I remarked, very young, with a sweet face and no mark of the disease upon her except two fatal spots on her back, just sufficient to tell her that her fate was sealed; and this poor child had been driven from her home and had wandered into this, the only refuge for lepers in the city of Bombay.*

In the Dharmsala there is no attempt made to separate the sexes; men, women, and children are all huddled together in cells, 6 × 8 feet (these I measured with a tape), two people occupying one cell, and in some cases, where there are children, there are more than two in one! Oh, the awful sights one sees here! I could not bring myself to describe everything. One poor fellow was spotted all over like a leopard; another with great swollen hands, one of which he was having freely bled (to relieve the itchiness, he said) by a woman with an old razor. She was tapping the hand all over with the top of the blade, and the black blood was flowing freely. As you look at poor maimed limbs and distorted faces, the latter generally wearing a dull, hopeless expression, showing clearly that all brightness has long since gone out of their lives, your heart is drawn out in pity toward them, and you rejoice to be able to tell them of the love and pity of One who was specially tender to the leper, and whose precious blood can cleanse them from the still more awful leprosy of sin.

We saw there a healthy woman with a leprous husband, and a healthy man with a leprous wife and daughter; in such cases the love and devotion of the healthy one must be very real indeed. I should never advocate the separation of husbands and wives, or of parents and children, unless with the full and free consent of all concerned; but I should never allow marriages to take place in an asylum, as they do in the Dharmsala; and in the case of the unmarried, the sexes should be kept strictly apart. I cannot but feel that a place such as the Dharmsala, in one of the most populous parts of a great city like Bombay, must be a great source of danger, while it is terrible to think that this is the only refuge in Bombay for her leprous poor.

Amongst the 150 lepers there are about twenty-five Christians, who, we were told, exercise an influence for good on the others. Mr. Bowen has baptized several; he and other missionaries visit the place from time to time, but I believe it is difficult to carry on any direct evangelistic work, as the institution is under native management for the most part. I trust that the Lord may yet give us means to put up in Bombay an asylum for lepers to be entirely under Christian management and direction.

* Note.—Five months after this I saw this girl, when on my way home, and was shocked at the ravages the disease had made upon her in that short time.

PASTOR CHINIQUY writes, under date May 30:—"We continue to be much rejoiced by conversions from the Church of Rome. A few days ago another priest applied for a place in the Converted Priests' Home. He will be the twenty-seventh priest whom I have helped in breaking the heavy and ignominious yoke of the Papacy."

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—Of eighty-two University graduates who offered themselves for missionary work, eighteen have during the past twelve months been accepted by the Church Missionary Society, twelve of the men being from Cambridge, one from Dublin, and three, who will be medical missionaries, from Edinburgh and Glasgow. Four ladies also have been accepted, and a number of young men to be trained in the Islington College. This is very gratifying, but

FOREIGN AID SOCIETY.

A meeting on behalf of this Society was held on Thursday last in Morley Hall, 316, Regent-street, Archdeacon Richardson presiding. Rev. W. Ostle explained the object of the Society, which, for nearly fifty years, has assisted the various evangelical societies on the Continent by grants of money, and stimulated interest in mission work carried on in France and Belgium. M. Du Pontet de la Harpe addressed the meeting in French, and pleaded eloquently the claims that France especially has on England.

Miss Sophia Burgess gave details of the work of evangelisation amongst the miners in Pas de Calais, where a very real awakening to spiritual things gives cause for great thankfulness. At Liévin a church, capable of holding 300 persons, was opened in September last, and is filled every Sunday with the miners and their families. The singing of Sankey's hymns, admirably translated into French, is one of the greatest joys in the toiling lives of these poor people. Everywhere Christian visitors are warmly welcomed, and the desire to hear more of this "new religion" expressed. The congregation in this place is composed almost entirely of those who have come out of the Romish Church: indeed, some remain nominally Romanists, but nevertheless attend the Protestant Church, and have a grasp of the doctrines of salvation and faith in the atoning power of the blood of Christ. Miss Burgess concluded by appealing for more help for the Foreign Aid Society, to enable it to strengthen the efforts of those who are working in these mission stations.

PERSECUTION IN SPAIN.

Your readers are aware that in cases of administering the rite of extreme unction to the dying, it is customary in Spain to go in procession through the streets, the priest carrying aloft the custodia, and an acolyte ringing a handbell, at the sound of which all passers by are expected to kneel until the procession passes. Since the establishment of religious liberty in 1868 it is no longer obligatory on all to conform to this custom, and consequently many, from conscientious scruples, refrain from doing so, although, if possible, they endeavour to get out of the way, so as not to give needless offence.

To-day a poor woman—a member of the Protestant community—was passing through one of the streets of this town, and on turning a corner came into contact with "the procession of the host." Not prepared to kneel, and unwilling to appear disrespectful she stepped aside into a door-way to let the procession pass, but the priest rushed after her, dragged her out, and with great violence endeavoured to force her on her knees. Not succeeding in this, he handed her over to two policemen, and charged her before the judge of First Instance with insulting "the established religion." The judge took the priest's declaration, in writing, absolutely refused to hear the poor woman, and ordered her off to prison to await her trial.

No one knows when this "trial" may come on, and so this poor wife and mother is excluded from her home for an indefinite period. When her "trial" comes it will be a mere travesty of justice, unless we can secure the services of a respectable advocate. We are anxious to make this a test case, to see whether, under the Spanish constitution, Protestants can be imprisoned for not offering an act of worship to the "host." We will be glad if any of your readers are disposed to aid us in securing the employment of counsel.

A NOTE OF THANKS.—Sir,—I wish to heartily thank the unknown donor of The Christian, which reaches me weekly. The reading of it I find a great stimulus and comfort, and I should now be at loss, indeed, if deprived of the paper, and the cheering news it brings to a lonely worker.—Yours sincerely,

G. H. Macfarlane.

For the Young.

ISN'T IT BEAUTIFUL TO BE A CHRISTIAN?

A LADY told me that when a young woman she was led to yield up her heart to God through being asked the above question. She said: "I went to stay with an uncle who was very rich and very good. At the time there were some special services held in the church, and my uncle and cousins were much engaged with them. They wished me to attend them, but I did not like them. I knew they were very anxious that I should decide for Christ, but I resisted all their kind efforts. One day I was asked to take a small present to a poor woman in the village, as my cousin was very busy. I gladly consented to go, because I thought I should not have to go to the service if I did.

"On reaching the cottage, after a very little conversation the poor woman, full of gratitude to my uncle for his kindness, looked at me with such a look, and said, 'So, miss, you be the squire's niece; and isn't it beautiful to be a Christian?'

"I could see she meant it. That face told me there was calm, settled peace within. She was poor, yet she was so truly happy. I was rich, but I was miserable. For a moment I was silent. I could not answer her question. I could see the beauty of my uncle's and also of my cousins' lives. I believed it was beautiful for them to be Christians. Again the good woman asked, 'Isn't it beautiful to be a Christian?'

"'I don't know,' I replied.

"'What, miss! Then are you not a Christian?'

"She spoke so kindly to me, that I hurried away as fast as I could, her question ringing in my ears. The brightness of the Christian life in the mansion and in the cottage spoke to my soul. I became utterly miserable. There was light all round me; my own soul was in darkness.

"I returned to my room to pray. From that moment I began to seek God, and now for more than twenty years I have proved that it is 'beautiful to be a Christian.'" Young people! look to God for his help, that your life may be such a witness for Him.

THE LIGHTHOUSE.

I was at Land's End one morning watching the sea, as it rolled on the rocks on which the Longships Lighthouse stands, when I met an old man, a sailor, with a telescope under his arm. I was very much pleased, as I had been seeking an opportunity of a little talk with him, because he had been to some of my meetings. I commenced conversation in some such way as this:—

"I have been watching the sea breaking on the rocks, and there is not much wind. I suppose in a storm the waves must break against the lighthouse itself."

"Yes," he replied; "I have seen the lighthouse, lantern and all, enveloped in foam."

"Then what becomes of the light?" I asked. "Doesn't it go out?"

He smiled at me, and said, "Ah, sir, it would be sorry work for the poor mariner if the light ever went out. It is on the dark and stormy night we want it most. We can manage to do without it on a bright, clear night." What a lesson I had learnt from the old man I wanted to help!

"It is in the dark and stormy night we need it most." It is easy to shine brightly when surrounded by Christian friends; it is easy to shine when everything goes smooth and fair; it is easy when there are no clouds to cross our path; but it is not so easy when men want it most. The fiercest storm does not succeed in putting out the light; but I think sometimes it does not require much of a storm to put our light out. A little thing crosses the path, and we are put out. Where is the light when we are cross and out of temper? How welcome is the bright, stedfast light that burns steadily on when things are going wrong, when trouble comes, when accidents happen!

The lighthouses serve a double purpose. They are placed on certain points of our coasts, or on outlying rocks, to warn sailors of their danger, but they also tell the sailor where he is, and thus guide him on his way.

When a ship is homeward-bound, the captain steers for a certain point, and then alters his course on making it. Thus if a ship is coming from the west to go up the English Channel, the captain on a dark night would look out for the Longships light, off the Land's End, or else the light on the Wolf Rock; and directly he made either light, that means, directly he saw either light, he would know exactly where he was. Then he would sight the two lights on the Lizard Point, and if he wanted to go into Falmouth Harbour he would steer on until he saw the St. Anthony's light on the eastern side of the entrance to the harbour. But he would now keep the two lights of the Lizard in one, that is, he would steer on in a straight course, only seeing one Lizard light until he saw under the large St. Anthony's light a little one, and then he would alter his course; and steer straight for the harbour. If he steered for the harbour before he saw the lower light burning, he would run his ship into the Manacles Rocks, which lie ever so far from the shore. So you see how very necessary all these lights are, and that they should be burning very brightly, and also how necessary that the mariner should steer by them.

Dear young Christian, let your lower lights be burning. It is not enough that in your attendance at the house of God, and in the outward acts of your religious devotion, your light should burn brightly. It is also necessary that your footsteps, as you tread the everyday journey of your life, should be true, and each step taken in the light of God's Word.

BIBLE QUESTIONS.

We extract the following questions from a little book, BIBLE QUERIES, published by the Religious Tract Society, which gives a question for every day in the year, with a vacant space for filling in the references. Our young readers will perhaps look up and send to us the correct references for these:—

Dost thou believe on the Son of God?
Who can count the dust of Jacob?
Who can say . . "I am pure from my sin?"
How were thine eyes opened?
Doth my father yet live?
Hath God forgotten to be gracious?
Whom shall I send?
Do I seek to please men?
What is your life?

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

THE report of the past year's work of this Society records an increased number of meetings, of which 2,549 were held in one hundred and sixteen different places in various parts of Ireland. Five tents were at work during the summer, and many letters attest the value of the evangelistic efforts put forth. One writes that as a result of the mission in Manor-hamilton, co. Leitrim, a Bible-class and a Christian workers' band were formed. The united testimony of about forty letters is that very great blessing has followed these labours. The people flocked to the services and listened eagerly to the Word. Of the work of grace at Drumfin, co. Antrim, it is said "The old Christians of the place say that there had been nothing like it since 1859." In some cases opposition was encountered from Roman Catholics, but the work seems to have been productive of much fruit amongst this class of the population, and many were led to a complete dependence on the finished work of Christ. The wooden hall was used for nearly four hundred meetings, and, as an illustration of the friendly disposition of the people, it is stated that the cost of conveying this from place to place was borne by the farmers or other friends.

The Society's branch of the Irish National Bible and Prayer Union now numbers about 1400 members, and many besides these will join in the prayer that the Word of God may have free course and be glorified, to the peace and happiness of the people of much distracted Ireland. The hon. sec. is Mr. James Barton, Dundalk.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Mr. Spiers has had a series of very happy meetings with the children at Woolwich. The numbers were large, and there was manifest blessing. The teachers' hearts have been much cheered. Mr. Martin J. Hall has been holding Scripture Union meetings at Burbage, Lydiard, Tregoz, and Trowbridge, and commenced a week's mission at St. James's Schools, Plumstead, yesterday (16th). Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith is to be at Plymouth June 18—19; at Bideford, June 20—21; and at Barnstaple, June 22. Prayer is asked that much blessing may rest on these various meetings for the children.

HOLIDAY HOME FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—A lady writes:—A gentleman has kindly lent for the summer months a farm-house, and has not only consented to, but welcomed the thought of my receiving girls who are not admissible to other convalescent homes by reason of wrong-doing in the past. I should feel grateful if you will allow me, through the medium of THE CHRISTIAN, to make it known to fellow-workers. It will not be a permanent Home. The purpose is to help to brighten and strengthen the sickly plodding ones, who, though sorely "let and hindered" are seeking to tread the right way. Miss Rye, 7, Westbury-road, Paddington, W., has kindly consented to see workers and girls every Monday, from 10 to 1.

PREVENTIVE WORK.

It was a happy thought on the part of Mr. E. W. Thomas and his friends to hold the thirtieth anniversary of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution at Parson's Green, Fulham, on the occasion of the opening of a new Home of the "preventive" order. It is not more than twelve months ago since Mrs. F. A. Bevan attended the foundation-stone laying service, and on Saturday last, when there was again a large meeting of friends from town, she had the pleasure of declaring the new Home duly opened. There were present on the occasion a number of young girls of the "friendless" type from an adjoining Home, and they greatly added to the interest of the opening ceremony by a well-sung service of song.

Professor J. H. Gladstone presided, and, after prayer by Rev. J. S. Sinclair, Mr. Theodore Barnes, on behalf of the Committee, read an address of hearty acknowledgment of Mrs. Bevan's kind interest in the work of the Institution. In response, she expressed thankfulness to God for being permitted to take part in so good a work.

The annual report, presented by Mr. E. W. Thomas, showed that during the last year there had been admitted 872 of the fallen and the friendless, and in this number, all ages were represented, although the young predominated. It was touching to hear that there was scarcely a city or town in the United Kingdom without a representative among those who had applied for admission, showing once more that it is to London the ruined in character repair, in the hope of being lost and unknown among its many thousands.

The addresses on the occasion were hearty, sympathetic, and inspiring. Dr. Gladstone's address had an echo of the Te Deum in it, which the girls sang with great spirit, and his tone was one of thankfulness from first to last, for the evil which was prevented by the Homes of this good Institution, as well as for the hand of help it stretched out to those who, through their fall, had become lost to hope.

Mr. J. H. L. Christien wanted to see an expansion of the Open All Night Refuge which had done such good service. Rev. Dr. Davies thought that attending such a meeting by ministers would be a splendid preparation for their next day's efforts. The address of Mrs. Bevan had gone to all their hearts, and he hoped they would all work the better for it. Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston thought there could be no better way of observing the Queen's Jubilee than by giving these Homes "a good shove along."

After Mr. Frith, Mr. Nicholls, Mr. Drysdale, Mr. Seeton, and Mr. Bourne had spoken, there was an adjournment to the garden where tea was provided, and a pleasant hour or two was spent; Mr. Thomas gave some reminiscences of good Dr. Holt Yates, and the addresses he was accustomed to deliver under the mulberry tree, still flourishing in the garden of what now forms one of the Preventive Homes.

A HOME FOR GOVERNESSES and young people in business has been carried on for nearly two years at Kilburn in connection with the Y.W.C.A. The weekly payment is 12s., or less for those who cannot afford this. Kind and grateful letters have been received from those who have from time to time stayed in the house. A few young ladies are received for training in mission work. They divide their time between study, light household duties, house-to-house visitation, and other branches of Christian work, under the superintendence of a lady trained at Mildmay. Backward girls are helped and fitted for some post of usefulness. Being near the House of Rest, they have the privilege of attending the meetings there. One or two unfurnished rooms would be let to any Christian ladies, who could, if they wished, board with the household. One room is already taken as a studio by a young lady who gives lessons in painting and drawing. It is desired in this way to make the house nearly self-supporting. The address is 55, Chichester-road, Kilburn, N.W.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGES.

Within the quadrangle formed by the buildings of this Orphanage there were to be seen and heard throughout the afternoon and evening of Wednesday, last week, such sights and sounds as gladden the heart, and, as Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston said, prove the catholicity of Christianity. First, there were the buildings, wherein five hundred orphans have their homes, bright and radiant now with flowers, and every window of which was crowded with spectators looking upon the moving throng in the grassy area below. Save for one shower, the weather was lovely, and the whole aspect of the grounds, resplendent now with the gold and white blossoms of the laburnum and hawthorn, giving off a delicious perfume, marked this as a homely paradise. The festival this year received additional interest, from the celebration of the President's birthday, and the vice-president's jubilee; in front of the buildings were several inscriptions on coloured cloth, which, in words such as "God bless our President and Vice-president," bore testimony to this fact, and to the good wishes of all.

A great audience gathered in front of the platform at the time of the public meeting in the evening. On this platform there were representatives of three generations of the Spurgeon family, and many other friends, the chairman being Mr. Barrow, one of the deacons of Mr. James Spurgeon's church at Croydon. At the back was a well-executed bust of the vice-president of the orphanage, which was one of several presentations from the congregation and other friends, while an immense cake, presented by a boy and two girls as representative of their five hundred fellows, formed the tribute of appreciation of the boys and girls of the Institution.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon said: It is a grand thing, and a great privilege, to have something to do for the Lord Jesus. Even the beasts and the grass of the field receive from God; but to give back to God, this is a high proof of his love to us. Always have something to do for Christ, for thus you will develop graces. Faith unexercised is not faith; at any rate, it has to question its own existence. Faith exercised grows, and goes from strength to strength. Referring to difficulties in connection with the various works over which he presides, he said sometimes things go so easily that he almost longs for difficulties; for then is the time for more miracles, more wonders of God's providence. He paid a warm tribute to his brother, Mr. James Spurgeon, whom that day they especially desired to honour. In a few remarks, at a later stage of the proceedings, Mr. Spurgeon said that last year the committee received between six and seven thousand applications for admission to the Orphanage, and there were only vacancies for sixty; so that for every vacancy there were hundreds of applicants. He suggested also, to those who have means, that they should set themselves to think how best they could dispose of them. Many schemes came into his mind that he should like to see carried out. One was how to give a little help to the poor widows who, sometimes without money even for their 'bus fare, came to the office, but who yet have to be sent away without a hope for the admission of their child. Another was the erection of almshouses for some of their matrons and workers who from time to time become incapable of further work.

Mr. W. P. Olney read a congratulatory address to Rev. James Spurgeon, concluding by presenting to him, on behalf of the subscribers, the bust already referred to, and a cheque for £200. This having been gratefully acknowledged, the chairman, as representative of the congregation at Croydon, emphasised the warm appreciation which all who know him, whether as pastor or co-pastor, or as vice-president of the Orphanage, feel for the rev. gentleman. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes spoke in warm terms of the claims of this institution upon all the churches, pointing out that its unsectarian character is proved by the fact that there are more children of parents belonging to the Church of England receiving its benefits than there are of those belonging to the Baptist communion. The Orphanage, he said, is a glorious argument for Christianity, and he quoted, in conclusion, some words of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's, that he should never forget, "The God that answereth by orphanages, let Him be God." Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, of St. James's, Clapham, and Dr. Sinclair Paterson also joined in the congratulations, and in specially commending this truly noble work.

Rev. J. Spurgeon, senior, and Rev. C. Spurgeon, of Greenwich (the latter of whom had previously conducted an overflow meeting), by their voices, added to the harmony and enjoyment of the evening, and the proceedings were concluded by an effective illumination of the grounds.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

The twenty-fourth annual meeting of this Mission took place on June 7, at the Gospel Hall; Dr. Frederick C. Cory presided. The work of the Mission is well known to our readers. Through the earnest unremitting labours of Mr. W. J. Lewis (who through feeble health had to leave London for Ryde), and his successor Mr. J. Sharpless, with the fellow-helpers, much good has been done in alleviating the condition of the sick and poor, and leading them to a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. The superintendent gave a very interesting report of the twelve months' labour, which comprised: open-air services, working men's meetings, band of hope, children's services, lodging-house and dock labourers' meetings, mission for Jews, &c. Every Saturday evening tea and coffee is provided for about two hundred working men. Interesting narratives were given of those who had been rescued from lives of sin and misery.

Mr. R. C. Morgan expressed his very hearty sympathy with the work of the Mission. Referring to the labours of the past twenty-five years, he said there was great reason to thank God and take courage. A great deal depends upon the way in which a work is carried on. We especially want quality, as well as quantity. He exhorted the young men to trust in God, who would not allow the work to die. Mr. W. J. Lewis said that while listening to the brethren he thought, What wonders the Gospel has wrought in the neighbourhood! He had known the time when brick-bats, old tin kettles, rotten eggs, and flour, were hurled at them; men would even come into the hall with the intention to do him bodily harm, because he interfered with their sinful lives. Moreover, it was difficult to get helpers and supporters, the necessary means were so small that on his hands and knees he had to sweep out the hall with old rags, because they were not in a position to purchase a broom. He thanked God they were more ably supported now, and that they were in calm water. If it were not for his poor state of health, he would be amongst them again; his heart was with them and the glorious work they were engaged in, and he commended them to God, and wished them his blessing. Mr. George Holland and others addressed the meeting.

THE WOMEN OF CHINA.—In a little booklet containing letters from Mrs. R. Stewart, Foo Chow, there is much of interest concerning the women of China, and the way in which one and another of these is going forth from the training home over which Mrs. Stewart presides, to tell their sisters of the love of God in Christ Jesus. In the Home during the past year there have been about twenty women, whose chief study has been the Bible, of which few at first knew anything. The event of the year was the leaving of six women—four to be engaged in regular mission work, and two returning to their own homes, where, it is hoped, they will do all in their power to influence their heathen neighbours. The narratives given of these women, and the thought of their going out single-handed amongst the millions of their brethren and sisters to tell the story of the Gospel, cannot fail to enlist general sympathy, and that "help needed from you," which is the object of the little book. Further information on the subject can be obtained of Mrs. J. G. Watson, Hartwood, Woodford, Essex.

TWO CHRISTIAN RABBIS.

RABBI RABINOWITZ.

Rev. Dr. Saphir has forwarded to us another letter from Rabbi Rabinowitz, dated Kishineff, May 17, in which he says: The Lord's cause is daily increasing. Every Saturday many very earnest and very respectable Jews come to our place of worship to listen to the Gospel of Christ. Who would have predicted the time when Russian-Jews would push each other for the sake of obtaining New Testaments from the hands of one of their own brethren who is preaching the Gospel publicly? Who would have thought that night after night Jews would steal into a house in order to listen to the Gospel of the Lord Jesus, with a view of obtaining through it life eternal? But "with God all things are possible."

During the Passover season one Jew sent ten roubles to be distributed among the poor of the congregation of the "children of the New Covenant," with the following remark:—"Formerly, even when I earned thousands, I was unable to give any charity out of it; but since I received the New Testament from Mr. Rabinowitz, although I earn only hundreds, I can do it very easily, and it is with my whole heart that I give ten roubles for the sake of the Lord Jesus, who taught us to do good to all men. I trust that in the future He will enable me to assist my believing brethren according to my heart's desire." As far as I am aware, adds Mr. Rabinowitz, this is the first time that a Talmudical Jew has rendered assistance to his brethren who are believers in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. Rabinowitz is very anxious that a new place of worship should be built as soon as possible. The present one (for which he pays £50 a year) is too small to hold the large number of those who come to listen to the Gospel, and to join the community. He also says he is greatly in need of Judeo-Polish and Russian New Testaments.

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN'S WORK.

Rev. C. A. Schönberger, missionary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, recently went to visit Rabbi Lichtenstein at Tapio-Szele. The visit at first appeared rather untimely, for the Rabbi's only son, a young medical doctor, was on the brink of death, but this dark cloud of affliction only served the more clearly to show that the Rabbi is indeed taught by the Spirit of Christ.

In conversation, Rabbi Lichtenstein said that his aim in writing the pamphlets, thousands of which Mr. Schönberger has himself distributed among the Jews, was to make the name of Jesus known and loved among them, and to impress them with his Gospel as the divine source of regeneration for Israel, as well as for the Gentiles. He spoke also of the trials he has had to pass through because of his stand for the truth, telling how on one occasion he was visited by three Rabbis who left nothing undone to make him recant, and how one of them, seeing their efforts were futile, asked privately for a New Testament, that he might see for himself what it was that could convince this old Rabbi of the truth of Christianity and make him so boldly confess Christ.

Mr. Schönberger was permitted to see the dying son, who said it had been his cherished hope to become the stay of his parents, especially after the publication of the pamphlets which so roused Jewish hatred against his father. He described how he himself, when practising at Pesth, was greatly troubled about these at first, and said it was not till he received his father's answer to a letter on the subject that his doubts were dispelled, and he was fully convinced that his father followed, not men, but a higher power, in raising his voice for Christ. Then Mr. Schönberger spoke to the dying young man of the love of the Saviour, and his power to save, and left him greatly comforted. Two days after, he died.

Mr. Schönberger, previous to his present appointment, had worked at Prague, where his labour was greatly blessed. Last year seventy-four Jews were admitted by baptism into the Christian Church in Vienna, and twelve of these were the direct fruit of the labours of Messrs. Schönberger and Weiss, his co-worker. The firstfruit of Mr. Schönberger's labours in connection with the British Society was Mr. Venetianer, one of the honoured pastors in Trieste, and a prince of preachers, who reviewed Rabbi Lichtenstein's pamphlet, "My Testimony."

CHRISTIAN WORK IN VENICE.

Mr. E. A. Newbery, writing from this city of the Doges, says:—As many of your readers visit this beautiful city in search of sights, may I call their attention to a place, not down in any of the guide-books, which will please the traveller, especially if a lover of God and his Son, our Saviour. I refer to the Industrial Home for Destitute Boys, carried on by Mrs. Hammond, with Signor Bernatto as manager, in Canareggio S. Giobbe, No. 923. Here will be found forty-four boys saved from the gutter, now being educated for time, and polished and modelled for eternity. Some of the wood-carving done by these boys is excellent, and a specimen of their work in the shape of a very handsome book-case is to be seen in the exhibition. A visit to the institution will be an encouragement to the workers, who have many difficulties to contend with in this land, unknown to like institutions in Protestant countries. Thousands who come to visit the ruins of Italy take away jewels, antiquities, and works of art, and forget (perhaps through ignorance) to call and see these worthy institutions and missions, which seek to aid weeping hearts almost too feeble to cry out for succour.

A GOOD WORK IN NORTH LONDON.

It will encourage and stimulate Christians in other districts to hear of what God is doing for friendless and fallen girls at Hornsey-rise. Some members of the Finsbury Park branch of the National Vigilance Association have for some time been anxious to bring some of these sisters under the influence of Christian kindness and love. It was resolved to take a house for that purpose in Hanley-road. God inclined the heart of a devoted Christian lady (Mrs. Bailhache) to offer her services gratuitously as "mother" in the Home. She is nobly devoting herself to the good work, and already the tokens of success and blessing are manifest. Although the Home was only opened in February it is now overcrowded, and we are feeling the need of more suitable premises. A large percentage of those received have professed to find in Christ a Saviour from sin, and are bringing forth "fruits meet for repentance." Several have been placed in good situations, where they are endeavouring to "adorn the doctrine of Christ."

Mrs. Bailhache, Alpha House, 43, Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, N., will gladly receive parcels of clothing for the use of the inmates, and any other help that friends may be disposed to render.

THE CHRISTIAN PUBLIC OF CANADA, says The Faithful Witness, is now enjoying a rich treat in the presence and words of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, of London. His lectures and Bible-readings are everywhere well attended, and we have reason to believe that his visit will be productive of much spiritual benefit.

BOHEMIA, ST. LEONARDS.—In this district, about eighteen months ago, a God-fearing policeman, who for some time previously had been labouring on behalf of those who attended no place of worship, commenced evangelistic services, of an undenominational character. The effort was blessed of God, many persons being led to Christ as their Saviour, and a thanksgiving service fitly closed the first year's labours. Since then the work has been extended to other parts of Hastings, where twenty-one meetings are now held weekly, for which this devoted man, who has now left the force, is responsible. Any further information may be obtained of Mr. Rowse, 116, Bohemia-road, Hastings.

TURKISH MISSIONS.

Lord Ebury presided over a most interesting and important meeting of the Turkish Missions Aid Society held at Exeter Hall on Friday last. Rev. T. W. Brown (the secretary) read the report, which was rightly described by a subsequent speaker as one of thrilling interest. In it there is an account of the three months' tour recently made by the secretary in the countries around the eastern shore of the Mediterranean. Speaking first of Egypt, where the chief agency is that of the American brethren, he said that at Alexandria, Cairo, Asyout, and Luxor, he met hundreds of Christians efficiently taught, congregations listening eagerly to the word of life, individual Christians whose knowledge of Scripture is truly wonderful, earnest and faithful native pastors, and a system of education which, in its completeness and the spirit breathing through it all, gives assurance of great results in days to come. At Bethlehem, Miss Jacomb's Christian school is a bright spot; at Jerusalem, besides the German orphanages and Bishop Gobat's schools, there is a vigorous mission of the London society, which includes in its scheme of evangelistic effort a hospital for the poor Jews and two schools in which the Bible is the chief text book. At Jaffa, again, there are the C.M.S. mission, the Mildmay hospital, and Miss Walker-Arnott's orphanage. The American Presbyterian mission in Syria that is now "like a stately cedar of Lebanon," and Miss Taylor's school for Moslem girls, were described, as well as other parts of the work in Western Turkey and elsewhere.

Rev. Burman Cassin said he believed there were most glorious prospects before the Jewish people, who yet will become a whole nation of missionaries. Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell bore testimony to the Scriptural character of the work being done by the various Christian agencies. He dwelt especially on that of the American missions, established in Constantinople seventy years ago, and in Egypt thirty years. From the first their object has been to act on the principle of Erasmus, "give light." This has been done by circulating hundreds of thousand of copies of the Word of God, and it is this agency which has effected the changes now visible in the East.

Rev. Dr. Farnsworth, the head of the American missions at Cesarea, gave some valuable information showing the progress made since 1853. A great and glorious work, he said, is going on in Constantinople. Cesarea is one of the oldest cities of the world. The district of which it is the head-quarters, in the working of which Dr. Farnsworth is aided by two associates, includes in it the Iconium of St. Paul, and covers an area of 25,000 miles. Up to 1819 there was not a copy of the Gospels in any language that the people of the country could understand; last year, in the one district of Cesarea, 2000 copies of the Scriptures were sold. In 1853, only sixteen churches had been organised; now there are 152 churches, with a membership of nearly 9000, six hundred of whom were added last year. Dr. Farnsworth also spoke of the college at Aintab, of the famous Robert College, and the many high schools and other educational establishments, as showing how vast has been the influence exerted by Christianity during the past thirty years—an influence which is felt in the Armenian and Greek schools, and to some extent in the Mohammedan. Rev. W. Allan having pointed to many other places and institutions, not mentioned in the report, where splendid work for Christ is being carried on, Mr. Joseph Weatherly described what he had seen of work in the East, and said the attainments of these Syrian children in Scriptural knowledge put to shame that of the children in our own schools. It is evident that God is preparing that land for his coming.

REV. J. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN hope to visit India in October, for five months' work.

SOUTHSEA CONFERENCE.

No one present at the praise meeting, the morning after this sixth Southsea Conference, could go away with the shadow of a doubt as to the reality and greatness of the blessing which had been vouchsafed. The meeting was largely attended, and for a considerable time male and female voices, following each other in quick succession, audibly thanked God in a few brief sentences for some definite blessing received during the past three days. The liberty was very remarkable. Some praised the Lord that they were now able to believe Him, and as never before to trust his naked word. Many appeared to have obtained a more deep conviction of his power in them. "I am his," "I am thine, O Lord," were no uncommon expressions that morning. The fact that the glorious God Himself is the believer's portion had evidently been laid hold of with a firmer grasp of faith, and many were rejoicing, almost as in a new discovery, to find themselves possessors of such unsearchable riches and boundless resources. "The King is in the midst, and his reign is peace," was the grateful testimony of another.

The subjects proved most deeply interesting and very helpful. They were "The King"; "The Kingdom of the King"; and "The King's Subjects." You would not have room for even a brief sketch of the many valuable addresses by dear and honoured servants of God, whom He inclined to come to us. The afternoon Bible-readings by Rev. J. B. Figgis and Rev. F. B. Meyer were particularly valuable. The address of the latter at the closing meeting of the Conference, followed by some very solemn earnest words at the after-meeting by Rev. Evan Hopkins, excited earnest longings after what Mr. Meyer very happily called "the blessed life," distinctly showing it to be a privilege attainable, not by a few only, but by all believers. The introductory sermon of Rev. C. A. Fox and his address at the first meeting of the Conference made a deep impression. It was a great joy to have with us once again Mr. Hudson Taylor, and to hear from his lips fresh testimony to the faithfulness, power, and love of our covenant God. That the Jews were not overlooked anyone acquainted with our beloved brother, Rev. John Wilkinson, will be quite sure. But space would fail to name all the speakers, and to indicate the salient points in their addresses. Nor is it necessary, when it is the King's own message it matters little by whom it is delivered.

Many precious things were said. The following are just a few of these:—

"God does nothing but what, could we see the end, we should desire."

"He surrounds us with the circumstances which are best for us."

"It is better to love fellow Christians into truth, than to lecture them out of error."

"It is possible to live in Jerusalem and not to see the King's face" (1 Sam. xiv. 28).

"We must show our Christianity in our lives. Who has seen Christ in you to-day?"

"Unreality among Christians causes much scepticism."

"There have been fewer communicants in England each of the past three years for every 1000 of the people than there were in the preceding year. And why? Because (1) giving to the Lord is put in the second place, and (2) Christians are not obeying the command to 'go.' Giving brings increase; withholding, decrease. Christ emptied Himself, but God filled Him."

"Many Christians think they have to cast out lots of things, and that then Jesus will enter in. But if only you are willing to receive Jesus, He will come into your heart, and He will cast out all that ought not to be there. You have nothing to do with that. It is the Lord's work" (Zeph. iii. 15).

"At school I tried to imitate a friend of mine who could throw a cricket ball farther than any other boy; and when I learnt drawing I tried to draw the beautiful drawings of my master, but what a wretched imitation mine was in both cases. But if my friend could have put himself into my body and have thrown the ball by means of my arm, or if my drawing master could have become so identified with me that I could have drawn with his talent, the result would have been very different. The Lord Jesus is willing to come in and abide in me, and live in me the life He lived on earth."

"A friend of mine has a weather vane and whichever way the wind blows, N., S., E., or W., you see standing out distinctly the words, 'God is love.'"

"John vi. 56. You eat Christ's flesh by thinking of his words. You must read your Bible if you would be strong and well nourished....Get up early and do it. It is the secret of power."

"Phil. iv. 6. Careful for nothing. Prayerful for everything. Thankful for anything."

A LETTER FROM AUSTRIA.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

Though I have been a constant reader of The Christian for the last sixteen years, I cannot remember having seen many letters or articles in it from this country. Considering the fact that Austria is one of the greatest strongholds of popery, I cannot wonder at this. Yet, I regret it very much for two reasons. Firstly, because Austria is a large empire, which, together with Hungary, contains above thirty-six millions of people, of whom many "cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand," in the sense of Jonah iv. 11. Secondly, this large and comparatively dark part of Christ's vineyard is not altogether without bright oases, where the love of Christ has produced and is still producing the fruits of the Spirit. The few and solitary servants of the Lord, who are toiling for Him in these places, have to endure many hardships and hindrances, of which Christians in countries like England, where full religious liberty exists, can scarcely have an idea.

I was much pleased, therefore, to read a little while ago a letter that appeared in your columns, about one of these bright spots in Austria, viz., Gallneukirchen, near Linz, on the Danube. Having visited the place myself, I can testify to the great good that is being done there by Pastor Schwarz and his helpers. His Deaconess-house, "Zoar" (asylum for aged and sickly persons), and his Orphanage, are institutions of great spiritual and temporal blessing to the inmates as well as to the neighbourhood, and to the country at large. Several of his deaconesses have gone to Vienna, to the Tyrol (Meran), and other parts, and work as nurses to sick people, trying, by loving, tender care, by manual labours, as well as by kind and loving words, to serve Christ, and to lead souls to Him. Pastor Schwarz and his wife are serving the Lord with much earnestness and self-denial. The work in their hands is prospering, under the blessing of God. It is a "Mildmay" in miniature.

As the travelling season has come round I will add that Gallneukirchen is a large village (in England it would be called a town), about seven English miles distant from the city of Linz, which is in a lovely situation on the Danube, between Passau and Vienna, and can easily be reached by railway, either from Munich or Passau; also by the steamers which run on the Danube from Regedsburg viâ Bavaria to Vienna and Hungary. The steamboat trip on the blue Danube, with its picturesque scenery, is very pleasant, similar to a trip on the Rhine from Mayence to Bonn. From Linz an omnibus goes twice daily to Gallneukirchen.

The younger brother of Pastor Schwarz is also doing a good work at Waiern, near Feldkirchen, Carinthia. In that mountainous part of Austria, unfortunately, the people are great lovers of brandy, and the immorality and drunkenness are frightful. Pastor Ernest Schwarz, of Waiern, near Feldkirchen, Carinthia, and his wife, have for several years taken in and trained for Christ a number of poor neglected children, who were forsaken most cruelly by their brandy-loving parents, and would become an easy prey of Satan if no one took them up from the streets and high roads. Pastor E. Schwarz has done this for about ten years, and has at present over forty children in his refuges. His heart longs to take in dozens more of these poor, wandering lambs, but means are scarce with him. The dwelling in which these poor children hitherto lived is far too small, and Pastor Schwarz wishes much to build a house for them. A small farm has been offered to him at a reasonable price, and if he gets the necessary money he will arrange it for a home for these destitute children.

I am grieved to see the triumphant tone in which the Jesuitical papers of this country speak of Bismarck's recent peace with the Pope, and his leaning upon Rome as an assistant against the enemies of the present German Empire. I fear much that Bismarck, or his successors, will have an experience similar to Hezekiah's with regard to Egypt (2 Kings xviii. 21). Meanwhile, the Romanists are using this new and surprising attitude of the great Chancellor for their own ends, and it may be that Bismarck will do more harm to the cause of the Gospel in his latter years than he has done good hitherto. Protestant Christians in Germany and Austria are greatly alarmed at his new policy.

The recent visit of the Queen of "Protestant England" to the monastery of Chartreuse, near Aix-le-Bains, is also much commented upon on the continent. The Papists are highly pleased, and foretell the coming return of England and her royal family into the bosom of the "only true Christian Church" of Rome! Christ's disciples feel sorrow and shame at these things, but, at the same time, we trust in Him, who said, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (Luke xii. 32).

PRINCESS LOUISE HOME.

The annual meeting of this Home in connection with the National Society for the Protection of Young Girls, was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday last, under the presidency of the Marquis of Lorne. The number of inmates during the past year has been ninety, and the report states that of the 1490 girls admitted since the establishment of the society 1100 have been sent into service. The new laundry, recently built at a cost of over £300, has been valuable as giving industrial occupation to a number of the girls, and this, the Chairman said, will, it is hoped, be a source of very considerable income in the future. The work of the year has resulted in ten girls being placed in good situations after periods of training averaging three years and four months, in twenty-one others being restored to their friends, and included that of meeting many at the railway stations and caring for them when necessary.

Rev. Canon Nisbet, Vicar of St. Giles's, said the first principle of the Home is that prevention is better than cure. In proof of the great need there is for such work, he said that some time since, being commissioned by the then Bishop of London to inquire into the condition of the large shops in London, one employer told him that he had one hundred "young ladies" living indoors and regularly engaged, whose character was unexceptionable. But besides these he also employed, as necessity required, five hundred "hands." "You should look after such as these," he added, "for, to a great extent, they are earning the wages of iniquity." Rev. J. F. Kitto urged that the maintenance of this and similar institutions is a matter of the greatest public importance, and said there is no better investment for the philanthropic than what they afford. Mr. Jacob Montefiore and others also bore testimony, from personal knowledge, to the value of this work. The Home is at Woodhouse, Wanstead, Essex.

PARIS.—At the opening of the Protestant Mission House, Boulevard Arago, the meeting was crowded and enthusiastic. The building will be the centre of operation for the Protestant missions of France; there, the young missionaries will be educated for their work; they will also be taught manual trades in the lower part of the house which consists of workshops.

"There are few biographies that contain so many lessons, and withal so many warnings, as that of Jacob. In re-telling the story of Jacob's life, Mr. Meyer has done a good service; especially to young men, to whom we heartily commend the book."—Primitive Methodist World.

"The author has contrived to adapt the incidents of Jacob's life to modern times in a very entertaining manner. Mr. Meyer's style is calculated to make the Bible and its characters live in the hearts of his hearers."—Literary World.

"No one can read these pages without being edified. The author's style is clear, vigorous, and interesting, and a thoroughly evangelical tone pervades the book. He gives one piece of practical advice to ministers of the Gospel, which many of our readers will be glad to see reproduced here: to recruit a dwindling congregation; to sustain interest in a crowded one; to awaken new devotion to the Bible; and to touch the many chords of human life—there is nothing to be compared with a reverent re-telling of the Stories of Bible Heroes and Saints."

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

This patient's father and mother are members of the Church at Ballinluig, Perthshire, and were recommended by the Rev. D. G. FORBES, of that place.

The case is one of much interest. It was brought to my notice in June, 1886, by Mr. Duncan Stewart (the father). His daughter had been ill for ten months. She was then sixteen years of age.

It commenced through her getting wet, which brought on cough, with spitting of blood, pains in the chest and side, short breathing, &c. These symptoms continued, and soon were followed by great loss of flesh and much weakness. Two doctors reported the left lung diseased. "They did what they could (the father says), but no lasting good. She always got worse again."

A letter of full advice was sent at once, with medicine and prescription for the spitting of blood. (Fluid blood was being brought up every day.)

A month passed with little perceptible improvement, except that the "spitting of blood had decreased."

Aug. 31.—"Slight general improvement—still less spitting of blood."

By Oct. 26 her father was able to report:—"My daughter is decidedly improving; and gaining flesh fast. The colour is returning again into her cheeks."

Dec. 26.—"Nearly well again. Cough gone. She has gained more flesh."

March 11, 1887.—The father writes:—"My daughter is quite well now; no relapse through the winter."

The last letter (dated April 15) reads as follows:—

"Dear Mr. Congreve,—With the greatest pleasure I am able to inform you that our daughter is now in good health. She is a wonder to all who see her. Please accept my sincere thanks for your kindness and advice from time to time. I wish I could spread the fame of it throughout the world. I believe it an effectual cure for consumption, and would earnestly urge every sufferer from chest disease to give it a patient, persevering, and hopeful trial. May God spare you long! You can publish the case far and wide.—Yours gratefully, DUNCAN STEWART, RIEMORE, DUNKELD."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

AN influential and well-attended meeting on behalf of this Mission was held on Wednesday last week in the drawing-rooms of Mr. Whaley B. Nutt, the Grange House, Edinburgh. Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart., who presided, spoke of the importance of city missions in all large towns, but especially in Paris, which wielded a vast influence, and was regarded by Parisians as the centre of the world. The Paris Mission was not antagonistic to the other missions in Paris, but was an auxiliary to them by supplying them with missionary visitors. No expense for renting halls was incurred, as the halls of Mr. McAll and of Miss de Bröen were always available for the Paris city missionaries. At the conclusion of these meetings the missionaries visited the homes of the people who attended, and urged the claims of the Gospel. Seven agents were employed, but this was not considered a perfect number, as seventy men were needed for Paris.

After devotional exercises conducted by Rev. J. W. Grant and Mr. Nutt, Mr. W. J. LOCKIE, the Paris Secretary and visitor to the English in Paris, made a statement as to the origin and progress of this society. It commenced in 1879 at a meeting presided over by the Rev. Dr. A. N. Somerville. Three missionaries were appointed in 1880, then five, and now seven were at work. Six of these visited the homes of the French. One only visited our own fellow-countrymen, whereas at least three English missionaries were required. There were two millions of souls in Paris, and seven Paris pastors had been waiting for six years for agents. Mr. Lockie hoped that his visit to Scotland would be the means of increased resources, and enable the Mission to increase its staff of missionaries. He gave some interesting details of cases of conversion, and trusted that this would be a year of Jubilee not only to Her Majesty the Queen, but to many poor souls under the bondage of sin, superstition, infidelity, and indifference.

Rev. Dr. A. N. SOMERVILLE, Glasgow, said Paris was an extraordinary city—beautiful but wicked. There in Paris grew rank atheism and unblushing infidelity, yet there was a Gospel light shining amidst the darkness. In 1879 he had held a six weeks' mission in Paris for the English, and had visited all the mission-halls of Mr. McAll. Mr. Lockie had acted as translator for him on one occasion. Paris reminded him of the Pillar of Cloud and of Fire. On one side all was dense darkness, on the other side bright light. He could testify that the Paris City Mission was no hindrance to Mr. McAll or the other Christian workers, as all work together in harmony. The Paris City Mission aided the missions by providing missionaries — and the directors of the missions opened their halls for the Paris missionaries to speak in. The Paris Mission thus co-operated with all Christian workers as an auxiliary force. Help was needed to extend the work—aiding the Paris City Mission they aided all the other good works. He asked every one to do what he could to assist the French Christians. At the foot of a giant mountain in the south of France he had heard the echoes of a horn—a few rough notes changed into chords of the most exquisite harmony. They rang out again and again—lingering between precipice and peak—in long-drawn-out sweetness like an Æolian harp. Thus might each pastor, each missionary, and each individual church member echo forth the Gospel, and echoes would come back from the Rock of Ages.

Rev. Dr. TEAPE said he had most carefully examined the basis of this Mission, and found that it was a Mission uniting clergymen and ministers of all evangelical denominations—each representing different sections of the Christian Church, but working together in harmony and sympathy with each other in the face of a common foe. This was as it should be. He found that seven missionaries had made in one year over 7000 effective visits, and nearly 1000 visits to the sick and dying, and that each missionary, brought nearly an average of twenty persons annually to join the church. This was therefore a real living work. The French pastors had shown their deep appreciation of it by raising £346 against £446 contributed by British Christians. Rev. Mr. BLYTH gave an interesting account of his visit to France and Belgium, and described the efforts and prayers of the Jesuits for the conversion of Great Britain to Romish superstition.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

LAST week the annual meeting of the Society for promoting this object was held at 118, Westbourne-terrace, Hyde Park, when there was a large attendance of ladies and others. Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton presided.

The annual report presented by Miss Webb took an interesting review of the labours of the fifty-three years which have elapsed since the Society was established. It was formed for the purpose of giving instruction to women in the Zenanas of India, and in their own homes in China, and is, in fact, the oldest Zenana Society in existence. The work of the Society was thus summed up: Zenana Missions, Medical Missions, Village Missions, work among the crowds assembling at native festivals, house and hut visiting, boarding, day, infant, and Sunday-schools, Bible and sewing-classes, training native Zenana missionaries, district visitors, schoolmistresses and Bible women, mothers' meetings; also branches of the Bible and Prayer Union, and the Young Women's Christian Association. At the present time the staff of European missionary ladies consists of forty; the number of Zenana ladies under instruction is above 2300, and those in the schools in all the countries mentioned, conducted by their own missionaries, or by the wives of missionaries who receive assistance from the Society in grants of money, or of boxes of work for sale, amount to over 17,000. There are thousands now gladdening the hearts of those who led them to the Saviour, adorning his doctrine, and working in his service.

The Chairman having heartily commended the work of the Society, Rev. Dr. Bennett said that last winter it was his privilege to visit Palestine, where he saw something of this Society's work, and which made a deep impression on him. One of the great difficulties of the work in Palestine was the opposition of the Government of the country to it. It seemed to him that the object of the Government of the country was not to develop its industry, but to do everything possible to hinder its prosperity. Rev. Dr. Syle, late professor of moral philosophy in the Imperial University of Tokio, trusted friends at home would feel called upon to do their utmost for India, China, and Japan. He believed that the Society was engaged in one of the best works in the world. Rev. D. Barry said he had seen the Society's work at Hong Kong, Foochow, Ningpo, and elsewhere, but he had been chiefly interested in the work in North India. While thankful for the work of ladies, he could not help thinking that their prayer should be for a native Luther to rise up in India. He believed there were vast numbers of men in India who believe in Christ secretly, and who have given up the worship of idols. Rev. T. W. Brown (Turkish Missions Aid Society) added a few words of hearty sympathy with the work in which they were engaged, and bore testimony especially to the efforts which were being made in Bethlehem.

SERMON LANE MISSION.—We are glad to learn that after more than three years of prostration and suffering, Mr. George Fuller has now so far recovered his wonted strength as to be able to attend all the meetings of the mission-hall. He desires Christian friends to join with him in thanksgiving for his restoration. He writes: "I desire to express my deep gratitude for the kind help sent for our work during my long affliction. Not one branch of the Mission suffered. All the meetings have been well attended, especially the Gospel meetings on Sunday and Tuesday evenings." The Mission is situate at 54, Liverpool-road, Islington, N.

IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY,

JUNE 21, 1887

WITHOUT, the trumpets blare
The slow procession moves
Along the aisle.
The Queen the nation loves
Enters the temple where the crown was set
(Its radiance lingers yet)
Upon her brow.
Silence awhile,
The throng is kneeling now—
And then a sound of prayer,
Of thanks for blessèd years.
And hush'd are human fears
While Heaven nears,
For God is there.

Yes! He is here, as where
The two or three
Meet in the upper room;
Is there for hearts that long,
For eyes that see,
For ears which listen for the eternal song.
Time seems a fleeting veil,
Earth's glories pale,
And far and faint we seem to hear,
Yet drawing near,
A trumpet sounding in a city fair.
The trumpet's silver sound of Heaven's Year
Of Jubilee.
Far off it tells us of a world's release,
And Heaven's depths of peace,
And echoes in our hearts—"Prepare, prepare!"

BISHOP TAYLOR IN LIBERIA.

TO-MORROW is the day when (D.V.) the ss. Nubia, containing our steamer, stuff, and a force of missionary recruits, for the Kassai country, is to pass this port, and pick me up. I arrived in Monrovia, on this trip, Jan. 26, so I have been in Liberia three months and eleven days. About two months of this time I have devoted to the work of opening new missions among utterly neglected heathen tribes, most of them as destitute of clothing and of the knowledge of God as any of the Congo tribes, as far as I went up—330 miles—last year.

Most of my journeying was in an open boat, with a captain to steer and six men to pull the oars. I thus spent six weeks on the Atlantic border, and seventy miles up the Cavalla river. It is wet season here now, and I have failed to keep count of the number of thunder-storms that swept over us, and wet to dripping nearly everything we had, but I did not even take a cold. The king and chiefs bind themselves by written agreement to give us all the land we need, for all our mission and industrial-school purposes; to clear land and plant first crop of a great variety of food for our missionaries; to build good kitchen and school-house, of their sort; and to cut and carry heavy pillars, and all the framing timber required for an English-built house thirty-six by twenty-eight feet: and all free of charge. I agree to do all that remains to make and equip the mission. We hope (D.V.) to build seventeen houses between this and Christmas, and to occupy them by thirty new missionary men and women, by January, 1888. Pray for us.—Your brother,

WM. TAYLOR.

Cape Palmas, Liberia, May 7.

CHELSEA PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE HOME.—The report of the first year's work at this Home, while showing how much may be done by sympathy and kindness, is full of suggestion to those who, with a larger acquaintance with the dangers of life, have the oversight of girls. One case is mentioned where a girl had been discharged without her wages. Fortunately, she was seen when not knowing where to go, by another servant, who took her to the Home, where she was safe. Of such, known as preventive cases, there were received last year sixty-nine, and of these only fourteen are reported unsatisfactory. Over one hundred cases were dealt with in the rescue department, and with regard to these twenty-five are doing well in service, while to all a loving hand has been outstretched. The Homes are at 28, 29, and 30, Margaretta-terrace, Chelsea. The secretary is Miss S. Maulden.

☞ To prevent delay in the execution of orders, it is specially requested by the Publishers that all business letters may be directed to the firm (Morgan & Scott). Also that personal letters for either partner may be so marked.

☞ If this paper is not kept for reference, readers are requested to give it away, or send it to any minister, Sunday-school teacher, or other Christian, or to a workhouse, hospital, infirmary, or ship. Do not let it be made waste paper.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give a portrait and sketch of the late Rev. W. Pennefather, of Mildmay Park.

Many London friends may be glad to know that the Powis Hall, Powis Gardens, Bayswater, will be open for thanksgiving, prayer, and confession, on Monday, June 20, from 7.30 to 9.30 p m. Subject: "The Queen, the Country, the Church, Israel, and the Nations." Christians are cordially invited to join in the service.

We hope our London readers will bear in mind that in the metropolitan churches on Sunday next collections will be made for the public hospitals that are such an unspeakable boon to the poorer classes of the community. Perhaps no better Jubilee thankoffering could be made than a generous donation to these institutions, which, says Mr. Spurgeon, are among the best things humanity ever did for humanity.

France is now the country which devotes the most of her resources to war preparations; but it is not creditable to any of the European Powers that four and a half millions yearly should be expended in Europe upon armies and navies. The English war debt, however, amounts to only 55 per cent. of that of France, the Russian to 78, the Prussian to 29, and the Italian to only 40. When will the nations learn the folly of war? What an amount of suffering the expenditure in proper directions of that immense sum would alleviate or prevent.

In a remarkable leading article, The Daily Telegraph has called attention to the gratifying fact that during the Victorian era we have made great progress in regard to the exercise of kindness towards the "lower creation." Sixty years ago "the sentiments of pity and justice towards the lower creation which now exist, and are partially enforced by law, were hardly recognised." Although much of the improved condition of things is due to the spread of education and to religious teaching, the praiseworthy efforts of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty must be recognised as an important factor in the change.

A correspondent writes:—

> Please impress on your readers the desirability of rising above the worldling's pleasures on Jubilee day, and making it a special day of thanksgiving to the King of kings and Lord of lords for our many mercies as a nation.

We would add, that with thanksgiving ought to be mingled much humiliation of spirit and confession, in view of our many national sins of omission and commission.

We hear now of "the New Journalism," "the New Puritanism," "the New Democracy," and it might appear that this is the beginning of the New Age. Not so. These are only new forms of the old elements in their old condition. God knows of no newness except in resurrection. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creation; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new." Christ risen is the Firstfruits, and God of his own will brought forth his people, "that we might be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures." It is no mean thing to have learned that there is no hope in any other newness than newness of life. "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his DEATH? Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was RAISED FROM THE DEAD by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." The time is coming when God will fulfil his word: "Behold, I make all things new;" but first "the earth and all the works that are therein shall be burned up."

The gentleman who writes over the name of "Grant Allen," in dealing with the subject of "The progress of science from 1836 to 1856," must have startled even the readers of The Fortnightly Review; for in his paper he goes into unjustifiable ecstasies over his own statement, far more easily made than proved, that "the sum total of energy is a constant quantity throughout the cosmos." Mr. Darwin contented himself with the application of the evolution theory to man and animals; Mr. Allen is not satisfied with the great scientist's limits, and widens the boundaries so as to include the universe. There are old-fashioned scientific people, however, who had attained to much wisdom before Grant Allen had mastered his alphabet. They prefer to retain their belief in a creation, and in the inspired statements of the Bible with regard to it, rather than to follow those misleading theories which even Grant Allen, perhaps almost unconsciously, admits are to a great extent based upon "obscure half hints."

A paper in The National Review, by Lord Brabazon (who has now gone to the Upper House as Earl of Meath, and we trust will do good work there in the cause of religion and of the working classes), deals with State Colonisation. It need hardly be said that the writer pleads in a very forcible manner for the adoption of emigration schemes as one effective remedy for many of the evils which are now affecting society. It is certain that there are excellent precedents for such schemes being applied, and it is high time that something should be done to relieve the congested districts of our large towns.

Much has been said of late on the prevalence and the evils of betting, but we suppose few were altogether prepared for the revelations given in two issues of The Pall Mall Gazette last week. "A fool and his money are soon parted," says the old proverb. It is a sore enough evil under the sun when foolish people who possess worldly substance barter it away for the sake of a passing spasm of excitement. No man can properly "afford" to squander his means in that way; but this is true in a double sense of those who labour for their daily bread. The betting mania among such persons inevitably leads to neglect of duty, fraud, theft, drunkenness, and a host of kindred evils. The recent statements in our evening contemporary, and the police-court records, fully prove this.

One might expect that all the professed Christian teachers of the day would on every opportunity lift up a faithful testimony against an evil that works such widespread ruin in the community. We trust many of them are doing so; but Rev. W. Rogers, of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, evidently has no such burden laid on his soul. On the contrary, he compliments from the pulpit the Heir Apparent, in his own presence, for mixing with the crowd at Epsom Downs on Derby Day! Where would be the crowd at Epsom apart from the gambling attractions of the race? This utterance of Mr. Rogers is, therefore, a direct endorsement of gambling, with all its attendant follies and crimes. No wonder if the canker spreads in Society from top to bottom. Oh, for one year of faithful Latimer in St. Paul's Cathedral!

We hear a great deal about the value of horse-racing in developing fine breeds of horses, and with regard to its being a manly national sport. The other day the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals prosecuted a "gentleman rider" for cruelty in spurring a lame horse to the winning-post. A witness had counted twenty open wounds in the animal's side, and it was bleeding from the mouth and very lame. Yet the Clerk of the Course and other persons testified that "the horse was not unfairly ridden," and that the "spur marks" were "nothing excessive," and the magistrates dismissed the case. An amendment of the law would seem to be called for in regard to this amusement.

From an article in The New York Independent we learn that in the United States one-third of the population are put down as communicants of churches; that the yearly increase is 407,949, or forty-six every hour, and that there are 15,325 more church buildings than there were in 1883. All this, the above paper says, must be a mighty force in the education, civilisation, and elevation of the country, and speaks well for a people who have no "established" religion.

On the other hand, an editorial in The British Weekly declares that from the reports and statistics of the various Nonconformist bodies, including Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists, it appears that they are all either standing still or losing ground, while in England and Scotland the State churches are said to be increasing. The Salvation Army also, according to its leaders, is advancing rapidly. The decrease in Methodism is accounted for by the fact that many from among them have gone over to the Salvation Army.

Whether there is the actual difference between Great Britain and America which these respective statements suggest is doubtful. Another and (as yet) an unknown quantity may tend to equalise the two countries. It is that "a very notable feature of the religious work of our time is the extent to which it is carried on outside of our churches altogether." The attendances at mission and undenominational services are very numerous in proportion to the whole. This is more largely the case in England than in America.

Our contemporary adds the timely and true suggestion that

> The greatest of all questions to which the churches can turn their thoughts is, How far is the separate existence of so many denominations justified? In other words, the question of Church union is the first problem which will have to be faced by the Christian wisdom of our time...So far as Christian union can be obtained consistently with full loyalty to Christ, they (ministers) will gladly go. Each church has its own special witness to bear, and cannot compromise this.

We question the accuracy of this last remark. What special witness have any of the churches to bear which requires or even justifies division? It is not doctrine but method of government which divides them, with the single exception of the Baptists.

If the denominations were each a divinely-appointed witness for one section of the truth, there would be no division and no jealousy between them. To suggest that full loyalty to Christ is any barrier to Christian union, is in direct opposition to the prayer of the Lord Himself, "that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." Sectarian competition and the unnecessary multiplication of opposing "interests" and "causes" are serious hindrances to the Gospel, and tend to bring the name of Christ into contempt.

Our enterprising contemporary, The British Weekly, is repeating an experiment made some years ago by ourselves—viz., a symposium on The Lord's Second Coming: Is it pre-millennial or post-millennial? The first paper appears this week, and is by Rev. Canon Fausset, D.D. It is a succinct and lucid exposition of the pre-millennial view; it answers some questions, solves some apparent difficulties, and says, with reference to John v. 25—28:—

> Though in some passages, as John v. 25—28, the resurrection of the good and evil is conjoined as if simultaneous, it is the usage of Holy Writ to group together like events in one place, and elsewhere to expand in detail the compressed statement. The "hour" in ver. 25, referring to spiritual quickening of the dead, already comprises 1800 years and more; why should not the "hour" referring to bodily resurrection (ver. 28, 29) comprise a thousand years between the resurrection of the just at the beginning of the Millennium, and that of the unjust at the close, in harmony with Rev. xx.?

Rev. James Gall has lately published a treatise entitled, "Wherein Millenarians are Wrong: or, Christ's Second Coming proved to be impossible until the Father has made his enemies his footstool" (Hamilton, Adams & Co. 2s. 6d.). This objection is thus met by Canon Fausset:—

> The objection from Ps. cx. 1, that "Christ's second coming is impossible until the Father has made his enemies his footstool," ceases, if we view the words thus:—His sitting on the Father's heavenly throne includes both the time of his gradual subjugation of enemies even now, whilst He reigns unseen, and also the time of his consummating their subjugation, both at the beginning of the Millennium, when He comes as the Son of Man and the Son of David visibly to reign, and during the Millennium, and at its close. In Acts ii. 31—35 St. Peter regards His present sitting to be for the purpose of making His foes His footstool. Other Scriptures show that the consummation of their overthrow shall be partly just before, and chiefly just after the Millennium (Rev. xix., xx.). Though assuming David's throne in the Millennium, He as the Son of God never gives up his session on the Father's throne.

In his chapter on the Parable of the Leaven Mr. Gall commits himself to the extraordinary idea that leaven typifies the work of the Holy Spirit. Thus:—

> The loaves that were to be waved on the day of Pentecost were commanded, not permitted only, to be baked with leaven; evidently to typify the expansive and progressive character of the Spirit's work. The hundred and twenty disciples that were present in the upper room in Jerusalem were the little piece of leaven that was hid in three measures of meal, and the firstfruits of three thousand souls that were waved before the Lord on that day were the earnest of a world-wide harvest.

This exposition has the questionable advantage of being new, and the unquestionable disadvantage of being inconsistent with itself. If the leaven typified the character of the Spirit's work, it is difficult to see how the 120 disciples were the little piece of leaven. The character of the Spirit's work and the 120 disciples are scarcely synonymous and interchangeable terms.

Far more easy and natural appears to us the view that, as the Sheaf of firstfruits represented the Lord Jesus in resurrection ("Christ the Firstfruits, 1 Cor. xv.), no leaven was or could be used in connection with it. But the two wave-loaves offered seven complete Sabbaths afterwards as "a new meal offering unto the Lord"—which were also "for firstfruits unto the Lord"—represented the Church gathered in the upper room at Pentecost. The loaves were baked with leaven to show, in contrast to the Sheaf = Christ, that while there was no sin in Him there was inherent sinfulness in them. Thus a Divine protest was entered from the beginning against the fatal delusion that the sinful principle could be eliminated from human nature in the present life. We say fatal delusion, for its necessary result is the notion that the instincts and appetites, and therefore the deeds, of the body, are pure and holy, whereas the Apostle declares, "If ye THROUGH THE SPIRIT do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live." "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth" (Rom. viii. 13; Col. iii. 5).

Mr. Charles Cook's evangelistic work at Hyde Park Hall, and in the Metropolitan Mission Hall, is well known, especially to all who take interest in such work in the West of London. No other work has had the like acceptance in the same locality, and we regret to hear that it is seriously in need of support. We hope that Christians in the neighbourhood will help it by personal effort and otherwise, as they have opportunity.

The Christian World has great objection to "Heresy Hunting," on which subject an article and some correspondence has appeared in its columns with reference to Rev. Mr. Street's dismissal from the Congregational Church at Gerard's Bridge. Two correspondents sign a letter thus describing the preaching which gave offence:—

> That the death of Christ was unnecessary to our eternal salvation—that if three thousand Christs died, it would not make the least difference to us in any way...When Elisha made the axe to float on the water, Mr. Street said it was not a miracle, but the application of an unknown law, which everyone would understand and be able to practise some day. Balaam's ass he did not believe spoke, but that Balaam thought so. Noah's Ark he did not believe contained all the Bible said it did; and all the miracles which the Bible speaks of he laughed at, and said they were no such things, but the operation of this hidden and unknown law, which we should know some day—all this in a class where many could not read at all, others very imperfectly. All this teaching did nothing but darken their minds, instead of enlightening them.

We should not have thought it required much hunting to find out heresy in these outrageous statements. But another correspondent, in the same number, defends Mr. Street, by saying—

> Surely, Sir, we do not want a set of parrots in our pulpits who will repeat the phrases they have learned; but rather men who listen to the voice of God in them, and speak it out for Him! Mr. Street says that he holds and teaches the doctrine of the Atonement after the manner of Robertson, Beecher, and Hunter. I presume he uses his own words. Indeed, knowing the man, I am sure he does. Now, Sir, if Mr. Street is to be condemned for such teaching as that indicated by such honoured names, the sooner it is known that the majority of the present generation will stand by his side, the better—and I believe I might say, the majority of Congregational ministers.

Truly, the sooner it is known whether the majority of Congregational ministers are going to stand by such heresy as the above, and the sooner they distinctly repudiate it, as we cannot but believe they will, the better for their congregations and themselves.

The time has come for us to lay the claims of our City children before our readers. "A Day in the Country" is now an annual institution with most missions in London, and ardently longed for by the little ones. We trust that our friends will liberally contribute to our Day in the Country Fund, which will be divided amongst a number of deserving missions. The applications which reach us are so numerous that without a substantial sum in our hands it is impossible to render effective help to each.

"Only a Factory Girl" is the title of a story of exceeding pathos told by a young lady who with an elder companion spent a dark wet Saturday night, dressed as factory girls, visiting their low haunts, and learning how our poor sisters live under the shadow of our churches, and of comfortable homes. In our next we will give some extracts. Meanwhile for 3s. a dozen copies may be obtained from Miss Meredith Brown, 20, Upper Montague-square, W.

The Agapemonites find in Songs and Solos a verse which they sing with ecstasy, as upholding their unscriptural assumption of having attained the redemption of the body:—

> Free at last from all temptation,
>   No more need of watchful care;
> Joyful in complete salvation,
>   Given the victor's crown to wear.

But they do not give equal emphasis and prominence to the first verse, which shows that it is not to present attainments on earth, but to the bliss of heaven, that the hymn refers. This is the first verse:—

> Home at last on heavenly mountains,
>   Heard the "Come, and enter in."
> Saved by life's fair flowing fountains,
>   Saved from earthly taint and sin.

Those who, while in the body, think they are "free from all temptation, and have no more need of watchful care," will assuredly prove the folly of those who cease to watch while in an enemy's land.

DINNER TO WIDOWS.—On Monday next a dinner will be given by Mr. Holt, late of Sydney, to about five hundred widows, at Mr. W. Harrison's Mission-hall, in Soho, in commemoration of the Queen's Jubilee.

The Book World.

The range of this work is extraordinary. Professor Ebrard is erudite even for a German, and does thoroughly the work he undertakes. This volume contains, among other things, an exhaustive record of the religions of men in all ages—a library of information in itself, putting the reader abreast of latest modern discovery. It also deals in its earlier part in a vigorous and trenchant way with the assumptions of Darwin and Häckel, and with the false systems of Spinoza and Hegel.

We must avow especial gratification with this part of the work. The author writes with the confidence of a man who has mastered his theme and is in a position to demonstrate the justness of his cause. There is also a fine play of humour, which serves as a foil to its burden of erudition. All the well-known arguments and proofs of Darwin and his disciple Häckel are literally pounded to pieces, such as those based on the so-called laws of adaptation, heredity, struggle for existence, sexual selection, &c. A specimen or two of the robust and lively reasoning may interest our readers. Speaking of the whale's supposed origin from the hippopotamus, Prof. Ebrard remarks:—

> "But, then, the hippopotamus is by its structure compelled to go now and then to land, both to lay in a stock of breath and to gather food for itself, which consists principally of rice and sugar cane, and to a very small extent of fish. The idea that such an animal should, contrary to its nature, swim out into the sea in order to feed upon herring fry is therefore not even a hypothesis, but only a ridiculous and nonsensical fancy. . . .
> "The giraffe is supposed to have come by its long neck in this way: that after having eaten all the foliage on lower grounds and shorter trees, it was then obliged to stretch up its head to the higher branches; and having done so for many generations, it had new vertebræ gradually formed. But either every lower twig in the land inhabited by the giraffe had been actually eaten up—and in that case the first generation of giraffes, which could not in a day or a week acquire their long necks, must have perished of hunger; or there was so much feeding still within reach of the short necks that they might maintain their lives till the next spring; but, then, in the meantime new twigs would have been grown, for we must remember that Upper Egypt, with its luxurious vegetation, was the fatherland of the giraffe, and thus the necessity was gone for making the neck longer for at least another year. In order to make that giraffe hypothesis conceivable, it must be assumed that for 100,000 years no foliage had grown except on very high twigs, and that the height was always getting greater! Besides, a herd of animals failing any longer to find food in one district will rather wander into another region than pain their necks so fearfully by stretching and straining until new bones grow into them. This hypothesis, then, is just as absurd as it could possibly be."

From these quotations our readers may infer that this work is not only edifying in matter, but lively and robust in style. It is one of the best translations from the German we have yet seen; an apologetic work for the times; elaborate without being tedious, and by no means so formidable on acquaintance as the primâ facie view threatened.

SIX CHRISTIAN BIOGRAPHIES. By PETER BAYNE, LL.D. 5s. Duguid Bayne & Co., 173, Strand. These sketches, by a master hand, of the lives of Howard, Wilberforce, Chalmers, Arnold, Budgett, and Foster, are reproduced for the benefit of the younger generation of readers. Most splendidly do they repay perusal, not only for their literary excellence, but for their kindly impartiality of view and clear perception of the true dignity of life.

THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST. By Rev. ALEX. STEWART, LL.D. D. Wyllie & Son, Aberdeen. This treatise is controversial in character. It refutes, with unsparing logic and considerable philosophic breadth, the positions taken up by a Unitarian minister. Because of this it ought to be helpful to men whose faith in the Divinity of Christ is shaken by the subtle arguments of Unitarians. Christians will welcome it for its pronounced utterances on a fundamental truth, and for its reverent handling of sacred themes. Written in a vigorous style, and studded with quotations from scholars of recognised authority, it is well worth reading.

Mr. J. E. Hawkins sends four little text-books for daily reading, entitled severally, "Springs of Comfort," "Heavenly Dew," "Living Fountains," and "The Beauty of the King." 6d. each. The three former are very prettily got up in monochrome, and the verses and texts chosen are very appropriate. The name of these booklets will soon be legion.—JUBILEE ECHOES (3s. 6d.) contains a beautifully illustrated poem by Mrs. G. E. Morton. It is one of the most tastefully designed books in celebration of the Jubilee that we have seen.

ENGLISH HISTORY FROM CONTEMPORARY WRITERS. (1) The Misrule of Henry III., and (2) Edward III. and his Wars. F. YORK POWELL, Editor of the Series. 1s. David Nutt. These little volumes, which aim to set forth definitely the fact of our National History, may be patronised by a few, but will hardly be popular while such a book as Green's "A Short History of the English People" is to be had.

THE STORY OF THE LIFE OF QUEEN VICTORIA, told for Boys and Girls all over the World. By W. W. TULLOCH, B.D. Revised by Her Majesty. 3s. 6d. Nisbet. Two finely-executed portraits of our Queen adorn this handsome volume, and Her Majesty's autograph on the cover gives a sort of Royal authority to this, one of the best of the many stories of an illustrious life that have yet appeared. Having had the benefit of Her Majesty's revision it is a story that is likely to be true in all its details.

SOME NATIONAL AND BOARD SCHOOL REFORMS. By Lord BRABAZON. 1s. Longmans. If all the good, feasible, and much-needed things suggested by this wise little book could be put into practice at once, what a happy and useful member of society the Board School scholar would be! Here, in handy form, Lord Brabazon has collected some of the best and wisest opinions on this all-important subject—the physical, technical, and industrial training of boys and girls. Very properly a knowledge of things is insisted on, as well as a knowledge of books, thus making hearts and hands to be as important as heads in the start in life. May this little book stir many to action in a fruitful field of reform.

JOSEPHINE BUTLER: A Life Sketch. By W. T. STEAD. Morgan & Scott. The author's name is an ample guarantee that this book is not written in rose-water. The stirring events which cluster around the name of Josephine Butler are described with a graphic pen, and in language which is the transcript of righteous conviction and chivalrous esteem towards "the under half of the world," as Mr. Stead once described the sister sex. Himself no mean actor in certain episodes of the great struggle between weak and erring woman and brutal and still more guilty man, he is a fitting historian of the life-work of such a brave, self-sacrificing spirit. The last chapter is headed, "To arms once more," so that in due time we may hope to see an enlargement of this inspiring record of heroic deeds for God and humanity.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By Revs. C. J. ABBEY and Canon J. H. OVERTON. New Edition. 7s. 6d. Longmans, Green & Co. A most valuable handbook on a very important period. To understand the many phases of religious life in the nineteenth century it is absolutely necessary to study church history in the eighteenth. The present authors are reliable and competent guides. High Churchmen, Broad Churchmen, and Evangelicals will find a fair account of the principles they respectively contend for, and excellent portraits of representative men. Nonconformists will appreciate the justice with which their differences from Episcopacy are recorded. The mind argumentative will revel in chap. iii. on Deists, and chap. vi., on the Trinitarian controversy; the mind ecclesiastical will delight in chap. x., on Church Fabrics and Services; while spiritual readers will study with deep interest ch. ix., on the Evangelical Revival. A careful appendix, full list of authorities, and copious foot references complete this very useful book.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

ANOTHER KING. By Janet Eden. (Price 3s. 6d.) A beautiful story of love and devotion, of trust and truth, and of the victory of right principles. The writing is far above the average of such stories. TIED AND BOUND; or, The Story of Nan. By Evelyn R. Garratt. (Price 2s. 6d.) This story for girls ought to be in every Y.W.C.A. library. It relates the history of two lives; the one, happy and bright for God; the other, spent for self and to self. Many a girl will be able to see herself in Mira, but she and Nan, though very different characters, are at last brought to the all-sufficient Saviour. SUNDIAL COURT. By Lucy Taylor. (Price 2s.) A very touching story for young people, showing the power of the Gospel in the life of a poor child, and in changing the whole life-current of her father—a seemingly hopeless drunkard. TOM LARKINS; or, The Boy who was No Good. By C. A. Burnaby. (1s.) Tells of a boy who from mischievous ways is led to love and serve Christ. Of the "R. T. S. Library" (3d. and 6d.) we welcome the following volumes:—THE ORPHANS OF GLEN ELDER: A Tale of Scottish Life (6d.), and COWPER'S LETTERS, with biographical memoir. Edited by Dr. Macaulay.

MR. T. WOOLMER.

STEPHEN BLAKEMORE'S PROBLEM. By Edith Cornforth. A thoroughly well-written story, from a literary standpoint, but containing little backbone. CHIPS FROM A TEMPERANCE WORKSHOP: Readings, Recitations, and Dialogues. Edited by Oliver Pacis. Very suitable for Bands of Hope and Temperance Societies. It is forcibly illustrated, and will be a welcome addition to the répertoire of the young temperance orator at home or in public. POEMS. By A. B.-S. (2s. 6d.) A little volume of verse that doubtless gave pleasure to the author in writing, but which will not be greatly appreciated by others.

THE CRUCIFIED JESUS AND THE PENITENT THIEF. By Father Chiniquy. 1d. J. Kensit. This pamphlet puts unanswerably the arguments against prayers to the Virgin Mary.

"BEN AND KIT," "LITTLE JOE," "ROSE, ROBIN, AND LITTLE MAY," and "THE HIGHLAND SOLDIER" (1d. each. Holness), are interesting additions to the series of illustrated "Gospel Stories for Old and Young."

Our temperance friends are not behind in loyalty. THE VICTORIAN JUBILEE, an Ode to Britain, is a well-written little poem by Robert Seager. In booklet form, price 2d. National Temperance Depôt, 337, Strand, W.C.

ANSWERS TO INFIDEL OBJECTIONS. By W. R. Bradlaugh. 1d. J. Kensit. This pamphlet, the first of a series, will be helpful to those who are sometimes puzzled and perplexed by the ingenious sophistries current among sceptics.

THE DISCIPLE OF REASON AND THE CHILD OF FAITH. Andrew Stevenson, Edinburgh. This little book very ably points out that all inquirers are not incipien atheists, and the line that should be adopted in dealing with them.

THE LITTLE MESSENGER AND HIS MISSION (2d. S. W. Partridge & Co.), in the character of a Jubilee allegory for the people, sets forth some of the acts of love and mercy by which the Queen has endeared herself to the hearts of her people.

FELLOW HELPERS TO THE TRUTH. 3d. Unwi Brothers. In this address by Rev. Robert Sewell to the Berks, South Oxon, and South Bucks Association o Independent Churches and Ministers, the object is t check Rationalism amongst Nonconformists.

OUR INDIAN SISTERS. 3d. 2, Adelphi-terrace. In Nos 1 and 2 of this little periodical there is much interestin information on the condition of India's women and on Medical Missions to the women of India—informatio which should be widely disseminated amongst our ow people.

TEN YEARS EMPRESS: FIFTY YEARS A QUEEN. 6d Dean & Son. With numerous coloured pictures, t which are added stories of England's Royal Childre from William the Conqueror to Queen Victoria, successful effort has been made to produce a memen of our Queen's girlhood and reign.

"Active Service," by Percy A. G. Wood; "Letter to Friend on my Conversion," and "How I found Peace," b Cecil A. H. Wood, are envelope booklets, very likely t be helpful to some struggling in darkness. The firs named may be obtained of Messrs. Partridge & Co., an the other two of Mr. Holness (price 6d. per doz.), an Mr. A. E. Hartnoll, New Quay, Cornwall (price 9d. pe doz.).

TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE.—The Romis Church has always allowed its members to read certai portions of the Word of God, these portions bein chosen by the priests, translated by the priests; it h never permitted the reading of the Scriptures in i entirety. M. Laserre has received the Pope's permi tion and approval to circulate his translation of th Gospels. The "Holy Letters" are spoken of, but onl the four evangelists are translated; it is not in this pa of the New Testament, we find such passages "Confess your faults one to another," "Justified faith," "One sacrifice for sins," "One Mediator," &c. Le Christianisme.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JUNE 19.—PSALM CXXXIV.

The last of the Songs of Degrees, as well as of the second series which we have traced from Ps. cxxx. It presents three characteristic features of the position and occupation of "the servants of the Lord." First of all, theirs is service in the night time; secondly, it is spiritual service, prayer, and praise; thirdly, it is expectant service, "looking for that blessed hope," the Lord blessing his people out of Zion.

1.—Ye servants of the Lord, which by night stand in the house of the Lord.—"The night is far spent, the day is at hand" (Rom. xiii. 12). Service in the night time of "the darkness of the world" is that to which God's servants are now called. Standing is their proper attitude, for rest is still future (Rev. xiv. 13), and service "in the house of the Lord" calls for a reverential recognition of Him whose house it is.

2.—Lift up your hands in the sanctuary.—There is no "in" in the Hebrew, and the word for "sanctuary" means "holiness." It might be rendered, "lift up your hands of holiness," and to this apparently refers 1 Tim. ii. 8, "lifting up holy hands," in which passage the spiritual privilege of praying "everywhere" is contrasted with the Jewish limitation to the "Sanctuary." Another New Testament parallel is "praying in the Holy Ghost" (Jude 20). The Jewish attitude of lifting up the hands in prayer expresses expectation of receiving the blessings prayed for. The holiness of the hands is, however, an essential condition for such expectation. See Ps. lxvi. 18; John ix. 31; James i. 7. Prayer is to be accompanied by praise (Phil. iv. 6).

3.—The Lord that made heaven and earth bless thee out of Zion.—Corresponding to the two spheres of his dominion, there are two Zions, a heavenly as well as an earthly. See Heb. xii. 22; Rev. xiv. 1. It is from the heavenly that this final blessing may be expected (Rom. xi. 26). Thus the Lord's coming suitably crowns the expectation of his "night time" servants, and suitably closes a second series of Step Songs.

MONDAY, JUNE 20.—PSALM CXXXV.

The correspondence between this Psalm and the preceding one. in both commencement and ending, has led Hengstenberg and Delitzsch to regard this as a supplement to the former, and some view the two as making up one Psalm, this one having no title of its own. An interesting connection between them may be seen by regarding this as pertaining to the sphere of the earthly Zion, as the former to the heavenly. In other words, by taking it as a Millennial Psalm.

2.—Ye that stand in the house of the Lord.—There is no mention here, as in the last, of night time; for, if the view suggested above be taken, the night of weeping has given way to the morning of joy. The allusion to "courts of the house" is in keeping with the earthly sphere.

8.—Who smote the firstborn of Egypt.—Praise from the earthly Zion goes back to the formation of Israel as a nation when rescued from Egypt.

14.—The Lord will judge his people.—This verse is taken from Deut. xxxii. 36, and is quoted Heb. x. 30. Nearly the whole Psalm is made up of quotations from other Scriptures, as the references show. Delitzsch calls it a "mosaic."

21.—Blessed be the Lord out of Zion, which dwelleth at Jerusalem.—Mark the contrast to the close of the last Psalm. There it was a blessing expected (fut. tense) from the Lord out of Zion. Here the Lord himself is the object of the blessing, and that as dwelling at Jerusalem. There it was the hope of the Lord's coming. Here it is the Millennial reign.

TUESDAY, JUNE 21.—PSALM CXXXVI.

"In the liturgical language this Psalm is called par excellence the great Hallel."—Delitzsch. It consists of six triads of three verses each, followed by two groups of four verses.

10.—To Him that smote Egypt in their firstborn.—"Up to this point it is God the absolute in general, the Creator of all things, to the celebration of whose praise they are summoned, and from this point onwards the God of the history of salvation."—Delitzsch.

12.—With a strong hand, and with a stretched out arm.—Even thus it was in the deliverance of his people in the resurrection of Christ from the dead, wherein was shown the exceeding greatness of his power (Eph. i. 19).

13.—"To Him which divided the Red Sea into parts.—"Since it requires me to be an atheist that I may logically reject miracles, I prefer the far smaller difficulty of believing in the infinite power of God. He who causes the waters of the sea ordinarily to remain as one mass, can with equal readiness divide them."—Spurgeon.

25.—Who giveth food to all flesh.—"Israel's God is He who giveth Himself as the bread of life to the world (John vi. 51)."

26.—The God of heaven.—"This phrase is not found in the earlier Scriptures. We meet it nowhere else in the Psalms, but it is in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 23; Ezra i. 2; v. 11, 12; vi. 9; vii. 12, 23; Neh. i. 4; ii. 4; Dan. ii. 18, 19, 44; Jonah i. 9; Rev. xi. 13; xvi. 11."—W. S. Plumer. For his mercy endureth for ever.—Although many of the verses in which this refrain occurs describe rather acts of judgment than of mercy, even these spring from the abiding character of mercy to Israel, which shows itself in judgment upon their enemies.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22.—PSALM CXXXVII.

1.—By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion.—"They did not weep when they remembered the cruelties of Babylon; but when the beloved city of their solemnities came into their minds they could not refrain from floods of tears. Even thus do true believers mourn when they see the church despoiled, and find themselves unable to succour her. In these our times the Babylon of error ravages the city of God, and the hearts of the faithful are grievously wounded as they see truth fallen in the streets and unbelief rampant among the professed servants of the Lord."—Spurgeon.

2.—In the midst thereof.—"This is most naturally understood of the city of Babylon; which was nearly as large as Middlesex, and had parks and gardens inside it."—Kay.

4.—How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?—"The exiles in Babylon could not sing because they were in heaviness. God's hand was heavy upon them. He had a controversy with them for their sins. Songs cannot be drawn forth from the soul on which the load of God's displeasure, real or imagined, is still lying, or which is still powerless to apprehend the grace and the life for sinners, which is in Christ Jesus. And again, there is a land yet more strange and foreign to the Lord's song, even than the land of unforgiven guilt, and that is the land of unforsaken sin."—C. T. Vaughan.

5.—Let my right hand forget her cunning.—"The punishment perfectly accords with the misdeed. If I, misapplying my right hand to the playing of joyful strains on my instrument, forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand, as a punishment, forget the noble art, and let my tongue, misemployed in singing cheerful songs, forget its capacity to sing."—Hengstenberg.

7.—Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom.—In the great warfare between Israel and Babylon—the people of God, and the world under its prince—the merely professing church (Edom) is found the opponent of the true church.

9.—Dasheth thy little ones against the stones.—As it was foretold (Is. xiii. 16) would be done.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23.—PSALM CXXXVIII.

"This is an echo of the promise contained in 2 Sam. vii.; 1 Chron. xvii. The superabundant promises, which made the throne of David and of his seed an eternal throne, is here gratefully glorified."—Delitzsch.

1.—Before the gods will I sing praise unto Thee.—"Probably the meaning is 'Before,' or in presence of the gods of the heathen (i.e., in scorn of the idols who can do nothing), I will praise Jehovah."—S.C.

2.—Thou hast magnified thy Word above all thy Name.—"The promise to David that his son should have an everlasting throne. This transcended all that God had done or revealed in the past."—Kay. Though this be the special promise referred to, the truth conveyed by these words holds good of all the "exceeding great and precious promises" of God's Word, which are all Yea and Amen "in Christ Jesus."

8.—Forsake not the work of thine own hands.—"Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform (perfect, R.V.) it until the day of Jesus Christ" (Phil. i. 6). Those who accept the teaching of Scripture that all that the Christian can ever have within of good is "of God" and none "of self;" have in these words an argument of great value to plead before God.

FRIDAY, JUNE 24.—PSALM CXXXIX.

1.—O Lord, Thou hast searched me, and known me.—This thought of God's searching power makes this, "from a theological point of view, one of the most instructive of the Psalms."—Delitzsch. It can, however, only be enjoyed by those who are sheltered by the blood, and so able to stand so searching a contact with the light. See 1 John i. 7. Mark four divisions of six verses each.

6.—Such knowledge is too wonderful for me.—This refers to God's knowledge of his creature man, the verb "know" occurring three times in the previous verses.

7.—Whither shall I go from thy Spirit?—A new subject: God's omnipresence, as before his omniscience.

12.—The night shineth as the day.—"In Him is no darkness at all" (1 John i. 5).

13.—Thou hast possessed my reins.—A new subject: God's possession of his creature, founded on creation, with a mystical reference to the new creation in Christ Jesus.

15.—My substance was not hid from Thee, when I was made in secret.—Viewed as the language of Christ mystical, this and the next three verses have profound spiritual significance.

18.—When I awake, I am still with Thee.—"The same language before employed to express the resurrection hope (Ps. xvii. 15), when there shall be a further illustration of God's mindfulness of his purposes, and 'precious counsels' with respect to his redeemed, in anticipation of which they may repeat this Psalm with renewed feelings of wonder and admiration."—De Burgh.

19.—Surely Thou wilt slay the wicked.—"Wicked" is singular in Hebrew, as if including in one "the wicked one" and all his rebel crew; such coming judgment calls for present separation. Compare Numb. xvi. 26.

21.—Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate Thee?—The distinction between persons and things as objects of hate (Rev. ii. 6), was not known in David's time; for the word spoken in Matt. v. 44, "Love your enemies" had not yet gone forth.

24.—Wicked way.—Lit. "way of grief" (R.V.), taken by some to mean "way of pain," i.e., way leading to pain. But as the word is used (Isa. xlviii. 5) of idols, Gesenius and Rosenmüller render it "way of idolatry," a suitable termination of such a Psalm. See 1 John v. 21.

SATURDAY, JUNE 25.—PSALM CXL.

1.—Deliver me, O Lord, from the evil man.—The transition from the singular, "the evil man," to the plural following ("they have sharpened," &c.) illustrates the Hebrew mode of ideal expression, of which "the man of sin" (2 Thess. ii. 3), "the man of God" (2 Tim. iii. 17) are instances in the New Testament.

4.—Who have purposed to overthrow my goings.—We may be thankful that such purpose cannot prevail against those who are "called...according to his own purpose and grace" (2 Tim. i. 9); or against Him, who can say, "As I have purposed, so shall it stand" (Isa. xiv. 24).

7.—Thou hast covered my head in the day of battle.—"He protects the head of his anointed against the deadly blow."—Delitzsch. The head of the great enemy is to be crushed (Gen. iii. 15), but not that of his opponent, whose heel only is to suffer. How truly can Christians use this verse of Christ their Head. Whilst of the world and their head (1 John v. 19, "in the wicked one," R.V.) verse 9 stands true.

11.—Let not an evil speaker.—Lit. "man of tongue." See Isa. liv. 17, and Rev. xii. 10, 11.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE AT CAMBRIDGE.

BY AN UNDERGRADUATE.

A REMARKABLE Conference was held at Cambridge last week with the object of directing the widespread missionary interest here into the most practical of all channels, viz., that of facing definitely our responsibility in regard to our Lord's last command, "Go ye out into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." It had long been felt by many undergraduates that the time had come for pressing home the deep interest aroused of late years by the going-out of men who were personally known to many of us for their power and holiness of life, and who have left an ineffaceable stamp upon Christian circles in the University, and the sudden death of one whose bright, manly face was so well known here, occurring just before the circular was issued, came as a direct message to us from the Lord of the harvest.

It would be impossible to give in a small space even a summary of what was said by the speakers. We heard much, both of difficulties and encouragements in work, of scope for the employment of the most varied talents, of open doors, and the urgent need to take advantage of them at once, of the fierce temptations with which the great adversary assails the missionary, and of the Saviour's special manifestation of Himself, according to promise, to those who leave home and kindred for Him.

But perhaps the keynote of the whole was the need for absolute consecration, and the power of the Spirit, before anyone seeks to attack the kingdom of Satan in his own strongholds; for holiness of life and rich knowledge of the Scriptures, if the teacher is to lead his converts into the fulness of the Gospel of Christ. In spite of numerous examinations and the many attractions of the "May week," not only was the attendance good, but the interest grew and deepened every day. The Spirit's presence was most manifest in the intense earnestness that characterised especially the closing meetings; and God set his seal to the effort by much blessing given.

Further opportunities of hearing the missionaries were well responded to, Dr. Bruce and Dr. Maxwell speaking to a number of University men at the close of a public breakfast, a final meeting being also held on Saturday morning in Corpus. Besides these an after-meeting was held at the close of the Friday evening meeting, conducted by Mr. Meyer, who urged all present to definitely dedicate their lives then and there to the Master's service, and say "Here am I, send me," to his call "Who will go for us?" Mr. Wilmot Brooke then read 1 Cor. ii. 1—2, urging as the one qualification for missionary work the renunciation of every ambition in life except that of making known Christ crucified.

One undergraduate present told of the removal of the hindrance to his own obedience to the command, "Go ye out," by the light that had flashed upon him that very day, that, with the command "Abide in Me," Christ at once gives a willing heart the power to abide, so that he was now ready gladly to go anywhere at the Master's call. After silent prayer, all present then laid themselves at Christ's feet for service, singing on their knees—

> Were the whole realm of Nature mine,
> That were an offering far too small;
> Love so amazing, so divine,
> Shall have my soul, my life, my all.

The closing meeting next morning, though quite small owing to shortness of notice, seemed to crown all: no less than fifteen out of about twenty undergraduates present, stood up and expressed their willingness to go out to the foreign mission field, if God should open the way. Let us pray that He will make it plain to each one where He would have them work for Him.

One word as to the lessons of this Conference. We are beginning to understand that it is not merely a high privilege, but the bounden duty of Christians to take up missionary work as well as home work, that the Church's obedience to her Lord's command must be brought about by the obedience of individuals; that our duty is not to Christianise nations, but to win individual souls for Christ, and preach the Gospel as a witness in all lands; and, lastly, that our unquestioning obedience must bring a reflex blessing upon our own country. It now remains to act upon these truths. The news of the great missionary awakening in America, which has led so many hundreds of students—men and women—to dedicate themselves to Christ for the evangelisation of the world, came like a thunderclap upon us in the middle of the Conference. May the news rouse us all to a holy rivalry with them in the Master's cause!

IRISH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland has been in session in May-street Church, Belfast, during the past week, and has been attended by a large number of ministers, elders, and of the general public. Rev. J. H. ORR, D.D., of Antrim, who has for many years acted as clerk of the Assembly, was unanimously chosen Moderator for the current year.

A lengthened and animated debate took place at an early sitting on the subject of gambling at bazaars for the purpose of raising money for religious purposes, and the subject was referred to a committee. Rev. Dr. Rogers presented the report of the committee on the state of religion and evangelisation. He dwelt on the importance of congregational prayer-meetings, of co-operation on the part of elders in Christian work, and upon the grand aim of all Church effort—the salvation of souls. Profitable addresses were delivered by Rev. J. W. Whigham on the work of grace in the south and west; by Revs. H. M. Williamson and H. Montgomery on the work of grace in Belfast; by Rev. W. J. Patton on Revival work in County Down; by Revs. S. R. Henry and R. Barron on Revival work in County Antrim, and by Rev. Dr. Mutchmore of Philadelphia, delegate from the American Presbyterian Church, on the developement of Divine grace in America.

There was no burning question before the Assembly this year, and all the proceedings were marked by earnest consideration and brotherly love, and gave promise of a year of much spiritual blessing.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The annual sermon was preached on Sunday evening in New Court Chapel, Tollington-park, by Rev. J. Ossian Davies, the pastor, to a crowded congregation, from the familiar and appropriate story of Jonah's mission to Nineveh. After dealing with Jonah's sermon and its striking effects, the preacher sketched the history of open-air preaching, and closed by pointing out the difficulties and advantages of this method of evangelising. At the close a considerable number of the congregation adjourned to Oxford-road, one of the entrances to Finsbury-park, where they held a capital open-air service, one of two regularly sustained by this active congregation, who thus put in practice the exhortations of their pastor.

MR. GEORGE MULLER, of Bristol, returned to Bristol on Monday evening, after a preaching tour of 37,000 miles. For the past twelve years he and Mrs. Muller have travelled no less than 130,000 miles, and addressed congregations numbering in all over a million persons. His present tour has been to the United States, where he had intended spending the winter in preaching. Yielding to a pressing invitation from Australia, he went by way of San Francisco to Australia and to New Zealand, thence to the Straits of Malacca, Japan, and China, and returned through Europe, thus having completed a preaching tour round the world. Although eighty-two years of age, he is now strong and hale, and says he has experienced no fatigue from his preaching labours. On Monday evening he was heartily welcomed by the 2000 children on his return, after this his longest absence since he founded the institution.

NORMAL COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND.

THE first of a series of special gatherings arranged by the executive took place at Upper Norwood on Saturday afternoon last. The invitation was responded to by a large number of persons, who were thus privileged to inspect some phases of training for the blind which have been considerably developed in the last three years, and which were in process of illustration in various parts of the extensive and beautiful grounds.

On the lawn under the shadow of the house was a table, at which were seated a number of the youngest children engaged in Kindergarten work. Elsewhere others, two or three years older, were deftly modelling leaves and flowers in clay; while the happiness, and even abandon, of their home life was shown by merry parties of little maidens singing and playing, of course under guidance, and of boys swinging and freely enjoying themselves. In this connection also the gymnasium should be mentioned, where some wonderful feats were performed, which might well excite the envy of many a seeing boy. In buildings in the lower part of the grounds boys were busily and dexterously engaged in chopping wood and in planing and sawing—"Not," said the Principal, "that we are thinking of making them carpenters, but that they may learn to be thoroughly handy and useful." In the piano department next door were young men engaged in various manipulations which will fit them to become tuners.

The event of the afternoon was the concert, and this constituted in itself a rich treat. Both vocalists and instrumentalists performed their various parts with exquisite skill and taste. In reference to this it will be of special interest to state that one of the pieces was dictated to the choir note by note by the Principal, and this having been transferred to paper, was then sung as correctly and with as much facility as though the composition had been previously rehearsed a dozen times.

Dr. Campbell, in the course of the few remarks he addressed to the audience, said that one of the songs, the rendering of which was perfect, had first been attempted by the young lady who sang it only the day before. There are about 170 pupils in the College, he also said, and he strongly insisted that the object kept in view throughout the whole course of training is to educate the pupils so that they may become practical business people, able to compete with others on ordinary terms.

HAZELWOOD.—There is virtue in the name of this Home for young men at Ryde, Isle of Wight, to hundreds of their class. Those who have once sat at its well-ordered and bountiful table, who have joined with Mr. Jacob's large family in their morning and evening worship, who have listened to his valuable expositions of Scripture, and his wise and kindly counsel, know well that the place is a power for good. The report just issued states that nearly 1300 young men last year availed themselves of the many advantages here offered them, which, besides the comforts of a home and the charm of the surrounding scenery, include also such spiritual influences as have been the cause of rich blessing to not a few.

ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS.—The annual meeting of the Army Scripture Readers' and Soldiers' Friend Society was held in Exeter Hall on June 8, Dr. J. C. Edghill, Chaplain-General of the Forces, in the chair. An abstract of the report was read by the secretary, Mr. W. A. Blake. The number of readers employed is eighty-four. A deficiency of £1000 is shown by the financial statement. Regret was expressed that no addition could be made to the Society's staff in India for want of funds. The chairman was emphatic in his approval of the aims contemplated, and the spirit in which the work was performed. Addresses were delivered by General Sir Arthur J. Lawrence, Rev. J. Gelson Gregson (from India), General E. Davidson, R.E., Rev. W. F. R. Buckle, M.A., Major Owen Hay, R.A., and Sir Robert Phayre. A few soldiers attended in uniform, and were apparently much interested.

SOUL AND SPIRIT.

Dear Sir,—I believe many Christians (myself among the number) were they asked clearly to define the difference between "soul" (Gen. ii. 7), and "spirit" (Eccles. xii. 7) would find it difficult to do so. That there is a very marked difference is evident from 1 Thess. v. 23, among other passages of Scripture. If some of your many learned readers would define it, I feel sure it would be helpful to many.—Yours faithfully,

A Constant Reader.

[This question is fully answered by Rev. J. B. Heard, in his "Tripartite Nature of Man" (T. & T. Clark). We shall, however, be glad of brief answers to our correspondent.]

THE DORÉ GALLERY.

Dear Sir,—The writer of the letter in your last issue respecting nude figures or paintings in the Doré Gallery cannot, I think, have visited the gallery during the hours Sunday-school teachers and others are invited to visit the gallery free. For on my visit I found the pictures alluded to covered up, and was assured they had been covered up at all times at which the gallery has been so kindly thrown open to Sunday-school teachers, the proprietors having done this of their own accord. In justice to them, the letter should not be allowed to pass unnoticed.—Yours truly,

F. W. A. Wilkinson.

St. John's Vicarage, Tadema-road,
Chelsea, S.W.

[We are glad to acknowledge the courtesy of the proprietors, who adopted this course in deference to the wish of some of our correspondents, which we intimated to them. We have received, too late for insertion in this issue, a communication from the proprietors of the gallery denying some of the statements made by Mr. Maurice Gregory.—Ed.]

A SERIOUS DANGER.

Dear Sir,—Shall I trespass too far on the freemasonry of common interest in a vital matter if I draw your attention to a serious danger which workers have entreated should be brought into notice—viz., that in our rebound from the evil of laying no blame upon man in sins between men and women, the sinning woman is now too often treated as a victim only—as if neither she nor the parents were responsible parties.

This has been specially brought to my notice by the tone of an article in The Pall Mall on the horrible story of Bertha Wall. That a mother so evidently guilty of great negligence, if nothing more, should be spoken of only with compassion, is monstrous. Nor is it possible that in this case the unhappy girl was a helpless victim.

The present tone is most unjust towards those

"Girls, whose fingers thin
Push from them faintly want and sin."

I know of one girl saying to another, "Oh, wait till you get into trouble, and then all the ladies will be after you." And, on the other hand, I know of a country village where the extreme severity with which illegitimate births are visited by the landlord has nearly stamped them out. The fear of consequences is a mighty help towards self-control.

But what is most sorrowful to me is the lowering of woman's sense of personal responsibility. My own limited observation would say that, though in general it is chiefly the man's fault that a woman goes over the edge of the precipice, it is chiefly her own fault that the edge was ever reached.

From our earliest girlhood we were made to feel that, if any natural fun or frolic among the young people ran too far, the girls were to blame for allowing it; and I am sure our own consciences bore out that opinion. The lives of the poor cannot be so unlike our own as altogether to reverse it.

In the noble efforts made to raise man's sense of responsibility towards women, let us not lower that most sacred sense of woman's responsibility towards man. Everyone who has touched rescue work knows how much better is prevention than cure. In trying to make cure more easy, we may lessen a strong force of prevention, if we do not take care.

I must ask your forgiveness if I take up your time with a subject you have already worked out. It is painful indeed to touch it, but the need is very great.

LICENSED SIN IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—Hardly any language of condemnation can be too severe when applied to the system which your correspondent, "Integrity," calls "licensed sin." And that the evil lives of Europeans are, in India, among the grave difficulties in the way of mission work, I know full well. Speaking only for that part of India which I know from having passed my whole active life in it, dating back from days when no such system of licensing sin was known, but when yet the general level of morality among Europeans was lower than it is at present, I am thus far quite at one with your correspondent. But though it may not be possible to say what strange notions may be held by individuals, I am sure that to say that, generally, the people of India "believe that licensed sin forms part of our religion," is unfair exaggeration. The Hindoos, of whose religion, be it remembered, prostitution forms a recognised part, are too keen observers to form, generally, any such opinion.

I know not who the missionary may have been whose address so disappointed your correspondent, nor in what part of that large field of India he may have laboured; but I rather think he must have misunderstood him as to the convert's mother, who was persuaded "not to buy currie on the Sabbath day;" currie being hardly an article which old ladies would proceed to buy on "the Sabbath," or on any other day, however busy they might be grinding and preparing. But one difficulty I have known to exist, namely, the idea that Christianity consists "in keeping the Ten Commandments." Possibly some even here in favoured England may be surprised at my implying that it does not. But the Gospel, as Paul preached it (vide 1 Cor. xv.), is, whether in India or in England, still "the power of God unto salvation." I have often dreaded the effect of setting the people to work to keep the commandments, whether the fourth or any other, before they have come to know their need, as lost sinners, of God's Gospel. This mistake dates from very early days in mission work in India, even from the days of a precious man of God like Henry Martyn, and may, perhaps, account for some of that lack of success which your correspondent mourns over.

J. G. Halliday.

Dear Sir,—In last week's number of The Christian, your correspondent, "Integrity," rightly calls for outspoken protest on the part of returned missionaries on the subject of Licensed Sin in India. But facts have come to our knowledge within the last six weeks which show that it is quite possible that we have been laying the blame on the wrong shoulders. It is more than probable that there have been written protests sent home by our friends working abroad in heathen lands, and that these protests have been suppressed by officials at the head-quarters of some of the great missionary societies in London.

In getting up the great meeting held at Exeter Hall, the Committee of the Gospel Purity Association were very anxious that it should be thoroughly well advertised at the great May meetings of the missionary societies, and for that purpose one of our secretaries called at all the Societies' offices in London, in order to obtain the necessary permission for the distribution of notices. The results were as follow:—

No. 1.—Wished us every success. Gave us permission; but must not be surprised if his superior secretary prevented us giving them away.

No. 2.—Was a strong supporter of the C.D. Acts. Our secretary pointed out the exceedingly small percentage of converts in places where the Acts were in operation. He replied that that was no argument, and would not give permission, and further than that left orders at Exeter Hall that anyone giving away notices of the meeting should be given into custody.

No. 3 said that the name of Mrs. Josephine E. Butler on the bills was quite enough to prevent him from giving permission!

No. 4 would not give permission, and would not state any reason, though the fact was pointed out that the results at the mission stations of his Society were being seriously affected by the Acts.

No. 5 had no objection.

No. 6, with pleasure.

It is needless to say that we did distribute the notices aforesaid, whether we had permission or not, though it was often at great inconvenience to our own helpers.

Faithfully yours in the war against sin,

Joseph Joyce.

31, Paternoster-square, E.C.

Sir,—Your correspondent, "Integrity," in your last issue, under this heading, makes two points which, I venture to think, require to be challenged. The first is that missionaries working in India, when returning to this country, and addressing meetings on the subject of mission work, are silent on the subject of the great hindrance to conversions owing to Government having licensed sin. On this point I will leave missionaries to speak for themselves. As one who has spent more than a quarter of a century in that country, I know something of native feeling respecting Christianity. I shall be surprised if "Integrity" will find missionaries attaching such importance to the Governmental licensing of sin as a factor in preventing conversions as he does. The second point "Integrity" makes is that (apparently) all mission work has been hampered for years, perhaps from the beginning, by this action on the part of Government. As missions were planted in India long prior to 1866, when Government licensed sin, his contention can only hold good for the past twenty years, and I hold that his conviction on this point is entirely erroneous, and based on insufficient knowledge.

There are places in India where missions are planted, and have been existing for years, the native residents of which are entirely ignorant of the Government action in regard to this horrid vice. More than this, the Hindu religion has more than tolerated this evil. It has sanctioned it, and temples, especially in Southern India, provides means of supporting its existence. So far do Hindoos recognise the custom, that in every large town or village you will find special localities allotted to the unfortunates for residence. It is therefore beside the mark to emphatically say that Government action, in respect to a special class of its servants, deters conversions.

Lastly, it is an entire absurdity to prepare maps showing seventy-two spots where the licensed sin exists, and call these localities districts. What would be thought of a map of England being prepared, showing, by black spots, those garrisons where a similar measure was till lately enforced, and the exhibitor thereof holding forth that licensed sin extended to all the villages and towns in the immediate neighbourhood of those garrisons? Such an assertion would be unjustified, and so is it in the case of India. The seventy-two spots are merely cantonments, and two miles outside of them "Integrity" would have very hard work to find a single villager who knew anything about licensed sin.—Yours faithfully,

J. W. Macdougall.

CHURCH ENTERTAINMENTS.

Dear Sir,—It is a terrible, yet only too true picture of the state of the church, which is given in your issue of the 3rd inst. Those who take part in providing amusements, in the name of religion, for a guilty and unreconciled world, would do well to study the following passages of God's Word:—"For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds; casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. x. 4, 5). "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God" (James iv. 4). "Wherefore, come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. vi. 17, 18).

Surely the church, like God's people of old, is in Babylon. Instead of being separated from the world by the cross of Christ, the Lord's professing people are too often living in adultery with the world, who hate the cross in which Christians should glory. And as God, through Cyrus, invited his ancient people to leave the delights and comforts of Babylon and to come back to rebuild the Temple in the desolated city of their fathers, so does He now invite his faithful remnant to forsake the abominations of Christendom, to rebuild the living temple of the Holy Ghost.

The wiser counsels of true believers are, I am afraid, often overruled by the voice of the numerous unconverted people in our churches, to whom "the things of the Spirit of God' are foolishness (1 Cor. ii. 14), and who, in the words of Jesus, highly esteem that which, in the sight of God is abomination.

BAPTISM AND CONVERSION.

Dear Sir,—I have been intensely interested in he correspondence appearing in your paper for he last few weeks on this immensely important ubject. Without surprise, but with sincere pain, I have read the four letters from clergymen, mbodying as they do four distinct and apparently rreconcilable views of a matter about which there an be only one true view. To enter into these four seriatim would be occupying too much of your space, but my experience so bears upon this ubject, that it may interest your readers to relate t.

Four years ago, as the result of spiritual zeal, I lecided to join the ministry of the Church of England, in the diocese of Exeter. My object was not to become a clergyman so much as to be enabled to devote myself entirely to God's work, and I, therefore, approached the necessary study in a spirit of earnestly interested inquiry, with a view of employing it entirely for future use, and not desirous of acquiring it merely for the purpose of a pre-conceived and pre-decided end. All went well until I came to the Article on baptism. This I studied with the help of a huge text book, by Bishop Harold Browne (prescribed for me), and a book on the Articles, of my own selection, by the late Dr. Boultbee, of Highbury College. I also searched the Scriptures, and compared all with the exposition in practice of the Church's doctrine, viz., the baptismal service. The painful result was that I was brought to a dead halt! I saw plainly two things. If I were to be a loyal and thorough "Churchman," I must necessarily hold Baptismal Regeneration, as plainly stated in the Baptismal Service, and I could not hold this, as I felt it to be contrary to the Word of God. On the other hand if I simply satisfied my examiners, and kept my scruples to myself, as some advised me to do, I was face to face with the immediate prospect of having to perform endless services at the baptism of infants, and in every case be acting the thorough hypocrite! I shrank from either course, and faced in preference complete withdrawal from candidature for "Orders," and consequently entailing much odium, very much personal loss, and a wreck of earthly prospects. Thus the Church's teaching "unchurched" me, and something more!

High Church theologians hold very tenaciously, and honestly, to the fearful error of "baptism and salvation." Evangelicals, to save their "Church" consistency, set forth all manner of views, few being other than a desperate attempt to evade what they secretly feel to be an unpleasant fact in "Church" doctrine. But in all such views I never, before I read "Clergyman's" letter in your issue of June 3, met with such a sentence as this, which though perfectly Scriptural, is not contained in any portion of the Church's teaching in (at any rate) preparation for "Holy Orders," viz.: "All the language of the New Testament respecting baptism, it is allowed by all parties, respects adults, and it is equally clear that not one word is said about the benefits of baptism to infants." This, from a clergyman, needs only to be compared with the baptismal service, for evidence of dire confusion of doctrine on a vital question.—Yours truly,

An ex-Candidate for Holy Orders.

UNION IN ITALY.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of May 19 you have published an article on "Free Italian Church," in which the writer has (unwittingly, and through imperfect information, of course), fallen into some errors, which I feel bound to correct. I shall not enter into all the details about the "Union between the Free and the Waldensian Churches," but will limit myself to two points.

(1) "The Waldensians," says the writer, "have insisted on preserving their own name for Italy, and making Italy Waldensian." Where the writer has found expressed this intention of the Waldensian Church, I am at a loss to understand. The Waldensian Synod of 1886, after carefully examining the whole question of union during two days' has voted the following resolution as to the name:—"The Union is accomplished under the name of 'Chiesa Evangelica Valdese,' allowing each congregation to call itself simply Chiesa Evangelica di . . . and wishing (facendo voti) that the increase in the number of the church members or the union with other denominations might soon justify the assumption of the name of 'Chiesa Evangelica d' Italia.'" I ask any unprejudiced mind to say candidly if that can ever mean that the Waldensian Church is aiming at making Italy Waldensian?

Do I need to ask the intelligent reader to observe that the Synod did not request the congregations of the Free Church to take the name of Valdese (Waldensian), but left them perfectly free to call themselves simply Evangelical Church of Milan, Venice, &c.? Do I need to call attention to the fact that far from intending to make Italy Waldensian, the Waldensian Synod emphatically expressed the wish that the time would come when the whole church might take the name which is as much desired by Waldenses as by Free Churchmen? Of the reasons for the delay, allow me to believe that the Waldenses are the best judges.

(2) The second incorrect statement, which I wish to speak about, because it misleads the readers of The Christian, is expressed in the words: "In Rome, it seems that all other evangelical schools have been shut through the ceaseless efforts of the priests." Well, so far as our schools are concerned, that is not the case. We have shut our day-schools because we had not the means to have them such as to compete efficiently with the now much perfected schools of the capital, and we have opened night schools for adults, from which we expect more real fruit for the evangelisation work. I do not think that anybody in the Free, or Weldensian, Church has spent more time, more thought, on the Union question than I have. The Lord knows where the fault lies, and He will make it known when He thinks proper. Meanwhile, I do not think that the hoped-for solution may be helped by judgments, at least hasty, of well-intentioned people, who evidently ignore entirely a whole side of the question.—Yours truly,

Stockholm. M. Prochet.

CORRECTION.—The report in our last issue headed "London Aged Pilgrims' Society," should have been "London Aged Christian Society."

EAST CENTRAL Y.M.C.A.—The seventh annual meeting of this Association was held in the lecture hall, Whittington-avenue, on Tuesday last week, Mr. J. H. Tritton presiding. The abstract of the report, read by Mr. Hughman, shows that a very considerable amount of evangelistic effort is being put forth by the young men here banded together. Not only in the City, but in the poorer districts of Whitechapel, Bermondsey, Limehouse, and Lambeth is the influence of the Association felt. At Canning Town, too, four weekly services are conducted by the members. The average attendance at the meetings of the banks and other prayer unions is about 120.

FEMALE SERVANTS' HOME SOCIETY.—Preceded by a tea, which was largely attended, the fifty-first annual meeting of this Society was held on Monday evening at Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Mr. T. A. Denny. The report stated that it is computed there are something like 240,000 female servants in London, of whom 10,000 are always out of place, that is, changing their situations. The importance of the Society's work in providing homes for them will, therefore, be seen. The spiritual work in the Homes, which had ever been the chief concern of the committee, has steadily progressed. The Society has been useful in obtaining justice for young women who had been dismissed wrongfully without character; sent adrift with wages unpaid, amounting in some cases to several pounds; and in other circumstances too numerous and painful to mention. In some cases residence in the Home had proved the safeguard from utter ruin. The Chairman delivered an address, in which he urged greater economy in servants towards the goods of their master, and distributed rewards for good conduct and length of service.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE.—Mr. E. S. W. De Cobain, M.P., presided at Exeter Hall, on Monday afternoon, over the annual meeting of this institution, the object of which is to train Christian women to be medical missionaries. The report stated that the Society—which is unsectarian—though only commenced seven years ago, was already the parent of medical missionary schools abroad, the pupils in their respective stations having commenced classes or schools of instruction for the natives, so that the taught, like the teachers, might go forth among their own people as Christian medical missionaries. The committee has applications from many whom they were compelled to refuse, but whom they would accept were more funds placed at their disposal. The Chairman spoke of the conquests of war and the nobler conquests of peace, and referred to institutions like the Zenana Medical Missionary College, for carrying out the latter. Sir R. Temple, M.P., remarked that of all the works of charity and beneficence now being instituted for the benefit of India, there was none more likely to be rewarded with a real result than that which was undertaken by this Society. Dr. Murray Mitchell, Rev. H. M. Hackett (Allahabad), Dr. Badenoch, Dr. Griffiths, and others spoke.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

A series of successful evangelistic meetings has just been held in Stanley, near Perth, by Mr. William Jack, student-evangelist.

Lurgan, Ireland.—The month's tent services conducted in this town by Rev. G. A. Webb and Mr. Ryan have been a great success. Large congregations have gathered to hear the Gospel, which has been preached faithfully, and with great simplicity of speech. Many have professed decision for Christ.

Gospel Tent Mission.—At the instance of the Marlborough Y.M.C.A., a three weeks' Gospel mission has been conducted in a tent, by Mr. W. J. Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society. The workers made a special effort to attract those who never attend church, and their labours were fully rewarded. The tent will now be sent on to the surrounding villages.

South Norwood.—Tent services have been resumed for the season at Portland-road, S. Norwood. At the opening meeting there were about 250 persons present, and earnest addresses were delivered. On the following Sunday evening the tent, which will hold about 400 persons, was crowded. An effort is being made to secure funds for the building of a small hall on the site of the tent, this being much needed in the district.

Lydd.—Two or three thousand soldiers are encamped here. Evangelistic services are being conducted under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. on Sunday evenings; it is hoped by this means, and by the distribution of Gospel literature, &c., to counteract the influence of the public-houses, which are the only places in the town where the soldiers can go to spend their leisure time. Tracts are solicited, and will be wisely distributed.

Cannon-street, Lydd, Kent. W. G. Tester.

Messrs. Crossley and Hunter are two evangelists whose labours are being greatly blessed in Canada. In Picton, Ont., where they spent six weeks, over a thousand professed conversion, and the work has extended since in and around Picton, until now the converts number about 2500. In Windsor, where they next went, more than 800 professed to accept Christ. They proceeded to Port Hope, where over 600 sought the Lord, and the whole town was moved. Their next field of work will be in Detroit. Mr. Crossley's great power is preaching and solo singing, while Mr. Hunter's is in exhortation and conducting the after-meeting.

Hastings.—Mr. J. B. Bain's mission at the Y.M.C.A. rooms in this town has been blessed above the expectations of the most sanguine, and was extended to twenty days instead of ten, as first arranged. The meetings were crowded every day, and on the closing evening the hall was filled twice over, so eager were the people to hear the word. On this evening more than twenty confessed Christ as their Saviour. The young men have come in for a large share of the blessing. Some of the afternoon Bible-readings were taken by Rev. W. Haslam, and on one evening he spoke to the young converts. From first to last the power of the Holy Spirit has been so manifestly present, that Christian workers of long standing have said they never saw anything more impressive.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken will conduct a mission at Broughton-on-Furness from June 21 to 26.

FIGHTING GOD.—Some weeks since the Boston Congregationalist copied from the Chicago Interior the statement that Ingersoll had left off "fighting God." A correspondent who has written to Mr. Ingersoll himself has received a reply from his secretary to the effect that he has not given up his crusade against religion, and that the report to the effect that he had done so is entirely false.

CONGO MISSIONS.—We greatly regret to learn, says The Baptist, of a further loss in connection with the Congo Mission. From a recent letter from Mr. Holman Bentley, dated Stanley Pool, April 3, the death of Miss Martha Spearing, at Stanley Pool, on that day, after a very violent attack of severe fever, is reported. The missionaries at Stanley Pool quite hoped that the fever had been reduced, and that the patient was on a fair way to recovery, when, very suddenly, an unexpected collapse took place, and she passed to her rest about nine o'clock in the evening. Miss Spearing was well known at Bloomsbury Chapel, having been closely identified with the Sunday-school there for a very long period prior to her departure for the Congo.

Among the Churches.

* We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.*

CONGREGATIONAL.

The church at Galway, which has been closed for some years, is shortly to be re-opened.

The Congregational Church has now in Ireland seventy-three evangelistic stations, in addition to twenty-six churches.

The memorial stones of a mission-hall being erected by the Plaistow church were laid last week. The hall will be freely used for evangelistic services and other forms of Christian work.

The Norfolk News notes an interesting feature of the Holywell-green Sunday-school treat, Stainland. They visited the residences of several sick scholars, and hymns were sung for them.

A mission held a few months ago in the church at Trowse, Norfolk, has been very fruitful. The band of lay preachers connected with this little church conduct services regularly in four or five other villages.

A Conference of members of the Baptist and Congregational Unions, representative of every county in England and Wales, will be held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on July 5 and 6. The assembly will deal generally with the subject of home missionary work, and particularly with the question of overlapping.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, M.A., has been conducting an eight days' mission in the church at Sligo.

Revs. J. More (of Cheltenham), A. H. Reid (of Torquay), and G. Tait (of Paisley) have been conducting evangelistic services at Croydon.

Rev. George A. Smith, the brilliant young pastor of Queen's Cross Free Church, Aberdeen, has been invited to succeed Rev. James Stalker in Kirkcaldy.

Mrs. Fleming Stevenson, her children and relatives, have presented to the Assembly's College at Belfast, a portion, comprising 6000 volumes, of the library of her late husband, Rev. Dr. Stevenson, of Rathgar.

Dr. A. N. Somerville was presented on the last day of recent Free Assembly meetings with his portrait, which has been subscribed for by a large number of friends in West of Scotland, as a testimony to his missionary spirit and zeal.

The report on Foreign Missions presented to the General Assembly of the Church in Ireland, states that the Mission in India now occupies seven central stations and nine branch stations, with more than 2200 native members and adherents. A beginning has also been made in organising a native pastorate, and establishing self-supporting native congregations.

METHODIST.

Rev. John Kilner, of the Mission House, Bishopsgate, who has been seriously unwell, is now quite recovered.

There has been lately quite an "old-fashioned" revival in the secluded mining village of Darran, Merthyr Tydvil.

Open-air services are being held on Sunday evenings, near the great thoroughfare leading to Clapham Common.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, theological tutor of Handsworth Wesleyan College, Birmingham, has in preparation a memorial volume of the late Dr. Morley Punshon.

Despite the decrease in the population of Ireland as shown in the last census, the returns showed a large increase in the number of members of the Methodist denomination in that country.

The Wesleyans, who have hitherto had no buildings of their own in Bombay, now propose to erect three chapels immediately—two in the city and one outside. About £5000 is required for the purpose.

At a meeting in City-road Chapel, on Monday evening, on behalf of army and navy work, addresses were to be given by three returned missionaries, and information afforded of progress in India, Burmah, and Egypt.

At the invitation of the Hammersmith Mission Band, contingents from the West Kensington Park, and other bands in the district, joined in an evangelistic campaign in the neighbourhood of Chiswick on Whit Sunday.

The death of Mr. Stead, district missionary in the Gambia section of the West African Mission, is reported. In less than two years Richmond College has given to the West Coast Mission three men, who have laid down their lives for Christ's sake.

The Emmanuel Mission Band, Kingsdown, Bristol, recently held a convention of mission workers, the object being to discuss the "difficulties and victories," and other details of home mission work. Such was the blessing experienced that it was suggested the convention should be held quarterly.

BAPTIST.

Rev. Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, left London last week for a two months' tour in the East.

Rev. D. Davies, who succeeded Dr. Landels at Regent's Park Chapel, has accepted the pastorate of the new church at West Brighton.

Rev. D. P. M'Pherson, of Glasgow, has accepted the invitation to fill the pastorate at Myrtle-street Chapel, Liverpool, so long held by the late Hugh Stowell

The memorial stone of a mission-hall on the Waltham Abbey side of Epping Forest was laid last week. Rev. W. Jackson gave an encouraging report of the progress of the mission connected with his church at Waltham Abbey.

At the recent Conference on Sunday-school work, Rev. J. T. Briscoe, of Peckham, said the characteristic features of the age were rapid advancement of education, a disposition to break through old restraints, in the assertion of a fuller liberty, and a tendency towards scepticism. In view of this spirit we need deeper godliness in our teachers; an emphasising of the moral teachings of Scripture on an evangelical basis; an infusion of more purpose into our work; and new departures in various directions.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

J. R. Townsend pleads for help to extend mission work in Jamaica.

Through the labours of Caleb and Miriam Johnson, who are now in Kansas, many are joining the Society.

Samuel A. Purdie, U.S.A., writing from Mexico, gives a cheering account of the progress of the Gospel in that dark land.

For years past the Friends of Leominster have held tent meetings for a week in summer with good results. This year they are continuing the work.

The problem of "How shall we hold the young?" has forced itself upon American, as well as on English Friends. More earnest and able workers and the adaptation of ancient principles to present circumstances are pleaded for.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Army work at Tavistock is making quite a stir.

A corps has been formed at Kirkcaldy. Hundreds have joined the Army.

It is proposed to raise the number of cadets constantly in the Training Home to 600

Since the opening, about a month ago, in Holland, many persons are reported to have come out for salvation.

Commissioner Tucker, from India, and Commissioner Smith, from America, are expected to arrive shortly in England.

During the eighteen months the Rescue Home at Nîmes has been open thirty-eight girls have been received, of whom sixteen are now doing well in situations.

Colonel James Dowdle says that he saw more drunken people in Stirling in three days than in all the five months he was travelling through Canada and America. At most of the open-air and night meetings there was at least one drunken person.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Frank Overbury, of Moseley, near Birmingham, for several years minister of Castle Hill Baptist Church, Warwick.—Mr. W. C. James, for many years a deacon of the Praed-street Baptist Church.—Mr. John Beveridge, deacon of the Baptist Church at Cupar, Fife.—Mr. Stead, district missionary on the West Coast of Africa.—Miss Wrathall, of Burnsall, a prominent member of the Methodist Church.—Mr. George Metcalfe, of Bainbridge, for upwards of fifty-five years a Sunday-school teacher and local preacher of the Methodist Church.—Mrs. Featherstone, of Middlesborough, for upwards of fifty years a consistent member of the Methodist Society.—Mrs. Lance, formerly of Birmingham. Some years ago she went out to Tientsin, in connection with the London Mission, and has since devoted herself to this work.—Rev. W. Reynolds, congregational minister of Salisbury.—Mr. Robert M'Ewen, for fifty years an elder of Grosvenor-square Presbyterian Church, Manchester.—Rev. D. Jones, pastor of the Congregational Churches at Cwmrhos and Tretower, Breconshire.—Mr. Dan. Isaac Davies, of Woolton, South Wales, an inspector of schools, and an intense worker for the increased efficiency of unsectarian education in Wales.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Salvation Army.—General Booth has been visiting Belfast. He addressed meetings in the Ulster Hall, which were well attended.

Presbyterian.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland met last week in Belfast. Rev. Robert Ross, Londonderry, was the retiring Moderator.

Methodist.—The Methodist Conference is to assemble this week in Belfast, when Rev. R. N. Young, D.D., of Handsworth College, Birmingham, is expected to preside.

Evangelisation Society.—Messrs. Thompson and Boyle, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, are conducting a series of evangelistic services at Crumlin, co. Antrim. The meetings are well attended by members of the various denominations, including the local Presbyterian and Methodist ministers.

Y.M.C.A.—For the last few weeks evangelistic services have been held on Saturday evenings, under the auspices of the Association of Belfast, in St. George's Hall, High-street, in order to meet the case of the vast numbers of young men who on that evening are found walking about the streets. So far the experiment has been a great success.

Personal.—The death of Rev. Robert Kerr, of Dublin, is announced. He was a minister of the late Primitive Wesleyan Conference, which he entered in 1841, and was in turn Secretary and President of that Conference. He took a leading part in the negotiations which led to the union of the Wesleyans and Primitive Wesleyans in TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

We learn that nine leading assurance offices have decided to refuse to issue policies to publicans.

In Cassell's Magazine, "A Family Doctor" urges that alcoholic drinks, being "one and all poisons," should never be given to children.

The Welsh Calvinistic General Assembly, at its recent session in Liverpool, accepted by an immense majority the principle of Local Option and the Direct Veto.

At the "Happy Evenings for the People," at Bristol, during the season just closed, there were 39 meetings, 28,000 persons attended, and 322 new pledges were taken.

The workers in the temperance cause in connection with the Congregational Chapel, Millwall, have been much encouraged by a recent visit of Mr. Forbes, of Holloway.

Mr. George Sturge writes protesting against th common neglect to supply water freely for temperanc people at public dinners. He thinks it foolish and inhospitable.

The Jubilee number of The Graphic has an accoun of the drinking habits of the people of these realms a the time of Her Majesty's accession, from the pen o Mr. Besant.

The Temperance Hospital has had a successful year. Owing to a debt of £6000 fifty beds are unoccupied, the committee having resolved not to go into debt for current expenses.

Dr. Cameron wishes Parliament to make the Habitual Drunkards Act perpetual, and to decree that one magistrate may attest the signature of a habitual drunkard instead of two as at present,

We would urge temperance workers to organise open-air meetings freely during the summer. Many striking cases could be cited of converts won by such means, not only to temperance, but religion.

The publication of the criminal and statistical returns for the city of Dublin, for the year 1886, reveals the very unpleasant fact that notwithstanding the labours of the Total Abstinence Societies, there has been a great increase in the charges of drunkenness.

Last week Mr. A. F. Hills, of the Thames Iron Works, entertained nearly five hundred temperance workers at a dinner prior to a Gospel temperance mission, which Mr. William Noble is about to conduct in the densely-populated district of West Ham. The mission, which promises to be a great success, is the first effort of its kind put forth at Canning Town.

Sir James Ferguson, at the Assembly of the Established Church of Scotland, denied the charges against the Indian Government in connection with the licensing system recently brought against it by Rev. J. G. Gregson and others. The Government of India, he says, takes precisely the same means as the Government in this country does to regulate the consumption of liquor.

FOREIGN.

We regret to notice a proposal to import London barmaids to serve at the Exhibition at Adelaide, Australia.

In the district of Switzerland, which supplies tourists with Alpine guides, the temperance sentiment is stronger than in any other of the rural districts of the country.

The Empress of Japan takes an active interest in the promotion of temperance. At Singapore two branches of the Women's Christian Temperance Union have been founded.

AN EXHIBITION OF MODELS, comprising Ancient and Modern Jerusalem, Herod's Temple, Ancient Athens, Mount Moriah, Palestine, Mount Sinai, &c., will be open during the Mildmay Park Conference, at 81, Mildmay Park, near the Conference Hall. Those who intend to be present at the Conference should visit this interesting collection. No Bible student could fail to appreciate the beautiful model of Ancient Jerusalem, and, indeed, all the models are calculated to afford much assistance to readers of the Bible. Mr. Tenz, constructor of the models, will be in attendance to explain the same.—I am, yours truly, J. G. Kitchin, Hon. Curator of the Biblical Museum.

RUSSIAN PERSECUTION.—In a private letter to a correspondent, the wife of a missionary says:—I have just returned from Russia, where my husband has been working as a missionary for fifteen or sixteen years. I stayed at Sadaiken, where the farm is which the Russians, converted to Christianity through his preaching, have rented from the Government. It is self-supporting, the produce of the land enabling them to pay their rent and maintain themselves. The flax they spin for house linen, &c., the wool for blankets, shawls, &c., they get from their own sheep, and though they underwent a great deal of persecution in former years, they held on their way, and sent out missions to other countries. Now a great trouble has come upon them. The Russian Government has decided to sell their land, and also demands £500, and if this be not paid the farm will be sold, and the band of faithful Christian labourers will be scattered

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE

AND THE

Twenty-First Year of 'Dr. Barnardo's Homes.'

THE Trustees and Committee of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" have decided to celebrate the 50th Anniversary of our beloved Sovereign's accession to the throne of this realm, and the Majority, or 21st Year of life, of the "Homes" themselves, by an endeavour to enlarge the scope of these comprehensive and national Institutions, thereby placing them upon a still wider and more solid basis.

They are convinced that no object can well be conceived more in harmony with the tender and womanly sympathy ever displayed by Her Most Gracious Majesty towards the suffering and the sorrowful, or more likely to be in accordance with Her own wishes, were she free to express them, than a project to promote the extension and increased usefulness of Institutions like these, whose chief work it is to rescue friendless and orphan children from the perils of the streets, and to afford to them not only education, useful training, and Christian care, but also all that is involved in the endearing names of "Home" and "Friend."

Here then, is the Scheme proposed for the hearty co-operation of all loyal subjects of Queen Victoria who love and pity helpless little children, and who may be willing, at one and the same time, to raise in Her honour and on their behalf an Enduring Memorial, the benefits of which shall be lastingly recorded in the history of multitudes of young lives.

1. To establish in a central position a Shelter for Homeless Street Children, to be called the Jubilee Shelter, which shall be always open, night and day, to afford immediate and temporary succour to any little waif or stray who seeks admission. This Shelter would soon become an important feeder of the Parent Homes—a kind of net thrown out into the wide sea of London child-life, into which many of those "ready to perish" would be gathered.
2. To develop, under skilled and competent control, the 5,400 acres of land already acquired in Manitoba (N.W.T. of Canada), by the establishment thereon of an Industrial Farm for the employment of the older and rougher lads rescued from the streets and low lodging-houses of our great cities and towns, and trained in the Labour House for Destitute Youths in East London. The whole settlement in Manitoba, some seven miles square, and charmingly situated near Birtle, on the Shell River, is to be called, in honour of the Queen, Victoria Regina.
3. To rebuild the Infirmary, for Sick Children of the absolutely Destitute and Homeless class, already in operation in Stepney, but which, owing to its small size and grave structural defects, is unfitted for its purpose, and which has therefore long since been condemned. The new building, which will have all modern appliances needful for the medical and surgical treatment of 65 little patients, being most urgently required, has already been begun, and will be called Her Majesty's Hospital for Sick Children.
4. To erect in our Village Home for Orphan and Friendless Girls at Ilford, Essex, a Memorial Cottage, to shelter in perpetuity twenty little rescued "waifs," who will therein find a happy home. A freehold site stands ready amid the fifty other buildings which constitute the Village; and there it is hoped may soon arise the new Memorial Cottage, to be called simply The Queen's Villa.
5. To redeem and set free from Rent, Mortgages, and all other Charges, several of the Parent Homes (already in occupation) upon which rents and interest of mortgage have to be paid, thereby relieving the Annual Income of a heavy and continuous drain.

To accomplish the whole of this Scheme, the Committee and Trustees of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" propose to raise a Jubilee Fund of £50,000, in two several sums of £25,000, one of which shall be collected from among the existing Donors, and the other from the General Public.

As regards the first of these amounts, it is estimated that if the very large number of Donors already on the books of the Institutions are willing each to contribute The Small Sum of Ten Shillings, the £25,000 required would be at once supplied.

But the Committee and Trustees of Dr. Barnardo's Homes now earnestly appeal to Christian people generally for donations towards this Jubilee Fund, in the hope that they will respond in sufficiently large numbers to secure the collection of the other moiety of £25,000.

If each reader of this advertisement will, within one week of observing this notice, send to the office of the Institution a Jubilee Gift of not less than Ten Shillings, the sum required from the General Public (£25,000), will in all probability have been received before the Twenty-first of June, the day fixed by Her Most Gracious Majesty for the celebration of the 50th Anniversary of Her Reign.

JUBILEE GIFTS of any amount in response may be sent direct to the Offices, 18—26, Stepney Causeway, E.; to the Bankers (London and South Western Bank, Bow Branch, E.; and Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler & Co., 50, Cornhill, E.C.); or to any of the following:—

SPEZIA, ITALY.—For some time the need of a Protestant hospital has been deeply felt here. As there are now about eighty English ships calling annually at Spezia, with an aggregate crew of some 1600, this greatly increases the need. A. A. Coates, of the Hotel Royal, "Croce di Malta," Spezia, has contracted with the proprietor for a lease of a suitable house, and desires help before commencing this work.

TYROL.—Charles Theodore, Duke of Bavaria, has endeared himself to his subjects by using his skill as an oculist amongst them; he has built a house in which he performs the most difficult operations. In the operating-room the Duchess, dressed as a nurse, gives her assistance; the people of the valley of Méran have just celebrated the Duke's birthday as an expression of their gratitude to their princely benefactor.—Journal Religieux.

East End Poor.—Miss Mary Reed thankfully acknowledges receiving 5s. and a parcel of very suitable clothing from E. V. for the destitute poor in the East End of London. Gifts of clothing of any description will be gladly welcomed and acknowledged at once if sent to Miss M. Reed, 242, Cable-street, London, E.

Aged Governesses in Dublin.—"The Home," Harcourt-terrace, Adelaide-road, Dublin, now accommodates twenty-nine ladies, who have all known brighter days, but are glad of the happy home provided for them. A jubilee offering is appealed for to found a permanent fund for its better maintenance and increasing need.—Miss Eva MacDonnell, High Bank, Cintra-park, Upper Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, June 13, 1887.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

HOLIDAY HOMES.—Under the presidency of Mr. George Hanbury, a meeting was held in the mission-room, Portman-square, on Friday last, in the interests of the country holiday scheme of the Ragged-school Union. It was stated that last year about 1100 of the pale faced denizens of our crowded courts and streets enjoyed the boon of a fortnight's holiday. Not only had physical and mental good resulted, but in many instances the removal from ordinary surroundings had led to lasting spiritual

SEASIDE HOLIDAY

Many of the little Girls — Members of the Theatrical Mission—are looking forward to this Summer Outing. TEN DAYS at the SEASIDE works wonders for those whose nightly toil renders them susceptible of Consumption, Rheumatism, and St. Vitus Dance. Much Spiritual Blessing rested on the visit to Lowestoft last year. Littlehampton is proposed as the place of sojourn this Summer. Contributions are earnestly solicited, however small, by

HOLIDAY HOMES & COUNTRY COTTAGES in connection with the
RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

No less than 1,100 pale-faced ailing children from the London Ragged Schools and Missions enjoyed a whole fortnight in the country last year.

HELP is earnestly SOLICITED that this number may be extended this season.

Already the four Homes are full of children, and their comrades by the hundred are waiting to follow them.

"Mercies Countless as the Sands."

CHRISTIAN WOMEN, can any one of you reckon up the mercies—national, social, and personal—of which she has been the recipient during the reign of

Our Gracious Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria?

Do not countless mercies call for repeated and ungrudging thank-offerings to Him

"Who giveth all,"

and ought not the blessing of giving, which is greater than that of receiving (Acts xx. 35), to be more highly valued than it has ever yet been?

Let the Royal Jubilee present itself as an opportunity for the expression of your thankfulness, and "send portions" to the spiritually needy.

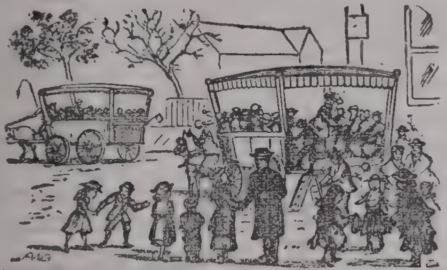
THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST had been established just three years when Her Majesty ascended the throne, and it was then the only one in Europe formed for the purpose of taking the Gospel into the seclusion of Eastern homes, and of telling "The old, old Story" to the women and girls of Asia and Africa. It is the oldest Zenana Society in existence.

Out of gratitude, then, to the King of Kings, who has for fifty years preserved the Sceptre of this Realm in the hand of a Woman, and out of pity to the millions of heathen women who are still sitting in darkness, Christian Women, her subjects, are invited to send their Thank-offerings to this Society, which the Lord has so long owned and blessed.

And will not Christian Men also join in these gifts? Have they no Mercies to remember connected with their Queen, their Mothers, their Sisters, their Wives, and their Daughters?

Jubilee Thank-offerings will be gratefully received by Miss E. RUTT, Lower Clapton, E.; Miss L. HOPE, 7, Ovington-gardens, Brompton, S.W.; Miss WEBB, 267, Vauxhall-Bridge-road, S.W; and by Miss TAIT, 68, Wilberforce-road, N.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S FRIEND MISSION.
A DAY AMIDST THE GREEN FIELDS.



FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED to take for a Day into the Country the poor children attending our Mission Halls, also poor Mothers. We are also anxious to send others for a week or two. Will every reader send their mite early as possible to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT; or to Mr. GEORGE FULLER, Superintendent, 1, Follett-street, Poplar, E.

"Were you in that Railway Accident?"

"No; I was mercifully preserved. Indeed, I have never been in one."

Will you then give a "thank-offering for Journeying Mercies" to the funds of THE RAILWAY MISSION? We now have 190 Missions on our list, and want to start 100 more this year. With your prayers and monetary help we can do so, for the Railway-men are appealing to us from all quarters.

We earnestly appeal for £3,000.

PARIS CITY MISSION.—President, Lord MOUNT-TEMPLE. Seven Missionaries are now employed by the above Society. They visit the people at their homes, speak at Mission halls, distribute tracts, read the Scriptures, &c. Funds are urgently needed. £40 per month is required for their support.—J. M. WEYLLAND, Esq. (Hon. Sec. for England), 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W., will gratefully acknowledge subscriptions, and send reports and information.

EARNEST APPEAL FOR HELP towards Evangelical Church Mission Work in Wales.—Will any readers of THE CHRISTIAN who are able, spare a little towards the Lord's work amongst the mountains of Wales, in our large and poor parish. We have Mission rooms where the Gospel is preached, besides the parish church, and three large Sunday-schools. In two of these we want an harmonium, and funds are needed for all. We also want to give Bibles and good books to many scholars just now, and have no funds or means. We shall be very grateful for help of any kind.—Rev. ARTHUR GRIFFITHS, Maesgwartha, Abergavenny.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF CLOTHING for distribution among the poorer patients and their families are earnestly solicited by the Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury.—Parcels should be addressed to Miss S. WHITMORE, Clerk to the Ladies' Committee, at the Hospital. Donations in money will also be thankfully received.

MISS DUDIN BROWN is receiving many applications for admission to her little Free Home of Rest, and any who were inmates last year and wish to be received again, should apply at once, that they may be arranged for in rotation.—Address to her at, Restdene, Forest-road, Kew.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN, HACKNEY, Extension Fund.—Every vacancy in the Home is filled up, and several blind children are waiting for admission. Surely it is the Heavenly Father's will we should take a larger house. A freehold has offered for £1,500. We have £50 in hand. Will Christian friends respond to our earnest appeal on behalf of these sightless children. Special contributions to this Fund will be gratefully received by Miss S. RYE, or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For 101 years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 240 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

Divine Healing and Holiness Meetings: Sundays, 2.30 p.m.; Tuesdays, 2.30 p.m.; Thursdays, 7.30 p.m. Christian friends desiring to be received into the house, apply to Miss Gibbs, 10, St. John's-terrace, Belle Vue-road, Leeds.

SERMON LANE MISSION.—Days of Praise and Thanksgiving.—Funds are respectfully solicited to give some hundreds of children and poor Mission people a Day in the Country, a good Dinner and Tea, to commemorate the Jubilee of our beloved Queen. Also to commemorate the Twentieth Anniversary of the Superintendent of the above Mission, and his forty-second year as a Christian worker at Islington. Also a day of Praise and Thanksgiving to God for his restoration to health after three years and six months' serious

JUBILEE GOSPEL TEMPERANCE HALL.

The Committee of the WALLINGFORD TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETY earnestly appeal for help towards raising the sum of £300 for building a Gospel Temperance Hall, so much needed in Wallingford. £165 have already been subscribed, or promised, two sums of which, £50 and £25, are promised conditionally that the Committee raise at least £250. That the work may not be delayed is the object of this appeal to Christian Friends for a small share of their Jubilee Offerings to so useful and permanent a memorial. Contributions will be thankfully acknowledged by the Secretaries, Messrs. F. JENKINS and J. GUTTRIDGE, Wallingford. Cheques or P.O.O.'s to be made payable to the Treasurer, W. LITTLEBOY, Esq., Benson, Wallingford.

FOR HIS SAKE.

A Deeply-Interesting Narrative.

BY S. J. HUMPHREY,

Author of "Blessings on the Bees."

"A year ago this winter our house took fire. It was in the middle of the night, and we were all asleep. The flames were first discovered by a poor neighbour, who at once gave the alarm, and then burst in the door. . . . It seems almost a miracle that we were got out alive. We were dazed and suffocated, and it was only the heroic courage and great strength of our neighbour that brought us down the blazing stairway into the open air; but it nearly cost him his life."—Extract.

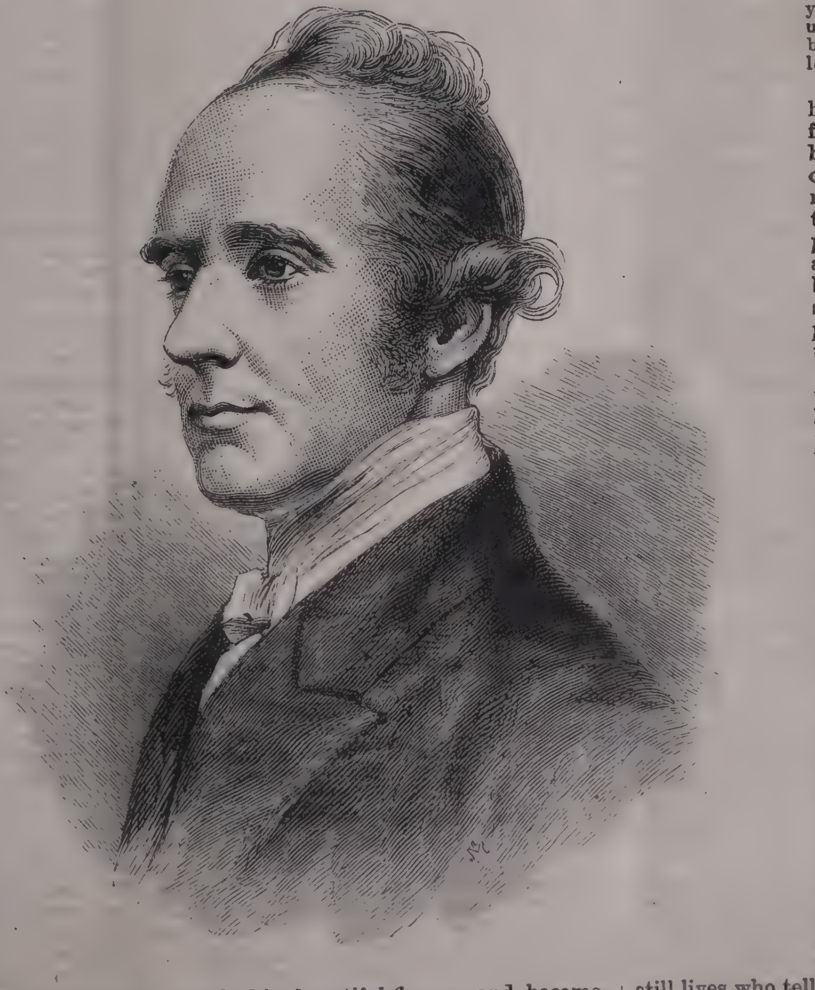
THE LATE REV. WILLIAM PENNEFATHER,

OF BARNET AND MILDMAY PARK.

THIS devoted servant of God, "whose praise is in all the churches," was born in Dublin in 1816. He was the youngest of the eight children of Richard Pennefather, Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland. William's childhood foreshadowed his future character; for his sweetness, his vivacity, and his energy won for him in his home the name of "The Angel." Delicate health hindered him from going to school until he was thirteen years old. It is not possible to say when his heart was first surrendered to the Saviour, whose faithful follower he became. The dying words of his eldest sister, "Will Willy be a good boy?" made a great impression on her little brother; which was deepened by the loving entreaties of another sister, and her gift to him of "Baxter's Saints' Rest." Fifteen years after he wrote, "I shall never forget the enjoyment with which I read and re-read that wonderful book."

William entered upon school life at Westbury, near Bristol, as one who had already made his choice for God; and through his influence a little band of his school-fellows was drawn together for Bible-reading and prayer in one of the dormitories. This simple Bible-class was blessed to many, and its influence felt in the school long after William had left. Thirty-nine years later, in re-visiting Westbury, Mr. Pennefather recalled the days when, as a schoolboy, he used to walk alone over Clifton Downs, "earnestly crying to God that his life might be useful."

The boy had sore need of the strength of this secret communion with God, for he had to suffer not a little persecution "for righteousness' sake" from some of his school-fellows. But the example of his Christ-like life spoke to the hearts of a few of his most cruel opponents; and how more than repaid was he, when in after life four of them came, at different times, to tell him that his conduct had led them "to own as their Master, that Saviour whom they had persecuted in the person of the boy who loved and served Him." One brought him beautiful flowers, and became his fast friend. Another fell on his knees and asked his pardon with bitter tears of sorrow. Thirty years later, when preaching at Bury St. Edmunds, a clergyman met him in the street, and hailing him as an old school-fellow said, "If I know anything of Christ, or have done anything for his glory, I owe it all to you."



On leaving school, William was placed with a clergyman in Westmoreland, to continue his studies, and here a life-long friendship began with Mr. and Mrs. Crewdson; of which forty years later Mrs. Crewdson, well known as a gifted hymn-writer, wrote as follows:—

> How little could we have supposed that in the gentle youth, then in his eighteenth year, God was preparing for us one of the richest of the blessings that has marked a lengthened pilgrimage.

In Mr. Crewdson's home William Pennefather was surrounded by most congenial associations, both for his natural and spiritual tastes. Here he found poetry, painting, music, and beautiful scenery; but above all, one absorbing, unswerving purpose in life—to "serve the Lord with gladness."

From childhood, it was the desire of William's heart to enter the ministry, but just when he had begun his college course, it had to be relinquished through the failure of his health. He was threatened with consumption, and passed through many months of weary suffering, a training by which his singularly sympathetic and sensitive nature was being prepared for the grand life-work before him. Though debarred from the great wish of his heart, he thankfully availed himself of every opportunity of serving his Saviour. When staying by the seaside for his health, he interested himself amongst the fishermen and their families. One old man still lives who tells of this time that

> He would just sit down in the school like a little child, and listen, and never be tired as long as the Blessed Jesus was being talked of....I could give the names of many who, in earlier years, lived in vice and drunkenness, but who were brought into the fold by the instrumentality of this dear young gentleman. He loved his Church, yet gave the right hand of fellowship to Christians of all denominations.

Do we not see in this description of his youth, like the oak-tree seen in the acorn, the germ from which was to be developed the large-hearted convener of Conferences of Christians from all parts of the world?

When Mr. Pennefather was able to resume his college course, notwithstanding the delicacy which constantly hindered his studies, by his resolute determination he passed every examination with credit. The spiritual welfare of Ireland lay very near his heart, and the Irish Society which brought God's truth to the people in their native tongue had his warmest sympathy. With reference to its need, he writes:—

> "Poor Ireland! When will her children own the Lord our Righteousness? Would that all Christians, feeling the awful responsibility of the thousands lying under the yoke of superstition and ignorance, would unite in prayer and in the diligent use of the means which God has blessed to bring Gospel light into the regions of darkness and death."

The spiritual destitution of the Protestants in Connemara was now pressed upon Mr. Pennefather's heart, and, with characteristic energy, he undertook to visit all the Protestant landowners and farmers in the district, to awaken their interest and help in providing some place of worship and some minister for them. From the work of collecting the necessary money, Mr. Pennefather's sensitive nature always shrank; but from this time forward it seemed to be part of the allotted service of his life. He visited amongst the people, and mentions especially one poor girl, who, the morning after she had attended a Protestant church in search of instruction, was waylaid, and so severely beaten that she had kept her bed for four years—yet she cherished no resentment, but prayed for her enemies, and blessed God for the heavy trial. Mr. Pennefather was the bearer of £1 sent to her by a friend of his, and found that she had been three days without anything to eat or drink, but a bit of bread and some cold water. The needs of these poor people lay heavy on his heart, and in the face of many difficulties, he carried his benevolent plans to a successful issue, of which the secret may be found in such entries in his diary as "Got up early, and thought and prayed about my little flock at Roundstone." He feasted on the Word of God. "The Psalms," he writes, "have been to me an unfailing spring of living water"; and much he needed this refreshment in the heavy family trials and bereavements through which he was called to pass.

The discipline of his invalid life doubtless contributed to the quiet calmness which gave a peculiar charm to his character.

> "I do not hesitate to say," we find him writing, "that we should sooner give up what we think would be beneficial to the cause we have at heart, than execute it, with the loss of resting on our God.... We must learn to balance mind and matter, social intercourse and retirement, active service and calm meditation, public worship and private prayer. True, we cannot entirely effect this in our present imperfect state, but we should aim at it."

The subject of missions to the heathen often occupied his thoughts; but he came to the decision, after prayer for guidance, that he was called to labour in Ireland. In the year 1841 he was ordained, and began his ministry in the parish of Ballymacugh, where he was able to render fresh help to his beloved Irish Society. Secreted in the poorest cabins, or sitting behind walls and hedges, the Irish Scripture-readers, taking their lives in their hand, were sowing the incorruptible seed in the hearts of the peasants. These brave, poor men were willing to undertake this dangerous work, constrained by love to Christ and to their countrymen. They were carefully trained, and mighty in the Scriptures. At one time Mr. Pennefather writes of having met 232 of the readers, and of his delight in their "wonderful answers from Scripture." They had met to be examined, preparatory to receiving the Lord's Supper. 200 of them came to the Lord's table, 160 for the first time. All of them had been Roman Catholics.

A short description of Mr. Pennefather's work in his first charge may be well given, for in it we see a foreshadowing of all his future work, and the secret spring of his wide-spreading and far-reaching influence.

> "Intense and prayerful anxiety about his sermons, energy and activity in parochial work, constantly visiting his people, and being at all times at their call, exceeding anxiety for those who were in sickness or sorrow, and a deep, loving sympathy, which was never sought in vain. His was a true missionary spirit, going out to all, 'Jew, Turk, infidel, or heretic,' with no less a burning patriotism for the inhabitants of his own beloved country, longing that Ireland should once more become, not in mere name, but in deed and truth, "The Island of Saints.'"

Mr. Pennefather's next charge was the living of Mellifont, near Drogheda, in value £92 a year, and here he pursued the same course of work—to get at the people, by simple Bible-readings, and cottage meetings. One of these is thus described: "A long board served for a table, round which as many as could were seated, and the rest of the cabin was crowded with men standing. There were two candles, one stuck into a hole in the table, the other passed from hand to hand as the people read their verses. The meeting lasted two hours, and was intensely interesting." Many changed lives bore witness to changed hearts. Whilst working there, the potato famine, with its train of misery, called forth the remarkable powers of organisation which characterised his ministry. The strain on his own slender resources was great, and he had to add to his labours by collecting funds for the starving. He wrote to one friend: "I have a hundred children in my school, ninety of them Roman Catholics, I have fed them for ten months; unless I get help I must close the school." All day long his house and the school were besieged by famine and fever-stricken peasants, always relieved by him, though amongst the Protestant poor of his flock there was comparatively little destitution.

Mr. Pennefather's marriage, whilst he was at Mellifont, to Catherine, eldest daughter of Admiral King, of Angley, provided him with an invaluable helper. Without her varied gifts, her singular powers of organisation, and her perfect sympathy, his delicate and highly-strung nature could never have borne the strain which through his subsequent life fell to his share. In 1848 Mr. Pennefather had his first charge in England, Walton in Buckinghamshire, value £130, and no house; a needy, unattractive parish, with dirty cottages, dingy coal wharves, a new church, and no schools. By the end of the following summer, the crowded church had been enlarged, and schools capable of holding six hundred persons were completed. Best of all, many conversions were seen, and there was a great drawing together of the true children of God. Mr. Pennefather first preached on the wharves, and then had an old boat fitted up as a floating chapel; and much blessing resulted to the bargemen and others.

In 1852 the call came to a fresh field of labour at Barnet, in Hertfordshire, where Captain Trotter, of Dyrham Park, well known as a noble Christian soldier, had built a church, and great openings for usefulness were to be found in the neighbourhood. In addition to his usual earnest parochial work, some new and distinctive service for Christ was here begun by him, and by his admirable wife. The care of orphans had long had its place in their hearts, and when, after the Crimean War, the Secretary of the Patriotic Fund asked Mr. Pennefather if he would receive a certain number of the fatherless little ones, into his parish, he gladly consented. Beginning with six, the number was gradually increased to four hundred. He was unwearied in his care of them. His warm love for children gave him a singular power over them, and the good accomplished amongst them will only be known in eternity. Yet he found time to preach at theatres in London, and to found a Home for missionaries' children.

The autumn of 1856 saw the first of those remarkable Conferences, in connection with which Mr. Pennefather's name became known throughout the Christian world. Many, with thankfulness, recall them as the time when they first met with and accepted Christ; to many thousands more, God's grace has made them "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." There are not a few whose names are embalmed in the heart of Christ's Church; some already resting in the presence of the King; and others still serving in his vineyard, bearing the burden and heat of the day, who will ever be associated with the Conferences, first at Barnet, and then at Mildmay: Mrs. Daniell, the Lord's honoured worker amongst soldiers; Mrs. Ranyard, the mother of the Bible Women and Bible Nurses' Mission; Mrs. Bowen Thompson, whose resolution to devote her life to Syria was made at Barnet; Mrs. Bayly, whose wide-reaching work of Christian temperance has rescued many perishing ones; Miss Macpherson, the devoted servant of the Lord, whose life and strength are freely given to saving the helpless and hopeless from their misery, and to bringing them help and hope for this world and the next, and others, a goodly company far too numerous to be named, whose work for Christ received a fresh impetus and power from those consecrated days. And still the blessing of these Conferences goes on deepening and widening; Mr. Pennefather's place at the Mildmay Conference is now occupied (in accordance with his desire) by Mr. Stevenson Blackwood, an honoured and devoted servant of Christ, endeared to his heart especially by their perfect sympathy in the highest subjects.

The subject of unfulfilled prophecy had occupied Mr. Pennefather's mind from his childhood, and especially in connection with the Second Advent. "That blessed hope" was deeply interwoven with his inner life, and consequently cast its golden rays upon his ministry. It was the key-note of the teaching in the Conferences both at Barnet and Mildmay; and wherever the subject was to be brought forward, Mr. Pennefather's help was sought. In November, 1863, he accepted an invitation from the venerable and beloved Dr. Marsh, to give an address on this subject at a Conference which he had assembled at Beddington. Mr. Pennefather's face as he spoke on "the Beloved showing Himself at the lattice until the daybreak," was aglow with heavenly light and love, and those who looked upon him felt that "they saw his face as it were the face of an angel."

The last call, to another and a wider field of work, came in 1864, when Mr. Pennefather accepted the pastorate of the Church of St. Jude's, Mildmay-park; and his new parish soon became a centre from which numerous streams of blessing took their rise. The most remarkable of these was the Deaconess House, with its kindred institutions, the Hospital, the Orphanage, &c., where Christian women might be trained together, without vows, for different posts of usefulness. Schools had to be built; in five years after he had no less than 1392 day scholars and 1249 Sunday scholars. The church was rebuilt, and crowded, chairs filling every vacant space. Meetings for children, for communicants, for working-men, for cab-drivers, for mothers, and holidays for each, made his life a very full one. Parochial boundaries would not suffice for the largeness of his heart. Clergymen in poor parishes, men and women labouring in ragged schools, lowly and lonely toilers for the Master in obscure places, were sure of his unwearied sympathy, and to be introduced by him to richer and more influential friends. Many could say of him, with George Holland, the apostle of Whitechapel, "Often has he called, cheering and comforting me in my work, when days were dark and friends were few."

Sympathy made him, when driving in the country, put a poor woman and her heavy burden into the pony carriage, and walk beside it, telling her the good news of salvation; it made him prepare food in the house of one dying of destitution, and give it with his own hands. It made him cross the street to knock at a door for some child too small to reach the knocker, and lift the little hanging heads of sun-struck babies in perambulators, and bid their young nurses take them to the shady side of the street. It made him carry jugs of tea to workmen employed near his house, and, no less, to listen kindly to, and answer encouragingly, the bungling questions of shy or uninteresting people. He had "a wealth of love, equally ready to cherish a ragged child, to greet an assembled congregation, or to throw sunbeams into the family circle," but with this tenderness was blended an unswerving faithfulness in rebuking evil, and an immovable firmness where principle was involved.

From his early life, his Protestantism had been clear and defined, and he viewed with deep grief the Romanising tendencies of a section in the Church of England. To one who asked his advice as to attending a church where the bread and the wine were elevated for adoration, he replied:—

> "Such an act I believe to be idolatrous, and it was to protest against this teaching that Ridley, Latimer, Cranmer, and many others laid down their lives...I say, on no account receive the elements from one who has adored them as God."

The number of letters written by Mr. Pennefather was marvellous — notes of comfort to sick ones, outlines of sermons to those who were kept from church, counsels to perplexed friends, and often at the end of some wearying day he would rest himself by writing a hymn. Mr. Aitken, his curate for five years, writes of him: "I never remember seeing him ruffled in temper, or hearing him utter a hasty or a bitter word; yet few men were ever so strained and driven as he by a thronging multitude of labours and cares." Mr. Pennefather would often insist that it was the Christian's duty to rule over circumstances. "The world," he would say, "is the sport of circumstances; the child of God has circumstances under his feet." His habit of mind, was communion with God; and one of his hearers truly tells the impression made by his preaching: "He seems to be feeding on the bread of life himself, whilst he is breaking it to others." A man of much intelligence, an unbeliever, when asked to go to hear Mr. Pennefather, replied: "You will never see me inside a church door; but this I will say of him, that his life is the best sermon he ever preached." His small income and his large-hearted liberality did not always fit into one another, and this fact sometimes brought him into trial, though never into debt. Money for the Lord's service came to him often as a direct gift from heaven. He was accustomed to spread the need before the Lord, and then to expect and receive the supply.

Thus the work went on, and none knew that it was drawing to a close, though anxious fears prevailed when in the winter of 1873 there were signs that his health was giving way. Then "silent Sabbaths" followed, a great trial, meekly borne; but he himself anticipated recovery. On April 28 he had prayed amongst other petitions that "we may so live that it shall be no abrupt change to step out of earth into heaven," and on the 30th that wondrous step was taken.

"At his Saviour's side,
Behold him now, in glory, glorified!
Death is behind! and on the shining shore,
Which never hears the wild waves distant roar,
He stands with Christ."

THE NORTH SEA TRAWLERS.—Rev. W. A. Bathurst contributes to The Eastbourne Standard an interesting account of a Sunday's work on board a Mission vessel of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. "The afternoon of this memorable Sunday," he says, "was the great occasion. We assembled at three o'clock, to the number of sixty-eight, in the hold of our vessel for a meeting that lasted three hours. It began by four short addresses, from two Mission friends and ourselves, interspersed with prayer and hymns. In the last of these addresses I invited those who were on the Lord's side to testify what He had done for them. Upon this some thirty or more stood up in succession, and, in words of evident truth and soberness, told each a tale of simple and touching experience. Brief, humble, and pointed were these confessions. Not a word that was spoken did I wish unsaid. All was intensely real, and I awoke to what I afterwards found the case—that the North Sea fishermen are either for Christ or against Him; when they are on the Lord's side, He is their all in all. They are a brave, hardy race, full of manliness and simplicity, and (when enlightened) warm-hearted, zealous, and tender in conscience and conduct. In these testimonies many told of a change of heart in consequence of the prayers of, in some cases, a mother, a wife, or, in one case, of a grandmother. They gratefully told of what they owed to the Mission smacks."

THE BRIGHTON DELUSION.

We have received a long narrative (for which we regret our want of space) from Mr. D. McCallum, Jun., of Birkenhead, concerning the foolish and wicked deception practised at Brighton, which blasphemously claims to be the Army of the Lord, and to receive messages from God. We know not whether more to deplore the irreverent impudence of the mesmerist or mountebank who dates prophecies, visions, and dreams from the "Sanctuary of Jehovah," and signs himself, "Yours, in the service of our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, the Captain of our Salvation, Called by His Grace, sealed, anointed, and named 'King Solomon,' to build His Spiritual Temple," or the folly and self-conceit and wickedness of his dupes and votaries, who, like children with a new toy, rejoice in such new names as Caleb, Jonah, Rachel, Joshua, and break their marriage vows by neglecting or forsaking wives, husbands, and children.

"Rachel," who had written to her husband (addressing him as "Dear William B——"), that she should never go back to him, has now been allowed by Wood and his prophets to return, in order to propagate their delusion. A friend writes on June 13:—

> I went to a meeting last week where they were present, and I should think for nearly an hour during the early part of the meeting Mrs. B——'s whole body and head shook so violently that I began to fear it must be a severe attack of paralysis; and yet whilst this awful shaking was going on she answered questions which were put to her quite sensibly, and when asked what all that shaking meant she said it was the same power as they had at Pentecost, when they were thought to be drunken with new wine. She has had her hair (of which she had a great quantity) all cut off, and brought down in a fringe on her forehead, and looks so altered from her former appearance. She tried to deny that she never intended returning home to her husband and children, but I have a letter before me, written in red ink (the colour used at Wood's Sanctuary), in which she says, "I shall never return. To-morrow I shall be united to Jesus my precious Saviour. This is truly the Army of Jehovah. The Lord gave me the gift of tongues this morning. I have now the gift of Divine love in perfection, also the gift of prophecy, gift of healing, raising the dead, cleansing lepers, and casting out devils!"

Another distressing case is that of "Joshua," who succumbed to the influence of Wood when in Switzerland, and now has attached himself to the Brighton "Sanctuary."

Poor Miss Webb, who gave thousands of pounds by which this delusion was set on its feet, enjoyed for some months the title of "Queen Esther," but appears now to have been sent adrift. Mr. McCallum writes:—

> Where is she now? She is not in the Home, nor at the meetings. All reports agree that she is staying with her sisters. The "outside" explanation is that the prophets directed that it was the Lord's will that she should go into apartments. Later, that she was to leave them and go——anywhere. She went to her sisters, and has remained with them since. The "inside" explanation is that she asked permission, through the prophets, to visit her sisters, that this was granted, but that her sisters refused to allow her to return. Perhaps, for the sake of the truth, the sisters will have no objection to communicate the facts to The Christian.

Much prayer should be made for these deluded people (of whom there are said to be over fifty supported by Wood), "if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will."

PERSONAL PUBLIC TESTIMONY.

By Rev. CHARLES F. GOSS.

We sometimes say that actions speak louder than words; but it would be hard to tell in what way the Spirit of Christ finds its most frequent or beautiful manifestation. But there is one place where it is often revealed with marked and surprising power, and that is in social meetings for prayer. Such a service, well conducted, is one of the strongest forces of human society, No two things of the same kind are so different as prayer-meetings. To go to one is to plunge through the ice into a lake; to another, to bathe when one is tired and dusty on the pilgrimage of life, in one of the four rivers of Paradise. I had rather attend a warm and earnest meeting of Christians, where the sentiments of the heart find free and natural expression, than any other assemblage of men. Everything depends upon the method of the expression of the inner life.

I.—ITS BANE.

In personal testimonies, we tell what the Lord has done for us, and this is both the most valuable and the most dangerous power in a religious meeting. Here, for example, are some of the banes of personal testimony.

(a) There is a constant tendency to cant. Ambitious people wish to be heard, and to make a deep impression. Having no real experience of the love of Christ, they fabricate one, consciously or unconsciously. In a manner as solemn and impressive as possible, they narrate this purely imaginative experience. Such an act as this must entail serious consequences. The speaker either begins to hate and despise himself for his insincerity and falls away into infidelity; or if he is not stricken with this shame, such insincere professions become the essence of his religious life, and he rests on his testimony as a proof of his salvation.

By that subtle instinct through which we read the heart of others, and that daily conduct which manifested their inner life more surely than words can, friends and neighbours at last discover this hollow mockery, and the man's testimony becomes the curse of the prayer-meeting, repelling the sincere inquirer and convincing the doubter of the untruth of religion. It is the duty of the pastor and the officers of the church to suppress the testimony of a hypocrite, for it doubly damns him and destroys the souls of his hearers.

(b) There is also the bane of exaggeration. For the most sincere Christian, through a lack of analytical power or the rare capacity to reveal inner life through word symbols, may give such an impression to both Christian and unconverted hearers as to produce disastrous results. There was an ignorant woman in a church who used to narrate the most extraordinary experiences. She told of such exaltation and exultation through the presence of Christ in her heart, that (although she weighed two hundred pounds) "she scarcely touched the floor when she went about her household duties," so she said. This testimony kept a timid, analytical, sincere, Christian soul in darkness for weeks; it so surpassed all her own experiences that she thought herself unconverted. The influence of these fearfully exaggerated statements upon young and timid Christians and upon seekers after truth becomes often terrible and fatal. They judge themselves by such experiences, which if they fail to have, they sink into despair. How often we hear the careless exaggerator, say "The Lord has kept me from all sin"—"He has given me perfect peace"—"My temptations have all ceased."

Such assertions are scarcely less than criminal. No intelligent human creature could stand up and make affidavit to the truth of them, and those who utter them so carelessly, ought to be rebuked, for the sake of others and for their own. There are earnest inquirers listening! Every Christian worker meets constantly with troubled souls who believe themselves unsaved because their experience does not correspond with these untruths. If there ever was anything which ought to be represented with most scrupulous regard to truth, it is the religious experience; and yet there are such extravagant misrepresentations in every free meeting of Christians where there is liberty, that we do not wonder that in some places, where there is a minister or there are people of keen discrimination, this element in social meetings is discouraged and suppressed.

Nevertheless, we cannot but regard it as a serious and fatal mistake to do so, and believe that the true method is to educate and guide and encourage personal testimonies, for the unmistakable and inestimable value they possess.

II.—ITS BLESSING.

These are some of the ways in which they prove a blessing to the church.

In them truth becomes personal. It is one thing to hear a man say:—"The Word of God teaches that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin, and you may be saved by it." It is quite another to hear him assert:—"I have myself been conscious of forgiveness of sin." I listen to the assertion:—"There is such a thing as a peace which passeth all understanding"—in one mental attitude, it may be of surprise or incredulity. But a thrill shoots through me when a man rises and says soberly and simply, "I have felt it!" Unconverted people are in an attitude of mind in a religious meeting to make them susceptible to such testimonies, because they take it for granted that Christians would not in circumstances so solemn say anything that was not literally true.

Not only are the irreligious helped by personal testimony, but Christians are stimulated. There is a peculiar sweetness and power in listening to the unfoldings of another soul's experiences. We feel the nearness, the fellowship, the communion of kindred minds. Not only the triumphs, but the defeats are revealed. We see that others struggle as we do. We are inspired, encouraged, or comforted, by mutual joys and sorrows. Wherever these personal testimonies are encouraged and guided to a truthful expression by the hand of a wise pastor, they become rich and powerful. They come oftenest from the simple and child-like members of the flock of Christ, and communicate an enthusiasm and ardour which cannot be described.

And not only do these testimonies bless others, but their influence over the heart and life of those who utter them, is incalculably great and good. There is something about the utterance of the sentiments of the heart. If we love, we love to tell our love, and merely to pour the precious essence forth from our heart is attended by divine sensations. It is the confession of Jesus Christ, and in no way is that confession so satisfactory as a personal testimony. Merely to explain a passage or give an exhortation is but little comfort to the heart. But to tell what the Lord has done for us, how dear his love, how great his peace, how faithful his promises—this is indeed a joy to the soul of the Christian.

The tendency of modern culture is toward the suppression of such testimonies; and it is a thing to be intensely regretted. What our fellow-men need to know is how the love of Jesus Christ affects our lives. Its influence on our outer lives they can tell by our conduct; but its influence on our inner lives, they cannot know, easily at least, except by our own testimony. It is a sad thing that as people become better educated and more refined, an impenetrable reserve settles down upon them; they shrink from letting others know their inner life. Every pastor of wide experience has observed that in the homes of the unlearned and simple all the facts of domestic and individual life are frankly and ingenuously confessed, while in the homes of wealth and culture, only the longest and most intimate acquaintance enables him to penetrate that reserve. This same sort of secretiveness prevails in the religious life, and the very people who are fitted by nature and education to make a clear and satisfactory revelation of their Christian experience by a testimony before religious people, are the very ones who refuse to do it.

This is to be regretted and deplored, and ought to be changed. In most cases, certainly, the minister would have to begin the changes with himself. One of the rarest experiences in most churches is that of hearing a minister speak of his own personal experience of the grace of God. The next rarest is to hear such testimonies from the officers. I can remember one, who was an exception, and to this day I recall with feelings of reverence that venerable form, and imagination reproduces the very tones of that voice retained in the chambers of memory through twenty years. He never exhorted, and he never counselled, and he never explained; but with the beautiful simplicity of a child he confessed what God was daily doing in his own heart.

How often as I have looked into the serene faces of aged Christians, I have wished that I could hear them tell how the presence of God affected them. And when I have beheld the sad and troubled faces of those who were suffering some exquisite sorrow which was hidden away from the scrutiny of men, I have thought how much peace and what relief they would receive if they should stand up in the presence of God's people and pour out the sorrow of their hearts! Wherever and whenever the Spirit of God moves vigorously upon the Church, this element of testimony of personal experience manifests itself, and wherever it prevails there are constant conversions. I believe that under wise guidance and thorough, helpful encouragement, the average prayer-meeting can be revolutionised, and the Church greatly strengthened, through the personal testimonies of believers.—Record of Christian Work.

JEWS AT MILDMAY.—About one hundred children, and four times as many adults, were recently entertained in the Mildmay Conference grounds on successive days. The children were addressed by Mr. J. Denham Smith and Mr. Daniells. Several of them also recited portions of Scripture from memory. The grown-up people were first addressed by Dr. Laseron, in the hall. After tea, a Gospel meeting was held in the grounds, and Mr. Kirkham exhibited his Dutch picture. A very grateful spirit was manifested by these Jewish brethren, whose prejudices are being disarmed by the Christian influence brought to bear upon them by Rev. J. Wilkinson and his fellow-helpers.

BACKSLIDING and FINAL APOSTASY.

There are certain well-known Scriptures bearing on this subject which cause great uneasiness to many sincere believers. I allude to 1 Sam. xvi. 14: "The Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul," &c. Heb. vi. 4—6: "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good Word of God, and the powers of the age to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance," &c. See also Heb. x. 26—31; 2 Pet. ii. 20—23. Believing that these words, so terrible to the insincere, give no reason for alarm to any who trust and love Jesus Christ in sincerity, I would offer the following thoughts to any who are interested in this question.

(1) There are varying degrees of possession by the Spirit of God, short of that full possession which involves conversion. There is the possession of the intellect, as in the case of Bezaleel, of whom God said (Exod. xxxi. 3, &c.): "I have filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship," &c. Then there is a much fuller and more wonderful and mysterious possession, exemplified by both Balaam and Saul. We are told that Balaam "loved the wages of unrighteousness." Yet how nobly he speaks! What glowing prophecies concerning Israel and Israel's Messiah he utters! (See Num. xxii.—xxiv.) None can doubt the power of the Spirit, both in him and upon him: as little can we doubt that he was a bad man at heart, and that he was never in communion with God. So with Saul. The Spirit rested upon him as the Spirit of prophecy, though oftener as the Spirit of wisdom, enabling him for his work as king. But he never seems to have been a truly spiritual man. There is no sign that his heart was ever submitted to God simply and entirely.

Christ teaches us to expect this partial possession by the Spirit, when He likens some to shallow, and others to thorny ground. In the first the Spirit's possession lacked depth: in the other it was deep, but partial—it lacked extent. Ananias and Sapphira exemplify the shallow ground; for they, we believe, received Christ at first with joy, and with much spiritual power. The thorny ground may well represent Judas. We have nothing to show that he was a conscious hypocrite when he first joined himself to Christ. Probably he had deep convictions of the truth, while it is almost certain that he, like all the other Apostles, preached Christ with spiritual power, and wrought miracles in his name. But all the while his heart was unmoved. "Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? Then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from Me, ye that work iniquity" (Matt. vii. 22, 23).

It should be carefully observed that the men we speak of are not mere professors only, not conscious hypocrites only, but men who have been possessors—men who "were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost," &c. (Heb. vi. 4, 5). They were possessors, but their possession came short of the saving point.

(2) Heb vi. 4—6 and similar passages cannot be taken as a description of true believers. This is made specially clear in Heb. vi. by the words better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak." The words "better things—things that accompany salvation," show that the experience of verses 4—6, however remarkable it may be, falls short of regeneration.

Taken thus, this passage entirely accords with our Saviour's teaching: "I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of My hand. My Father, who gave them Me, is greater than all, and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand" (John x. 28). See also 1 Pet. i. 5; Phil. i. 6; and listen to John, speaking of just such cases as those we have been considering: "They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us" (1 John ii. 19). The real children of God are kept by the Father's power unto salvation. Christ will never suffer Himself to be robbed of a single member of his mystical body.

(3) The difficulty, or impossibility, of restoration to repentance is in the man, and not with God. It is explained by the fact that a man loses his susceptibility to truth and love in proportion to the clearness of the light he rejects, and to the strength of the love he resists. The power of responding to the truth and grace that are in Jesus, which is limited in every man, is decreased by every rejection of the Gospel. The more fully and powerfully Christ is preached, the more sensitiveness does he lose when he refuses his grace. You have only to carry that throughout to its full extent, and you will reach the idea of Heb. vi. 4—6. Verses 4, 5, describe the fullest possible illumination of, and possession by, the Spirit, short of true conversion. Need we be surprised then, that when verse 6 tells of the apostasy, it says that it is irrevocable. It is so of necessity. God will forgive them if they repent. But repent they cannot. Having sinned away all sensitiveness to divine truth, they choose ungodliness, and are married to it.

(4) While this truth is a most solemn warning to every careless and presumptuous backslider, it is in no way discouraging to those who are penitent. These dreadful passages tell of those who cannot repent; who do not desire God's grace, being gospel-hardened. Therefore, anyone who has any real desire to return to God belongs to another company altogether. God's Word puts an immeasurable distance between the easy-going, sin-loving apostate, and him who longs for the grace and pardon of his God.

Many are sorely distressed with the word "wilfully" in Heb. x. 26: "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth," &c. This must mean either some definite act of conscious and chosen sin, or a course and state of sin. It cannot mean the former, else there had been no hope for Peter, and for the millions more of true believers who since his time have been restored after committing wilful sin. It must mean, a course or state of sin; such a state, doubtless, as I have just described, in which the sinner is past feeling, evil being his good. The Bible is full of promises to backsliders and others. All are urged to return to God: whosoever is willing may come to Him. Can He belie Himself? Can He forget his own words, "Him that cometh, I will in no wise cast out?"

(5) The facts I have now mentioned show us that experience alone cannot be a safe ground of assurance. Some people seem to have little or the light of other days. They can talk well and happily of their conversion and early zeal, but there they stop. Asked "Are you a Christian?" they answer, "Yes. I was converted fifteen years ago," &c.—all in the past tense. We fancy that Saul could have said a good deal in the same way; and as for Balaam and Judas, they could have taken a foremost place at any experience meeting, while they told of wonderful things done in them and by them.

(6) Assurance of salvation should rest on a double foundation. First, the testimony of the Holy Spirit within the soul to Jesus and his Word; and, secondly, the testimony of the believer's heart and life to the reality of his consecration to God. The first is the direct vision of faith through the Word. It is not a reasoning, but a seeing—such a vision of God in his righteousness, goodness, and truth as impels the soul to trust Him fully. As a lost and frightened child finds full assurance of rest and restoration to home in the kind and honest face and the confident words of promise of some sympathising stranger, so the spiritually lost and weary know the full assurance of faith when the Spirit makes Jesus Christ a reality to the heart.

But hand in hand with this must go the testimony of the believer's heart and life. For as soon as there is a doubt of our own honesty before God, and of our consistency before men, the bright testimony of the Spirit begins to be withheld. The Spirit alone can maintain, as He alone can give, that spiritual knowledge of Christ which fills us with joy and peace in believing. But he is very sensitive to sin. Any sin allowed grieves Him, and moves Him to withdraw his testimony. Then the beauty of the promises fades, and the glory of the Bible becomes dim, and then it is that our assurance of faith shrivels into a mere opinion resting on a past experience of blessing, a sapless and dangerous thing.

We believe that no man can be rightly assured of his salvation, apart from present obedience, and the present testimony of the Holy Ghost within the soul;—that when carelessness or sin interrupts communion with God, then the best evidence of salvation is withheld. On the other hand, we believe, not only that every true child of God will be kept by the Father's power, but also that it is the Father's will that we should be kept by that same power in the place of communion and in the constant joy and assurance of faith.

John Pearce Clark.

TRAMCAR AND 'BUS TEXT MISSION.—The work of this Association, whose object it is to spread the Gospel by placing texts in tramcars and omnibuses, has considerably increased during the past year. Select portions of Scripture are now exhibited in one hundred of these conveyances. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Wood, care of Miss Beard, 279, Clapham-road.

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—Sir,—Our Mission is suffering sorely for need of workers. The little floral messengers, with the Scripture words attached, find their way into hospitals, workhouses, and infirmaries through our lady visitors, who seek to deal personally with the inmates. By means of city missionaries, Scripture-readers, Bible-women, and school children they are carried into the homes of thousands. We are constantly receiving accounts of the way in which God is blessing his own Word. But the work is too great for our present small band of workers. The health of our superintendent has given way under long-continued strain, and the strength of others is failing. Are there no Christian ladies in London or its suburbs who will come to our help? Any information will be gladly given at the Offices of the Mission, 110, Cannon-street. Emma J. Newman.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.—7.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.

THE PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

1 Kings xviii.

When Elijah left Zarephath it is more than probable that his mind was utterly destitute of any fixed plan of action. He knew that he must show himself to Ahab, and that rain was not far away; for these were his definite marching orders: "Go, show thyself unto Ahab; and I will send rain upon the earth." But more than that he knew not. There may have flitted before his spirit dim previsions of that sublime conflict on Carmel's heights, but he knew nothing certainly; his one endeavour was to quiet his eager nature, like a weaned child, hushing it with the lullaby of an old refrain: "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him."

The plan of this great campaign for God against Baal, for truth against error, may have been revealed to Elijah on his journey from Zarephath to find Ahab, and at a sudden glance, as when a lightning-flash reveals to a benighted traveller the winding pathway he must follow through the vale beneath. But it is quite as likely that it was revealed in pieces, like the separate bits of a children's puzzle, handed out, one by one, from the parent to the child, who might be confused to do with more than one at a time. This is so often God's way, and they who trust Him utterly are quite pleased to have it so. There is even a novelty and beauty in life, when every step is unforeseen and unexpected, and opens up new vistas of loveliness in his management and Himself.

If we seek to think ourselves into Elijah's attitude of heart and mind, as he left the shelter of Zarephath, and began to pass through the incidents that culminated in Carmel, it seems to have been twofold. And surely it is of surpassing interest to learn how such a man felt, as he approached the sublime crisis of his life.

(1) He was filled with a consuming passion for the glory of God.—"Let it be known that Thou art God in Israel." This prayer is the key to his heart. He neither knew nor cared to know what would become of himself; but his soul was on fire with a holy jealousy for the glory of God. He could not bear to think of those wrecked altars or martyred prophets. He could not bear to think how the Land of Promise was groaning beneath the obscene and deadly rites of Phœnician idolatry. He could not bear to think that his people were beginning to imagine that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel had abdicated in favour of these false deities brought newly in. And when he was compelled to face these things, his spirit was stirred to its depths with indignation and sorrow.

Well would it be if each one of us were similarly inspired! We are very eager for the success of our work, our church, our sect. If these thrive we are satisfied. If these languish we are depressed. We are wholly occupied with the interests of our own tiny pools, oblivious of the great sea of divine glory lying near by, in perpetual sunshine. Is it wonderful that we have so small a measure of success? God will not give his glory to another, nor his praise to the graven images of our own conceit. But in this, also, God is willing to lift our daily experience to the level of our loftiest ideals. Only trust Him to do it; ask, and expect Him to fill you with the fire of that zeal which burnt in the heart of Elijah, consuming all that was base, corrupt, and selfish, and making the whole man a fit agent for God. This was no in-him than it is to any one of us. It was simply one of the fruits of the indwelling of the Holy Ghost, who is equally promised to the most ignoble nature.

(2) He was profoundly convinced that he was only a servant.—"Let it be known that Thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant." It was not for the slave in olden times to originate, or scheme, or plan, but to be pliant to the least expression of the master's will—to be a tool in his hand, a chess-piece on the board for him to move just where he willed. And this was the attitude of Elijah's spirit—surrendered, yielded, emptied; plastic to the hands that reach down out of heaven moulding men.

This attitude is the true one for us all. Are we not too fond of doing things for God, instead of letting God do what He chooses through us? We say, "We will go yonder, we will do this and that, we will work for God thus." We do not consider that we should first inquire if this were God's will for us. We do not recognise his absolute ownership. We often miss doing what He sorely wants us to do, because we insist on carrying out some little whim of our own. This is the blight on much of the activity of Christian people at the present time. They are not satisfied to be as the Apostle Paul was, "the slave of Jesus Christ" (Rom. i. 1, marg.).

(3) He was eagerly desirous to know and work out God's plan.—"Let it be known this day that Thou art God in Israel; and that I am thy servant; and that I have done all these things according to thy word." When once a man feels that he is working out God's plan, and that God is working out his plan through him, he is invincible. Men, circumstances, opposition, are of no more account than the chaff of the autumn threshings. God's plan is his purpose; and God's purpose shall be accomplished, though earth and heaven pass away. And this was doubtless one element in Elijah's splendid strength.

This question as to our relation to God's plan is most important. Because the power and blessing of God are only to be enjoyed, in all their fulness, by those who are where He would have them be. God had the plan of the desert wanderings in his thought long before Israel left Egypt; and He worked out that plan by the movements of the cloud over the desert sands. The manna fell on any given morning, only where the cloud was brooding, shielding the host by its fleecy folds. To get the manna and the shade, the blood-redeemed must be just where God's plan required them to be. This is a parable of our lives. Would we have Divine supplies? We must keep step with the Divine plan. The fire burns only when we erect the altar according to God's word. We must not be disobedient to any heavenly vision. We must not spend our years in day-dreams, or in seeking comfort, but must be incessant in uttering the cry, "What wilt Thou have me to do?"

There are many ways of learning God's plan. Sometimes it is revealed in circumstances, not always pleasant, but ever acceptable, because revealing our Father's will. No circumstance happens outside his permission; and, therefore, each is a King's messenger, bearing his message, though we are sometimes puzzled to decipher it. Sometimes God's plan is revealed by strong impressions of duty, which increase in proportion as they are prayed over, and are tested by the Word of God.

There are many voices by which God can speak his will to the truly surrendered spirit. If there is any confusion as to what it is, it is due to one of these two causes: either the will is not fully yielded to do God's will, so soon as known, but there is some film between the two, preventing the entire permeation of the human by the Divine; or the time of perfect knowledge has not arrived, and we must be content quietly to wait for the salvation of God. It is a true rule for us all, to do nothing, so long as we are in any uncertainty, but to examine ourselves, and to be ready to act so soon as we know. We may not infrequently have the experience of the Apostle Peter repeated in our own: "While Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he

Cornelius stood before the gate" (Acts x. 17). The knocking of three men at a gate may sometimes indicate God's plan, or a dream from across the sea, or the glimpse of a weary face, just a little more weary than others around. (Acts xvi. 9, 10; John v. 6 and 17.)

The plan, as Elijah unfolded it to Ahab, was eminently adapted to the circumstances of the case.—All Israel was to be gathered by royal summons to Carmel, which reared itself above the plain of Esdraelon, a noble site for a national meeting-ground. Special care was to be taken to secure the presence of the representatives of the systems that had dared to rival the worship of Jehovah; "the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the Asherah four hundred, which eat at Jezebel's table." A test was then to be imposed on these rival systems, which the adherents of Baal could not possibly refuse, for he was the Sun-god, and this was a trial by fire.

Elijah knew that the altar of Baal would remain smokeless. He was equally sure that Jehovah would answer his faith by fire, as He had done again and again in the glorious past. He felt convinced also that the people, unable to escape the evidence of their senses, would for ever disavow the accursed systems of Phœnicia, and would return once more to the worship of the God of their fathers.

It is probable that, in the case of Ahab, only so much of this plan was disclosed as was necessary to secure the gathering of the people. To tell him too much would be to invite criticism, and perhaps to arouse opposition. It is not likely that he would have been so pliant, unless allured by the bait of rain. "So Ahab sent unto all the children of Israel, and gathered the prophets together unto Mount Carmel."

We do not know how this was done, but doubtless the royal word would be passed through the country by a system of messengers, like those which once gave warning of the peril of Jabesh-Gilead; or, in later times, carried through the Highlands the fiery cross. But in any case this summoning of the people must have taken a few days. And it is by that interval of waiting that we are for a moment arrested. It was like the sultry hush which precedes the breaking of a tropic thunderstorm; or the momentary pause, before long lines of armed men are launched at each other in the shock of battle.

Where and how did Elijah spend that interval?—We are told that "he came unto all the people," when they were finally assembled on the appointed day. We may not press the word; but does it not suggest that he came from the contrary direction to that from which the people gathered? And if the people came from the whole circumference of the land, may he not have come from some ancient cave of Carmel's heights, just where the long range of hills drops suddenly down in sheer precipices on the sea?

In my opinion, Elijah spent those memorable days of waiting on Carmel itself; sheltering himself and the lad in some wild cave at night, and by day going carefully over the scene of the approaching conflict. How mournfully would he bend over the stones of that altar, which was broken down; broken down not by the wild weather, or the devastating hand of time, but by the wicked behest of Jezebel (ver. 32). How eagerly would he search out the original twelve stones, strewn recklessly afar, and covered by wild undergrowth. He would need them soon! How constantly would he stay himself upon his God, and pour out litanies of supplication for the people, and gird himself for the coming conflict by effectual fervent prayer. Would he not learn the way down to Kishon's brook beneath, and visit the perennial spring, from which he would fill the barrels again and yet again with water!

We sometimes seem to think that that answer of fire was probably so much the result of God's determination as to have been largely independent of any special exercise of the prophet's faith. We suppose that more faith and prayer were needed to bring the rain than to bring the leaping, consuming flame. We consider that the one needed the intense sevenfold prayer, whilst in the audience of the amazed people, at the moment of sacrifice. But this is a very superficial reading of the story, and it is not in harmony with the general dealings of God. "For all these things I will be inquired of." As much fervent believing prayer was needed for the fire as for the rain; and the answer by fire would never have come that day, if the previous days had not been spent in the presence-chamber of God. The prayer during ten days of waiting, in the upper room, must precede the descent of the Holy Ghost, as a baptism of fire, on the day of Pentecost.

It is a sublime spectacle—this yielded, surrendered man, waiting on Carmel, in steadfast faith, the gathering of the people, and the unfolding of the purpose of God. He had no fear about the issue, and as the days rolled by his soul rose in higher and ever higher joy. He expected soon to see a nation at the feet of God.

And he was all this, not because he was of a different make to ourselves; but because he had got into the blessed habit of dealing with God at first hand, as a Living Reality, in whose presence it was his privilege and glory always to stand.

MY SEVENTH MISSION.

By Rev. P. NORTON,
Curate of St. Nicholas, Worcester.

Parochial Missions are now the order of the day. They often result in manifold blessing. All missions are not equally blessed. I have on this subject conferred with that veteran missioner Rev. W. Haslam, and also with Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken. Their experience agrees with mine. In some cases a mission results in abounding blessing; in other cases it falls flat. Something depends upon the missioner. It is not every good man or good preacher who is called to be a missioner. I knew an excellent man who killed his mission by preaching long didactic sermons—so long that one evening there was a stampede for the church door before his sermon was ended. I knew of another case where an equally good man, but of an irritable disposition, so ruffled and vexed the spirits of the people that he had to withdraw before his mission was over. A mission preacher should be sound in body, mind, and doctrine. He should have perfect self-control, and the gift of sharp, clear, incisive speech. He should not merely be able to send flights of arrows from the pulpit to the hearts of the King's enemies, but he should be able wisely to conduct the after-meeting, dealing tenderly with seeking souls. Above all, he should have a passionate love for his Master and for the souls of men.

For my part, I should never have dared to undertake this solemn work if the call had not come from God. It came in this unexpected way: A clergyman, who had read a little book of mine, an entire stranger, wrote, asking me to come to his parish and hold a week's mission. I went with fear and trembling, but returned with great joy, for it was, indeed, a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Since then I have taken two missions a year, always with blessing, but with varying success. If it be inquired why a mission in one parish seems almost fruitless, and a mission by the same preacher, and with the same sermons, results in another parish in a glorious ingathering of souls, I reply: Something, doubtless, depends upon preparation, prayer, and faith. Better have no mission at all than not carefully prepare for it. There must also be prayer on the part of clergy and people. Prayer implies active sympathy. What blessing could be expected when (as in one case), whilst the worthy vicar was doing his best, the unworthy curate was openly deriding the mission? What blessing could be expected, when (in another case) a friend of mine took a mission, at the request rather of the congregation than of the clergy, and whilst he was holding forth in the pulpit, the rector and curate were reading books in the choir stalls, visibly indifferent? There must also be faith. A certain clergyman, who had always protested he "did not believe in missions," was persuaded to unite in a general town mission. He had an eminent missioner at his church. God laid his hand upon the missioner by sudden illness. The mission utterly broke down. According to that clergyman's faith it was rendered to him.

But even when all has been well prepared, and there are prayer and faith in a parish, results will vary. The fact is, we must look away from second causes up to the great First Cause. We must remember that God is sovereign. He doeth as He will among the inhabitants of the earth. The Omnipotent wind of the Spirit bloweth where He listeth. The work is God's. This thought kept myself and my fellow-workers humble during the marvellous success of the recent mission. It was my seventh. The blessed Paraclete seemed to take this mission into his hands. We realised that it was the Lord's doing; so, amid blessing exceeding abundant, above all that we could ask or think, we were kept very low. Our watchword was Adam pereat, Jesus vivat—let self perish and Jesus be glorified. The picture before us, day by day, was that of the worm threshing the mountains (Isa. xli. 14, 15). We did, indeed, thresh the black mountains of sin, but we felt that the power was not of us.

The name of the parish is —— Cross. I said upon my arrival, "When my dear Master was on earth, riches did not belong to Him, nor pleasure, nor worldly pomp, but the Cross did belong to Him. There is a happy omen in the name of this place. Let the motto of our mission be, '—— Cross for Christ.'" And so it was. The parish church stands on a hillside. The vicarage is beautifully situate upon a spot 800 feet above the sea level. In clear weather one can see the mountains of Wales, fifty miles distant. On the north of —— Cross, the wild moors of Yorkshire and the grand hills of the Peak of Derbyshire form a magnificent panorama. On the south, seven miles distant, lies the great city of Manchester, hidden by a cloud of black smoke. —— Cross lies under a cloud of a different kind. It has long been under the dark shadow of the Christ-denying heresy, Unitarianism. In the centre of the parish there stands a splendid and venerable building with heaven-pointing spire. One would suppose it to be the parish church. Alas! it is a Unitarian (once Presbyterian) chapel. It is a steeple-house, no church: it is a temple without an altar; a house without the fire of God; the symbol of the Cross is retained without, the doctrine of the Cross is denied within. Oh! that the great Shepherd of souls would in his mercy restore the wandering flock, whose footsteps echo in this icy enclosure, to the true fold.

The weather is always an important element in missions. At —— Cross the Lord did indeed favour us. Never before, at the same season, do I remember such days of cloudless beauty, such nights of serene brightness. Without the church and vicarage was sunshine; within was God-shine, for the Lord did indeed lift upon us the light of his countenance.

In my fellow-workers I was highly favoured. Never have I met with a brother more after mine own heart than the excellent vicar. He is a devoted man of large experience. He has been a world wanderer, but in all his wanderings he felt the thread of a mother's prayers drawing him to God. He has killed rattlesnakes, been in mortal combat with Indians, and chased the flying deer in the wilds of the West. He fought as a soldier, under the Stars and Stripes, against slavery in the great American war. He knows what it is to confront the levelled tube of death. He is now fighting with burning zeal a nobler battle, under the standard of the Cross, against the tyranny of Satan. Deaconess W—— (who had done good service for me in a former mission) and Sister H—— both laboured much in the Lord. Their diligent visitation of all the houses in the parish, their fervent prayers, their addresses at the mills and factories, their smiles of welcome to the people, their loving guidance of seekers after Christ—all these contributed much to the success of the mission.

Our Wesleyan brethren also kindly came to our help. We thought it our duty, after the manner of Nelson's command to his officers, to "shake hands in the presence of the common foe." In the language of the vicar, "when we had enclosed so great a number of fishes from the sea of sin in the Gospel net, that our boats began to sink, we beckoned to our partners that were in the other ship." We reciprocated their kindness. Our hands were greatly strengthened in God by the fact that in stately halls and humble cottages, in quiet country parsonages and in city prayer-meetings, holy voices were rising on our behalf to the throne of the Eternal. After the mission I wrote to one of these friends and said, "Sir, we marched to victory to the tune of your prayers."

The success vouchsafed was exceeding abundant. At the very first after-meeting some fifteen souls were brought in. The number increased each night. Toward the end of the mission we were detained in church until after ten o'clock in directing seeking souls. A good proportion of men and lads decided for Jesus. In some cases whole families were brought out of darkness into God's light. "The tears of penitents are the wine of angels," said St. Augustine; if so, the angels were drinking plentiful libations of wine in Holy Trinity Church during the mission. The children's services were deeply interesting. The bleating of the lambs is sweet music in the ears of the Good Shepherd, who said, "Suffer little children to come." The dear lambs looked up and were fed. The men's service was a time of speaking from the heart to the heart. I reminded those present that the men in the great Birmingham Bible-class at Sparkbrook were praying for us. It was also my privilege to address, with Brother Aitken, a mass meeting for men held in an adjoining parish.

Some of the incidents of the mission were very touching. One of the converts, in a simple prayer, said, "O God, bless everybody." A lady whose spirit was refreshed by the mission told me that she had been brought up in the cold negations of Unitarianism. The testimony was, "Many of these people die broken-hearted. Their lives are full of worldliness, and when sickness comes their creed has for them no Saviour, no comforter. Reasoning would never have convinced me. It was the hunger of my sinful heart for a Saviour that led me to Jesus." At the close of an address at a factory on "The wages of sin and the gift of God," Deaconess W—— related the following remarkable incident:—"In the summer of 1883 I was addressing a noisy crowd of excursionists who were waiting for their return train at Walton-on-the-Naze. When I had ceased speaking a man came up to me and said, 'Madam, I want you to tell me where heaven is; not out of the Bible, I don't believe that.' The Holy Spirit gave me the right word. I smiled, and putting my hand upon my heart, said, 'Heaven is here.' The man turned as still as a stone; he then put his hand upon his heart, and said, 'True, madam, and hell is here.'"

During the mission we were not without that token of blessing—a little opposition. A good old minister used to pray, "From a sleeping devil, good Lord, deliver us." We had ocular demonstration that the wrath of the great adversary was roused by the mission. We are not anxious to tabulate results; we must be careful about numbering God's Israel. But the vicar, after sober consideration, computes that upwards of one hundred were, by the Spirit of our God, convinced and converted, and that more than another hundred received spiritual blessing. All this in a comparatively small parish. At the close of the service 120 of us gathered around the holy table, full of wonder, love, and praise. We never expect a sweeter experience until we meet at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. We sang with heart and voice, "'Tis done, the great transaction's done," and ended with Miss Havergal's hymn—

Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee.

At the vicarage the workers agreed that it had been the happiest week in our lives. Believe me, dear reader, there is no joy like the joy of the Lord, joy in the Lord's service. Sometimes God's labourers have to go forth weeping, bearing precious seed. Even then we sow in hope, and our very tears are sweeter than the worldling's pleasures. But sometimes, even as we sow, the harvest of souls ripens around us, as in this mission. Then, indeed, the joy is great.

TIDINGS FROM FAR LANDS.

HOME LIFE IN NEW GUINEA.

On Thursday, last week, Rev. James Chalmers, who sailed yesterday for his home in the Pacific delivered an address at the Aldersgate-street Noon Prayer-meeting. He gave an interesting sketch of the home life of the natives of this recent addition to the British dominions. He counselled parents in this country to devote more time to their homes; to spend their evenings there when possible, even in preference to going to religious meetings, and to take a deeper and more active interest in the happiness and spiritual life of their children.

He had often been cheered by what he had witnessed in the villages of New Guinea and the South Sea Islands. Just as the sun went down parents and children would assemble in their homes, and then would be heard the glad song of praise ascending to the throne of God. Speaking especially of Manihiki, he said the village is built round the teacher's house. This man was one of the many grand instructors these islands have supplied. When asked on one occasion by the French Governor of Lifu, "Who told you to come here?" he replied, "My Master said to me, 'Go into all the world and preach the Gospel. That is what brought me here." For this reply, pronounced impudent, he was imprisoned for three days, and then sent away. This man made it a rule, just as the sun dipped into the sea, to ring a bell. Parents and children all then went into their homes, from every one of which would ascend the hymn of praise, sung to some grand old English tune, to the Father of all mankind. After about fifteen minutes devoted to reading of the Scripture and prayer, the people went into the open air, and there conversed together a while. From that island of Manihiki some of the grandest Christian teachers have gone forth to evangelise their brethren, and many have laid down their lives for the sake of that Saviour whom as little children they learnt to love.

Mr. Chalmers said he did not wish it to be supposed that savages have no home life. True, they have no corresponding word for the English word home. He had, however, often watched with delight the proofs of affection between parents and children. These would run to meet the father on his return from some boating excursion, perhaps, and he would take up each in his arms and kiss them all over; while the wife, perhaps with an infant in her arms, would stand on the beach to receive her husband's greeting. The desire of the missionaries was not to Anglicise these people, but to tell them that God loves them with an infinite love, that Jesus died for them. At Port Moresby, where some years ago, though the people lived a similar kind of life to that just described, there were continual wars between the different tribes, there is now peace. Here the people all gather for prayer at sunset, as at Manihiki. They have a selection of about two hundred hymns from various books, and the four Gospels have been translated into their language, and printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society. The children who have been to school give out the hymn, lead the singing, read a chapter of the Gospel, and very often too engage in prayer, when the parents cannot. In the morning there is not so much singing, but on rising about 5.30 a few verses of Scripture are read and prayer is offered. In this way the missionaries have sought, and with much success, to inculcate the spirit of worship in the home rather than of church-going, and thus backbone has been given to the religious life of the people. It is this family life in Christ, he added, which makes strong men and women. If only there were more of this in England, not so many of her sons when they go abroad would be as stumbling-blocks to the natives, who look to them to see what Christianity is like.

PROGRESS IN THE PACIFIC.

At the Aldersgate-street Noon Prayer-meeting recently, Rev. W. Wyatt-Gill, missionary from the South Pacific, gave a brief statement of work there and its results. His work since July, 1851, has been amongst eleven islands of the Hervey group. He spoke of the condition of the natives at the time—of their love of revenge and human sacrifices, of the blood feuds that existed among them, of the rule followed by all of keeping alive two children, and no more, in every family, and of the whole aspect of life as something fearful; all this has been changed through the influence of Christianity. The spiritual work has been most interesting. To see a people who once were cannibals sitting down to the Lord's Supper has been truly delightful. At the New Year's gathering it has been the custom for all the members of the Church at Rarotonga to assemble together for worship. Looking around upon this gathering, the family history of all known to him, he had seen the bread passed by one to a man whose father that man had murdered, or the reverse.

The work of evangelisation in these islands has been done almost entirely by the natives whom it has been Mr. Gill's object to train for this purpose. It is perfectly wonderful what they have done. Hundreds have sacrificed their lives to carry the Gospel to their brethren. At least sixty of Mr. Gill's own church have been killed while acting as missionaries. A brief reference was also made to the work in New Guinea, and Mr. Gill's concluding word was that the thought of the thousands of Christians in the islands where he was labouring, and in New Guinea, should increase their faith in the power of the Gospel. He had himself seen such miracles of grace amongst these peoples that he could no longer despair of any man's conversion.

THE KABYLE MISSION.

Rev. E. F. Baldwin writes from Rabat, Morocco:—"It is now three weeks since we left Hope House. Miss Jay has gone on a trip with Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh. The proposed alterations and additions are begun, and therefore the medical work will be discontinued for some time. Dr. Churcher thinks of spending some weeks at Tetuan for Arabic study and practice.

"We were joined by Miss Herdman and Miss Caley, at Larache, where they were working temporarily. In Larache we had some large open-air services—one in particular. There and all along we have had large and blessed opportunities for preaching the Word of Life. Miss Herdman possesses all her old energy, and much more Arabic, of course. She adapts her addresses admirably to her hearers, and is an invaluable worker. Miss Caley speaks with considerable freedom already, and makes large use of all she knows. She loses no opportunity for recommending Christ. They have quite determined to go (D.V.) to Fez next fall."

Mr. A. S. Lamb, who has just returned to his work in Algeria, also writes earnestly appealing for more Christian workers. He urges that if any prominent workers who think they cannot be spared from their spheres of labour here were to go forth, others of less prominence would fill their places, and gradually develop into workers as useful as themselves. But by their remaining at home they hinder such development, and thus limit the extension of the work of God.

TESTIMONIAL TO MR. ROBERT RAE.—The many friends of the widely respected Secretary of the National Temperance League will be glad to know that the proposal to present him with a testimonial, in recognition of his eminent and long-sustained services to the temperance cause, has been heartily responded to. The presentation will be made at Exeter Hall on Thursday evening, July 7, by the Bishop of London. Further contributions towards the object may be sent to Mr. W. I. Palmer, Hillside, Reading, or to Mr. John Taylor, 5, Tokenhouse-yard, London, E.C. Tickets of admission will be sent on application to 337, Strand, W.C.

BIBLE STUDY.

"Ye are the light of the world."—Matt. v. 14.

(1) Christ's lamps are lit by Himself.—"Aaron lighted the lamps" (Num. viii. 3). "I am the light of the world" (John viii. 12). "In Him was life, and the life was the light of men" (John i. 4). "Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life" (John v. 40). "Christ, who is our life" (Col. iii. 4). "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith" (Eph. iii. 17).

(2) Kept burning by the Spirit.—"Pure oil-olive beaten for the light, to cause the lamp to burn always" (Ex. xxvii. 20). "Seven pipes to the seven lamps...and two olive-trees by it... These two olive-branches...through the two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves...Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts" (Zech. iv. 2, 3, 12, 6). "Be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. v. 18). "As the same anointing teacheth you of all things...ye shall abide in Him" (1 John ii. 27).

The Spirit given through Christ.—"Aaron... dresseth the lamps" (Exod. xxx. 7). "Thou hast received gifts for men" (Ps. lxviii. 18). "The Comforter, whom I will send unto you from the Father" (John xv. 26). "The Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive" (John vii. 39).

(3) Trimmed by the Lord.—"Aaron shall burn (on the altar) sweet incense every morning: when he dresseth the lamps, he shall burn incense upon it. And when Aaron lighteth the lamps at even, he shall burn incense upon it" (Exod. xxx. 7, 8). (Our High Priest Himself trims his lamps, praying for them; and when He sees the light burning clear and high, He praises for them.) "My Father is the husbandman" (John xv. 1). (The pruning is entrusted to no human hand.) "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth" (Heb. xii. 6). (The very snuffers in the Tabernacle were all of gold; so every trial, however small, that goes against and helps to crucify self, is a golden instrument in the Lord's own hand.)

(4) Before the Lord. In the world.—"He lighted the lamps before the Lord" (Ex. xl. 25, xxvii. 21). But Christ's lamps are also to be "lights in the world" (Phil. ii. 15). (The light will shine in proportion as the life is lived in communion with God.) "Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with Him" (Ex. xxxiv. 29). "I have set the Lord always before me; because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved" (Ps. xvi. 8).

(5) Object of burning.—"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. v. 16). "Lights in the world; holding forth the word of life" (Phil. ii. 15, 16). "Ye shall be witness unto Me" (Acts i. 8).

MR. WILLIAM MARK NOBLE is contributing to The Christian Commonwealth a series of articles, entitled "Sunbeams and Icicles," on a three years' tour in New Zealand, Australia, and the United States, describing the works of the various Christian and Temperance Institutions of the cities and towns visited.

FEMALE ORPHAN HOME.—Six children have been received into this Home at Tangley Park, Hampton, Middlesex, during the twelve months just closed, and ten left, there being still forty inmates. Children are eligible between four and ten years of age, and are kept till they are fifteen, when they are placed in domestic service or some useful calling. The report utters a note of thankfulness that in the thirty-one years during which this Home had been open, the absolute needs of the orphans have all been supplied, and it is just this "daily bread" for which those who are responsible continually plead, and for the provision of which these many years they now praise the Almighty Father. Reference is also made to a pleasing feature of the subscription list,—viz., that so many sums have been sent in by children, thus showing that they are being trained to take an intelligent and personal share in the work of caring for their poorer brethren. The office is at 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., the secretary being Mr. J. D. Cooper.

THE MUSCOVITE JERUSALEM.

Sir,—Your quotation from The Pall Mall Gazette a few weeks ago, anent the Czar of Russia, has led me to make the following excerpt from Dr. Cumming's "The Seventh Vial."—Yours faithfully, Wm. Walker.

119, Newington-green-road, N.

Ezek. xxxix. 2-4. To prove that the inveterate ambition of the Muscovite runs in the channels of prophecy, unconsciously on his part, Dr. Cumming extracts from The Daily News, A.D. 1855, the following interesting and illustrative account (from "The Seventh Vial," pp. 319, &c.): —"According to the Univers, from which these details are copied, there exists, not far from Moscow, a place rejoicing in the euphonious title of 'Voskreseenskeë.' The interpretation of this outlandish term is 'The New Jerusalem'; in other words, it is a counterfeit of the Holy City. One of its chief places of attraction is a mock tomb, called the Saviour's Sepulchre, to which crowds of the pious continually flock for the purpose of offering prayers for the deliverance of the real tomb. They are taught also to supplicate Heaven for the extermination of those who guard the 'Holy Places,' and to invoke a like curse upon such as have betrayed the Christian cause by becoming their allies. It appears that this imaginary Jerusalem consists of a vast temple, the site of which corresponds with that of Palestine, save in the absence of a bright sky and a glowing sun. The resemblance in the natural position is rendered perfect by immense artificial works, so as to remove the illusion almost beyond the power of discovery. On one side of the structure is a brook, upon the banks of which are inscriptions announcing that the pilgrim has reached Kedron, while on the other side is an eminence called the Mount of Olives; then, on passing a spacious crenellated enclosure, the beholder sees before him a grand edifice, in imitation of the one erected over the holy sepulchre, having an immense cupola and all the accessories belonging to its famous prototype. The effect is said to be quite bewildering.

"This impression increases after having penetrated into the interior, where all the details of the true temple are minutely copied; where the sanctums, the altars, the tombs—in all their dimensions—and where the painting and the ornaments are all of the same kind as those at Jerusalem. In the inner sanctuary, too, there are the seven lamps kept continually burning, and so complete is the deception that there is an equal degree of emotion excited among the ignorant peasantry as in the sacred grotto itself. Such is the Muscovite Jerusalem. The invention of this extraordinary sham is attributed to Alexis, father of Peter the Great.

"And now as to the motive for so strange a creation. Among the objects found on the wounded Russians at Inkerman was a Slavonic book, well besmeared and smoke-scented, and purporting to be a guide to the above-mentioned fabric. This work discloses a secret which the ingenuity of Western speculators has failed to worm out. It shows that the Czars have had another pole of attraction besides Constantinople; they have fixed their greedy gaze upon the fallen city of the Hebrew."

BLOOMSBURY MISSION.—Sunday Words, in an interesting sketch of the history of this Mission, gives also an account, accompanied with portrait, of Mr. William Harrison's work.

HOME OF LOVE MISSION.—This Liverpool Mission to the outcast has two Homes, one in Gay-street and the other in Upper Mann-street. Rev. H. J. Wood, formerly Vicar of Farnley, Yorkshire, gave up his living, worth £250 a year, that he might undertake this work; and his coadjutor, Mr. Nunn, also gave up business with the same object. Recently a mission service was commenced in the Adelphi Theatre, Christian-street, and on the first evening about one hundred of the poorest and most wretched-looking people were present. There are two other workers who assist in carrying on this work of love amongst the lowest class of outcasts, drunkards, and criminals in squalid Liverpool.

FAMINE IN CENTRAL TURKEY.

Sir,—A great calamity has befallen the people of Adana, in Central Turkey. Famine is doing its deadly work. The case is stated in simple, but pathetic terms by Rev. G. F. Montgomery, one of the American missionaries, to whom (he says) all eyes, Moslem as well as Christian, are now turned:—

"What shall I do for these poor people during this dreadful drought and starvation? There has not been any rain here this winter, except three or four small showers. The ground is as bare and as dry as it was last autumn. There is not a field of wheat in all this plain within twenty miles of Adana, except a few acres near Tarsus watered from the river. There is no barley crop, and no grass for sheep or cattle. Large numbers of the sheep and cattle have died, and the remainder have been driven off to the mountains. There was some hope of a part of the cotton and sesame crop until two weeks ago, but now that hope has gone. The vineyards, too, are drying up, and not only will the grape crop be of no account, but many of the vineyards will be wholly destroyed. Young trees, also, will be destroyed.

"The exports of this region in cotton, sesame, grapes, &c., usually amount to about £T800,000. There is no hope of any exports this year. Wheat and barley worth £T1,000,000 were raised last year. This year there will not be 100 liras worth. In the harvesting, selling, and handling of the various crops usually 100,000 men find employment and support. Here, where farming is everything, and everything depends on the crops produced, where farm life is the source of all the money that finds its way to the markets, a drought like this stops all work, and shuts off the money supply. Hence there is no money, no work, and no means whereby the common labourer can get bread. Not only the 100,000 labourers have nothing to do this year, but masons, carpenters, smiths, and merchants are without work. Eight out of every ten of our people are day labourers, dependent upon daily work for daily food.

"I see no other way, but that thousands of them must die of starvation unless help from abroad comes to them. Already many of the poor families are reduced to the last extremity for bread. Some families, not supposed to be very poor, have been shut up to a diet of dry bread for several weeks. Many are selling off their cooking utensils, beds, and every saleable article of furniture to buy bread. If obliged to do this now at the very beginning of the year, what will become of them before the year terminates? Masons and carpenters who usually earn from fifteen to twenty-five piasters per day, too spirited to beg, are asking for work at two piasters per day. Everywhere are distress and consternation. Those who can get away to other places with hope of support are moving away, and hundreds have gone."

With the knowledge of suffering like this, we who are interested in the people of the East cannot be silent. We venture to appeal to the public for contributions towards a famine relief fund, to be administered by the missionaries. Money may be sent to the Secretary of the Turkish Missions' Aid Society, 7, Adam-street, Strand.

WEALTH AND POVERTY.—This was the subject of the Merchants' Lecture, delivered by Rev. Alfred Rowland, in Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields, on Tuesday last week. The worship of money, he said, is in the churches as well as in society. Pointing to the condition of the poor, and to the moral degradation and religious hopelessness to which their privations tend, he said the poor should be thought of in the spirit of the Gospel teaching. In fact, Christians were only the stewards of their property for the benefit of their brethren, and they should therefore endeavour to understand the complicated problem before them, and throw their energies into any movement which tended to its solution, remembering that God's love was not for them alone, but for all men.

An INFIDEL STRANGELY CONVERTED

A native of Sweden, residing in the south of France, had occasion to go from one port to another in the Baltic Sea. When he came to the place whence he expected to sail, the vessel was gone. On inquiring, he found a fishing-boat going the same way, in which he embarked. After being for some time out at sea, the men, observing that he had several trunks and chests on board, concluded he must be very rich, and therefore agreed among themselves to throw him overboard. This he heard them express, which gave him great uneasiness. However, he took occasion to open one of his trunks, which contained some books. Observing this, they remarked among themselves that it was not worth while to throw him into the sea, as they did not want any books, which they supposed was all the trunks contained. They asked him if he were a priest. Hardly knowing what reply to make, he told them he was; at which they seemed much pleased, and said they would have a sermon on the next day, as it was the Sabbath.

This increased the anxiety and distress of his mind, for he knew himself to be as incapable of such an undertaking as it was possible for any one to be, as he knew very little of the Scriptures; neither did he believe in the inspiration of the Bible.

At length they came to a small rocky island, perhaps a quarter of a mile in circumference, where was a company of pirates, who had chosen this little sequestered spot to deposit their treasures. He was taken to a cave, and introduced to an old woman, to whom they remarked that they were to have a sermon preached the next day. She said she was very glad of it, for she had not heard the word of God for a great while. His was a trying case, for preach he must; still he knew nothing about preaching. If he refused, or undertook to preach and did not please, he expected it would be his death. With these thoughts he passed a sleepless night. In the morning his mind was not settled upon anything. To call upon God, whom he believed to be inaccessible, was altogether vain. He could devise no way whereby he might be saved. He walked to and fro, still shut up in darkness, striving to collect something to say to them, but could not think of even a single sentence.

When the appointed time for the meeting arrived, he entered the cave, where he found the men assembled. There was a seat prepared for him, and a table with a Bible on it. They sat for the space of half an hour in profound silence; and even then, the anguish of his soul was as great as human nature was capable of enduring. At length these words came to his mind, "Verily, there is a reward for the righteous: verily, there is a God that judgeth in the earth." He arose and delivered them; then other words presented themselves, and so on till his understanding became opened — his heart enlarged in a manner astonishing to himself. He spoke upon subjects suited to their condition; the rewards of the righteous—the judgments of the wicked—the necessity of repentance, and the importance of a change of life. The matchless love of God to the children of men had such a powerful effect upon the minds of these wretched beings, that they were melted into tears. Nor was he less astonished at the unbounded goodness of Almighty God, in thus interposing to save his spiritual as well as his natural life, and well might he exclaim, "This is the Lord's doing, and marvellous in our eyes." Under a deep sense of God's goodness, his heart became filled with such thankfulness that it was out of his power to express. What marvellous change was thus suddenly brought about by Divine interposition! He who a little before disbelieved in God, was now humbled before Him. And they who were meditating his death were moved to affection.

The next morning they put him in one of their vessels and conveyed him where he desired. From that time he was a changed man. From an infidel he became a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ.—Watchword.

DAISIES

In the pocket of a little city waif daisies were found after her death. She had gathered them a short time previously on a country excursion when she first saw green fields and daisies, and asked wonderingly "Is it heaven?"

She had never seen God's garden,
The fields so green and fair,
Where the happy country children
With gleeful shouts repair.

To her it seemed like heaven,
The little city child;
The grass with dew-drops sparkling,
Where rose-tipped daisies smiled,

That little lowly flower,
White leaves and heart of gold,
But, oh, the heavenly vision
The child's sad eyes behold.

A sudden sense of beauty,
A glimpse of things unseen,
Of a world to which the daisy
Is but a link between.

She has no words of utterance,
For the strange thoughts that come,
She can only pluck the daisies
To treasure and bring home.

Home to the crowded alley,
To the garret dark and bare,
Where never blooms a flower
In the close and fœtid air.

Home! for a time to wither,
As the daisies of her love,
Then to the home in heaven,
The Paradise above!

Where the lily bells are shining,
Where fadeless roses bloom,
And flowers everlasting,
The breeze of heaven perfume.

Now lying in her coffin
Are the daisies of the sod
That woke her heart to yearnings,
For heaven and for God.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, June 26, 1 Sam. xv. 12—23; Monday, June 27, 1 Sam. xv. 24—35; Tuesday, June 28, 1 Sam. xvi. 1—13; Wednesday, June 29, 1 Sam. xvi. 14—23; Thursday, June 30, 1 Sam. xvii. 1—16; Friday, July 1, 1 Sam. xvii. 27—17; Saturday, July 2, 1 Sam. xvii. 28—42.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Mr. Martin J. Hall held some happy services last week at St. James's Mission-hall, Plumstead, and Mr. Colin C. Walker, of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, has taken meetings in connection with the Jubilee at Canning-town. Mr. J. W. Jordan conducted a service at Wynne-road, Stockwell, and Mr. Hutchinson addressed a large Jubilee gathering at Field-lane Ragged-schools, on Sunday, June 19. On Friday, July 1, there will be a special meeting for prayer in connection with the summer work at the seaside, at Christ Church Lecture-hall, Hampstead, commencing at eight o'clock. The attendance of friends is heartily invited.

TAKEN FROM THE STREETS.

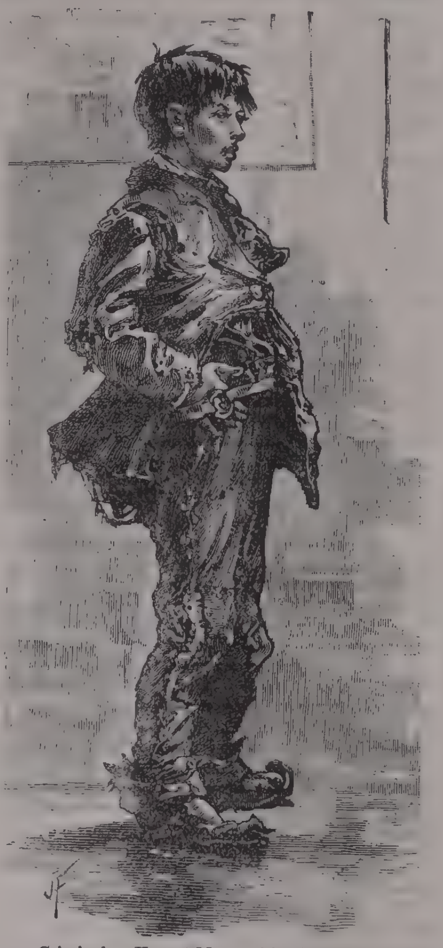
By Dr. Barnardo.

Sam Lepper is a genuine street vagabond, an orphan and friendless, but honest-looking and brave-hearted in his way. Here is his story told in his own words, as he made application for admission to the Home:—

"Yes, sir, I works on my own account, but I've got a pardner, an' we pulls together but shares ekal. No, I ain't got a father, nor 'as my pal, but he's got a mother. She ain't no good to him. Mine died a long while ago, long as ever I can remember."

"What do you do for a living?"

"Anythin', sir, but mostly 'papers and lights,' but if it's wery wet I tries for a job down by the market. Well, it ain't a bad life when you've got used to it, an' got plenty to do, an' if you knows your ways about. I'm nigh on sixteen now, and I've never been locked up, 'cos why, I never deserved it. I always keep clear of the Bobbies. I've been in one or two hobbles, though, but got out all right, not for stealin' nor nothin' like that, but for loafin' round and larkin'."



Criminal or Honest Man—which is it to be?

"Why do you wish to come into the Home if your street life is so free and so enjoyable?"

"Well, it ain't exactly enjoy'ble, ye know, but it ain't bad. There's a livin' to be got, but it's hard work, wery, and then there's the cold and the wet and the bein' down on yer luck and gettin' into scrapes sometimes, and then you see it's all wery well now when I ain't growed, but in a year or so people won't give me a job; I'll be too big for 'em then. They'll call me a man, and there's always a lot of men loafin' about with nothin' to do. There's only us boys as picks up a livin'. I'd like to go to Canada, sir. I'd be ready to go to-morrow, and if you'll give me a chance for Canada, I'll be steady and work well."

"Where do you generally lodge?"

"I used to stop at Slasher's, in Flowery Dean-street, but they've pulled it down and a heap more, so I 'ooked it to The Oval, Tabard-street: but I sometimes goes up to Notting 'ill way at nights."

Sam is a fine, manly, young fellow, and only needs a helping hand. A few months in our Youths' Labour House will open up a new life to him, either at home or in Canada.

To-day, one who knows how to do it could go out into the streets, not only of London, but of any large city, and pick up dozens, scores, and hundreds of promising young fellows who would say "That's me!" to almost every detail of Sam's simple narrative. All they want—but, alas! that is all they have not got—is a helping hand to tide them over the waves of circumstance. It is so little that will save them. They are plastic for good or ill to the moulding forces of their environment, and almost the turn of a finger will decide with awful fixity the great lines of their future. Criminal or honest man? The Christian public have it in their power to answer. In our Homes are scores of young fellows whose future life has been decided by just a trifle of help applied at the right moment; and outside their walls are hundreds who await, all unconsciously to themselves, like clay in the hands of the potter, the shaping hand of down-dragging vice or of saving influence. Which shall it be?

"GOD'S GIRLS."

This is the title of a sketch of work done in connection with Mitre House, situated at 8, Three Colt-street, Limehouse, which last year was opened as a Home for friendless and fallen girls. We have first a picture of the scenes, so terrible in their scarcely hidden meaning, and only too familiar to many, amid which this Home stands, pure and inviting, a refuge for all who will flee hither from the pollution and corruption around. There, too, are "the poor lost girls, bonnetless, befringed, bold, defiant," for whom "the heart bleeds as they hasten on with careless feet to their doom." And then there is a warm and loving appeal for these "God's children, God's girls." "Because they are God's, because Christ died for them, there are hearts filled with his Divine love which yearn to save them, believing it is not the will of our Father that even one of these should perish."

The bright and blessed side of this work is then seen. During the twelve months fifty-one girls have been received into the Home, and of many a one for whom, as seen in the street, it might have seemed there was almost no hope, it is said, "We have reason to hope they have been truly converted." Ten are now in situations, and only two were dismissed for disorderly behaviour. A laundry, the cost of establishing which has added considerably to the difficulties of the year, keeps the girls actively employed, and makes the Home, which has accommodation for twelve inmates, partially self-supporting.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.—As the jubilee of this society is on July 10, Monday, the 11th, will be specially set apart for prayer, praise, and thanksgiving in connection with its work. The meeting will be held in Exeter Hall, and friends who cannot be present are asked to unite in prayer between six and seven o'clock that evening. A little tract just published, entitled "The Year of Jubilee," may be had at the Society's house, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., price 6s. per 100.

CHRISTIANS ON THE CONTINENT.—In our issue for May 19 we gave the address of an office at Geneva where a register of hotels and pensions on the Continent is kept, where facilities for prayer and reading of God's Word are afforded, and where family worship is conducted. A second office, where letters can be more readily answered than at Geneva, is that of Mr. B. Green, 11, vis Petit St. Jean, Lausanne. All information concerning Christian boarding-houses, families, &c., in all parts of Switzerland, France, Germany, and Italy, will also be thankfully received by the Rev. N. L. Bluett, La Grande Borde, Lausanne.

EN ROUTE FOR CHINA.

Many of our readers will be interested in the following extracts from a private letter written by a member of one of the recent parties that have gone out under the auspices of the China Inland Mission.

SS. "Verona," nearing Penang, May 9.

You will be glad to hear that the Lord has been in our midst. On board the Hydaspes, between London and Colombo, five souls professed to be born of God. Mr. Broomhall had written to some friends at Colombo who arranged a meeting in the Baptist chapel on our arrival. Nine out of the ten of us spoke a few words which more or less took hold, and the chairman thought there had not been a meeting like it in Colombo since the Cambridge men were there. The audience was made up of English, half castes, and Singalese. Two souls professed to find Jesus as their Saviour. We left the meeting glad at heart, and had a delightful drive to the house of our kind host, Mr. A. M. Ferguson, G.C.B. Everything was so new to us, cinnamon trees, lemon grass, banyans, bananas, mangoes, limes, fireflies, &c. We came on board the Verona on the morning of May 5. Last night we sang hymns and gave short testimonies. One bright young fellow, a man-of-war's-man, whose sister had often spoken to him about his soul gave his heart to God.

I am sure our friends will cry to God on our behalf, especially when I tell you that in this ship, with its little party of missionaries, there are two hundred tons of opium, and thousands of gallons of brandy, rum, &c.—the former forced upon China by Christian (?) England; the latter to a great extent to meet the cravings of the so-called imported Christians! One of the officers has told me that we may take on at Penang one hundred and fifty Chinamen as deck passengers, and that numbers of these poor creatures will be seen lying like logs, quite insensible through smoking this terrible drug.

Near Singapore, May 11.

"Yes, we have had some blessing lately, and great encouragement. But here am I quite run down, and should have had a change years ago. Now, I set off on Saturday first, and leave Mr. Hocquard as missionary among at least 200,000 Chinese, not to speak of Malays and English. A fortnight ago he went to a place fifteen miles beyond that mountain you see in the distance. In half an hour he sold three hundred portions of Scriptures, and then spoke to the people till he was exhausted. They were willing, nay, anxious to hear, and wanted somebody to go and stay with them; but we have no one to send. Our native school here, in Penang, must be given up, not for want of funds, but for the want of someone to undertake the work. In crowds the heathen are dying, and have never heard of Jesus. Please pray for the work in the Malay Peninsula; bring it before as many of God's people as you can, and get them to pray too." Such was the cheering yet saddening statement of the work at Penang. How it makes one's heart bleed to see the heathen world in its realness, and to think of the multitudes of workers at home. While I was listening to the story there rose before me the large tent at Keswick, crowded; the Pillar Hall, Queen's Rooms, Glasgow, packed by an overflow from the larger meeting; Mildmay Conference Hall, filled with a joyous throng. How kind the faces looked as they were all turned towards the light! How those audiences listened! But in by the door there came a sound; it was a cry, and had come from the darkness—"Help! Help! Help!" Over the faces of many of those kindly hearers there passed a shade of annoyance. Some of them put their hands in such a way as to shut out the sound that had issued from the darkness—"Help! Help"—and some moved uneasily in their seats. Then a ringing command, which seemed to come from above, and fill the meeting places was given, "Go ye!" I saw young men and young women who would not go, holding on by parents, friends, or position. I saw parents offer gold and silver, and heard them praying that their children might not go. Still the order came, "Go ye," and, following in an undertone which blended with the pleading cry for help, there came the message, "Ye are my friends if ye do."

The crowds melted away in some confusion, but a few bowed figures waited here and there. They wanted to go, and I was glad. Then a great light shone in upon them. God was going to test the motives. I turned away, praying that He might send out many labourers into his harvest. Reader, has He said to you, "Go ye"?

NEWS FROM BASUTOLAND.

Will you ask prayer for this our Mission in Basutoland, and also for our brethren labouring on the Zambesi? This year the latter work has been strengthened by three missionaries from Europe, who are now working their weary way from the Diamond Fields to join M. Coillard and his fellow-workers. The journey will take about three months, if all goes well. They appear to be men prepared to support trials and difficulties for the sake of Christ's work.

We, in the Basutoland, are now encompassed about by colonies of white people. A few years since we were counted as the pioneers of civilisation, and had such great difficulties in travelling to contend with, but we can now reach our work with comparative ease. We therefore feel the call of God to us is to go forward to the far distant tribes. Although we have now many facilities for carrying on the work, still we have an immense mass of heathenism around us. It is still the time of combat. Will God's people therefore call for the power from on high to sustain us and bless us?

Our Mission in this country exerts a great influence on those tribes in the far interior, some of the young men from those parts are receiving a useful training in our boarding-schools at Morija. Some of them have already gone forth to their countrymen as evangelists, and are labouring with zeal in spreading the good tidings to those who sit in darkness.

Last Sabbath, when meeting with the congregation in this place, and seeing perhaps two thousand people listening to the word of life, and then in the afternoon, when partaking of the Lord's Supper with the church of Morija, seeing at least six hundred coming forward to "the table," how I wished you had been with us, for I am sure your heart would have rejoiced. And it is not only in the Morija district that there are large gatherings, but at several other stations large meetings were held last Lord's day. At the morning service here, fourteen adults were received as members, six of these were young men attending our upper schools. We have good hopes that they will be useful workers among their countrymen.

Our annual Conference is now about to meet on a station some sixty-five miles from this place. The infirmities of age are the hindrance to my attending these meetings; but after the return of the members, I will be able to obtain some statistics to send to you, as I feel assured they will interest you. Last April (1886) the members in our churches in Basutoland were 5190, candidates 1908. I trust that this April's report will show a good increase.

A few weeks ago the missionaries at Morija went to one of our out-stations, about fourteen miles from here, to hold a service and receive some members. It is impossible for all our members to come to our central stations on Communion Sabbaths—some are very weak in body, or aged, therefore Communion services are occasionally held at out-stations, which are under the care of native evangelists residing on the spot.

Last Saturday, we went to one of our out-stations called Thaba Tseu (the White Mountain). Some of us went in the ox-waggon, others on horseback. Directly we arrived, all the people came to greet us, and the Chief Mafa selected a sheep to give to mother for our special benefit and that of our Bible-school students. These were delighted, and immediately set to work, and soon the women were able to cook the meat. The tents were soon put up. The next day was a lovely and sunny day. We had the services in the openair, as the church was far too small. The congregation was very large, numbering more than one thousand. There were eighteen admissions to the church, and two backsliders were re-admitted; one of these was now an old man. He had been converted in his youth, but during many years he had wandered away from the good Shepherd. Now he earnestly sought to find pardon from Him. His old wife (Sara) was also received into the church. Among the eighteen candidates was the Chief Mafa's wife, a daughter of the well-known great Chief Mashesh. She is a stately and noble-looking woman. Father told her to stand up and tell the people why she believed in Christ. She stood, and with a happy but triumphant look, she told how she had employed all her energy to follow and uphold heathen customs, and how often she had saddened her father by so doing. She had been very proud of her name, and had always been one of the foremost in heathen dances and songs.

But she gloried now in Jesus alone. She was baptized, receiving the name of Belina, and it was a glorious sight when, after we had together partaken of the Lord's Supper, and we stood up to sing the Doxology, to see this woman standing among the believers and heartily singing the praises of God—she, who a few years before had daily blasphemed his holy name.

In the evening twilight we sat with our Bible-school students on the rocks, and each one chose a hymn, which we joined in singing. It was sweet and solemn, and it seemed to us that surely Jesus was there to smile on us and bless us. Such are the joys of our life. Never have I tasted any sweeter.

Yours faithfully, H. M. Dyke.

THEATRE CHILDREN.—Mrs. Henry Fawcett and Mr. Mitchell, representing the National Vigilance Association, gave evidence before the Royal Commission now sitting in the Education Acts, in the employment of children in theatres and its relation to the existing Acts. The cross-examination showed on the part of many of the Commissioners a strong appreciation of the importance of the moral effect on the children of theatre work. Both witnesses advocated an extension of the principle of the Factory Acts to children employed in theatres and music-halls.—Vigilance Record.

HOWARD-STREET GOSPEL MISSION.—The annual report states that much good has resulted from the efforts to relieve the surrounding destitution, especially during the past winter, and to proclaim the Gospel message. Services are held every Sunday evening, at which there is an average attendance of about a hundred. The week evening services are also well attended, and Sunday-school, temperance, and other agencies are actively carried on. The extension of the work necessitates further buildings, and a piece of ground has already been secured adjoining the hall on which it is proposed to erect an infants' class-room, a room for young men and women, and a soup kitchen, at a cost of about £200. The hon. superintendent is Mr. John Soames, who may be addressed at the Howard-street Mission, New-road, Wandsworth-road.

SEAMEN IN MARSEILLES.

DEAR FRIENDS AND FELLOW-HELPERS,—As I shall not this year have the pleasure of speaking face to face with you of this Mission at Marseilles, I am encouraged by your kind help last summer to send a few details of its progress since the opening that took place in October.

The new premises are situated on the Quay, immediately opposite a forest of ships, chiefly sailing vessels, from all parts of the world, but principally manned by Northern sailors. The house is a five-storied one, and capable of receiving thirty-three men, each having his separate room—a goodly family when the "Rest" is almost full, that has been frequently the case since the opening.

The rent and taxes amount to just £211 per annum. The basement front is used as a reading-room and dining-hall; the basement back as kitchen, larder, &c.

On the first floor is a small lecture hall, where Gospel meetings, and for prayer and the study of the Scriptures, are held. Photographs of the building may be had, post free, by remitting 2s. in penny postage stamps.

"OUR BOYS."

These are from all nations; those from the North predominate. It is a matter for rejoicing and thankfulness, and is a practical proof of the power of love, to see men of six or seven different nationalities mingling harmoniously, and evidently enjoying the comforts and quiet of the "Rest."

As a rule, it is pretty smooth sailing, though sometimes the accursed drink makes demons of those who otherwise would be as tractable as children. Here is an example of their simplicity: A most suspicious Swede came to lodge; he declared that all who had to do with sailors were "thieves and robbers." The kind and gentle influence exercised by Miss Kean acted like a charm, and the first evening all his savings were deposited with her. A few days after he said to her, in broken English, "Why you here, and so kind to us? Sailors bad men." She replied, cheerfully, "Oh! because I like to; I love them." He said nothing then, but the following day beckoned to her, and whispered in her ear, "Do you love God?" On receiving an affirmative reply, his whole face shone, and from that moment all want of confidence in anyone in the "Rest" disappeared. I frequently saw this man sitting in his comfortable room reading his large family Bible, for which he said he had paid 6s. 8d. in England. Eight, twelve, and seven o'clock are merry periods, and the appetite, more often voracious than otherwise, needs no other tempter than the abundant and wholesome food supplied, for which and their lodging is charged the moderate sum of three francs per diem. It is needless to add that no intoxicating beverages are provided.

Miss Kean has thoroughly won the confidence of the men. She is continually occupied, either writing letters for them, or to them, and looking sharply after their temporal and spiritual needs. As to the former, the fact that she has had nearly £400 entrusted to her by them during the last six months speaks for itself. In regard to the spiritual part of the work, she informs me that, in addition to her daily and frequent conversations with the men, almost all of whom understand English, she has presented eighty on the eve of their departure with bags filled with useful reading, and distributed sixty-seven Bibles and Testaments in different languages, beside many hundreds of tracts. Exceptionally she has given away several pairs of cuffs, mufflers, and some handkerchiefs, for which the poorer are always most grateful.

These articles, as also tracts, books, and pamphlets, principally illustrated, either for the bags or the reading-room, will be most thankfully received by Miss Kean.

Meetings are held frequently, but vary according to the nationality of the men in the "Rest," the larger proportion, however, are in English. Every morning family worship is conducted in French by the manager, and every evening those who like can, and frequently do, meet in the lecture hall to sing Sankey's hymns, read, or pray. The regular meetings are Sunday afternoons at 4, free tea, followed by reading out of such a book as The Sunday at Home, &c.; in the evening Gospel address. Tuesday evening, music and readings; Saturday evening, prayer-meeting.

I have held most interesting meetings also on board ships, when the cabin and the fo'c's'le have proved both Bethels and Bochims.

FRUIT.

Our Heavenly Father has graciously permitted us to see some, though the work is eminently a sowing one, owing to the brief stay of "our boys" often not exceeding a fortnight and frequently only a week. Those who stay longest are naturally those over whom the greater influence is gained. One of these, whose conversion was most distinct, produced such an impression in his ship, whilst loading for a long voyage, that the mate came to inquire into the cause. Said he, "There must be something real in religion after all, for Tim was the worst sailor I ever sailed with." This mate became so impressed by what he saw and heard that he came nightly until the ship left, accompanied by three others of the crew, to converse about the truth. On leaving, their captain, a Christian, declared that all his men were the better for their stay in port. These cases are all the more interesting as evidencing the influence of the Mission on outsiders, for none of these men lodged in the "Rest." I am thankful to say that this influence is gradually but surely extending, and were there more workers there would be no limits to openings and opportunities fraught with immense blessing, except those imposed by lack of time or strength.

Such a field as that afforded by over 100,000 seamen of all nations annually visiting Marseilles is surely a no small one for the mere handful of labourers working on their behalf!

"GOOD NEWS FROM A FAR COUNTRY."

Many of us know how these are "as cold waters to a thirsty soul," and can therefore understand Jack's almost childish glee at finding a letter, addressed to himslf, awaiting his arrival at a distant port. This is invariably the case with those who have lodged in the "Rest," and the pile of letters received in reply is a sufficient testimony to the gratitude the men evince, both for the kindness shown to them during their stay, and for the good words that follow them.

As all these letters differ according to the varied needs of each recipient, the labour can be imagined. One, in acknowledging a letter received from Miss Kean on his arrival at Santos, concluded a most grateful epistle with "your true friend and pupil." He was a Swede, and over fifty years of age.

These are a few brief notes that I trust will cheer you, and encourage you to continue your kind help, sympathy, and prayers. I never had greater need of these for many reasons, but believe that He who hitherto has so graciously guided and upheld will not fail me, nor withhold what is requisite.

To meet the remainder of the outlay incurred in necessary alterations, furnishing of the new premises, and current expenses, including rent, for the next half year, £250 are needed.

Commending this work, and the workers to your continued and effective interest, and hoping to send further details with the forthcoming annual report and statement of accounts.

Yours sincerely on behalf of Seamen,
CHAS. E. FAITHFULL.

NATIONAL THRIFT SOCIETY.—A series of thrift meetings, in connection with this Society, was held last week in Norfolk.

BELGIAN MISSIONARY CHURCH.

THE Synod, to be held in Brussels this year, from July 10 to 14, will commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of this mission. In 1835, when the work was just begun, there were only seven Protestant churches in Belgium; now there are twenty-seven regularly organised churches, and fifty-six out-stations, with nearly 7000 members; seventeen pastors, five evangelists, and fourteen Scripture readers and colporteurs. An orphanage and a Protestant library have also been established in Brussels. A large amount of evangelistic and Sunday-school work is done by the members of the different congregations, large numbers of whom are miners; and, notwithstanding their poverty, their contributions average ten francs and a-half for each member.

It was hoped that the work might have been extended this year; but this will be impossible, in consequence of the large debt, already amounting to 39 200 francs, which, unless some help is forthcoming, will compel the committee to limit their field of action. Communications may be addressed to Miss Hardy, Bunganstown Rectory, Wicklow, Ireland.

WORK AT RIO DE JANEIRO.

MR. THOMAS HOOPER, of the Rio Seamen's Mission, sends some information concerning evangelistic work in this city. The average attendance on the Sabbath, he says, at the services in the Igrega Evangelica, a new chapel opened about twelve months ago, is about five hundred, and on week days about two hundred. It is evident the work is growing in a remarkable manner. This native church promises to become a great power in drawing the attention of the people to the Gospel. There is also a steady increase of interest in the work carried on by the various English and American churches, at which there is a considerably larger attendance than formerly.

Mr. Hooper's report of work at the Seamen's Mission is highly encouraging. Services are held at the Mission-house every Sunday, and on one evening in each week. Frequent visits are also paid to the vessels in port, on board of one of which services are occasionally held, by permission of the captain. The harbour is the largest in the world, and, therefore, only comparatively few of the crews can attend, while the captains naturally object to the men going ashore, on account of the many temptations they would meet. To obviate this difficulty a movement has been set on foot for establishing a Mission-ship, or floating Bethel, and £600 has been already subscribed towards the sum required—about £1000. Here the men lying in the port, sometimes for a considerable time, would have facilities for social intercourse, and the missionaries' opportunities for counselling the men, and for teaching them the truths of the Gospel, would be greatly multiplied. Mr. Hooper is the missionary, and should be addressed at the Mission-room, 89, Rua da Misericordia, Rio de Janeiro.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—The decision of Dr. Henry M. Scudder and wife to go as missionaries, at their own charges, to Japan, promises to be a great godsend to that field. Dr. Scudder's addresses before sailing have excited so much interest that five others, it is said, have decided to follow him. One of these is said to be Rev. G. E. Albrecht, the German professor in Chicago Theological Seminary.

PADDINGTON-GREEN CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL.—At the annual meeting recently held, Mr. George Hanbury, who presided, said the position of the hospital as disclosed in the report, of which we gave some particulars on June 1), was very satisfactory. With regard to the new buildings, anyone who once saw the crowding in the out-patients' department would be fully convinced of the necessity for the new buildings. Those, too, who know how much is done in the hospital for poor little suffering children must acknowledge that this is indeed a good work.

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING IMPOSSIBLE

Until the Father has made his enemies his footstool.

By the Rev. JAMES GALL.

Hamilton, Adams & Co.

COLPORTEURS are earnestly asked for by Christian friends in the Highlands and elsewhere, and more will be appointed as soon as funds are forthcoming. Nearly 200 are at work in Scotland and England under the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland. This agency for spreading the Gospel by means of the Press has been called the Greatest Home Mission in our country. Its proved adaptation gives much encouragement to the promoters. £35 a year secures the appointment of one labourer.

Reports, with particulars, from Rev. Geo. Douglas, 99, George-street, Edinburgh.

CONSUMPTION — FOLLOWING ON INFLAMMATION OF THE LUNGS —CASE OF MR. THOMAS DOWN.

This patient is sixty-five years of age, and resides at Ellacombe, Torquay. When he commenced with my treatment he had been ill for two years. I will, however, give the case in his own words:—

"I think it my duty to thank you for the wonderful cure your medicine has effected in me. I had been ill for two years. It commenced with severe inflammation of the lungs, which left me with fearful cough and every symptom of Consumption. I had not strength to feed myself. Everyone thought I should die, and two doctors said there was no hope for me. I was recommended by several to you. The effect of your medicine was marvellous. *I seemed to rally from the first dose. I have been able since my recovery to go to my daily occupation (outdoor), which I never hoped to do again until I commenced with you. You can use my testimony as you think proper.—T. Down, 28, Cavern-road, Ellacombe, Torquay.

* Note.—It must be observed that cases differ very much. In some it may be that the first dose of medicine is followed by manifest improvement. In others the patient may continue in statu quo for weeks, or in chronic cases for months, before there are visible indications of much benefit. For further observations on this point see my book, "On Consumption."—G. T. C.

"ONLY A FACTORY GIRL."

Out in the street again, we drift along with the crowd, which carries us soon to the door of

as the girls call it—our next destination. After some difficulty in finding the gallery entrance (which is at last discovered in a narrow and filthy lane, with nothing but an open doorway, leading on to a flight of dark, suspicious looking stairs, to notify its existence), we climb the dirty stairway, pronounce in loud tones our password of "gal'ry two," pay our fourpence, and are ushered, for the first time in our lives, into a theatre.

Can this be the chosen evening resort of our poor lasses?

Yes. There they sit right before us, in the semi-darkness, dozens of the very girls for whom we are looking. Most of them are with lads, some of whom have their arms round the girls' waists. The excitement of the play is at its height, and we are able to notice unobserved. Right below us is the brilliantly-lighted stage. Soft sounds of orchestral music come up through the hot, foul air, which, heavy as it is with stale tobacco smoke, fumes of drink, and the breath of hundreds of people, almost makes you gasp on entering.

This gallery might hold two hundred people at a cram. It is about half full to-night. There are not more than half-a-dozen grown-up people in it, the rest being all young men and girls. The play is of the most degrading type. Murders and robbery, gambling and immorality, lying and deception pistol duels, fights between men and women, treachery, and sharp practice of all kinds, are among its elements. All the worst passions seem let loose, and the hero—a perfect scoundrel, who deserves thoroughly the fate he earns for himself (that of a pistol-shot in his heart as he falls dead in the closing scene)—is represented in some ways as an attractive character, whose very boldness, handsome appearance, manliness, and gay bravado win for him the sympathy of the spectators. When at the close the actors come before the curtain to receive their due share of hooting or cheers, he earns a mixed greeting of applause and hisses.

Sitting here, it is easy to understand what an influence "the theayter" exercises over our factory girls. The bright, fairy-land-like scenery, the flowers and sunshine and swiftly changing scenes, the gaily dressed, pretty-looking girls on the stage, the soft instrumental music, the exciting play—all this lifts them out of the common-place and misery of their daily struggle for existence. Add to these attractions the social feeling of the place, the presence of their companions, the warm, dry shelter afforded them, the benches to sit down on after standing from morning till night, the freedom from the rows and quarrels of the noisy crowded room they call "home," the drink to which they can get "treated" easily enough if they choose;—remember that all this stands out in strong contrast to the monotonous round of their weary, toilsome lives—and you are no longer likely to put them the question sometimes asked them by our kind helpers, "O dear girls, why do you go to these dreadful theatres?"

We cannot sit the play out here; time is passing fast: so, finding our way down the filthy stone stairs, where some lads are amusing themselves by turning out the gas, "for a lark with them screamin' gals," we pass out into the chilly night air once more.

It is nearly midnight.

A damp, drizzling rain, falling chillily, is making the black mud of the pavements blacker and more slippery than ever. Surely there are no factory girls about the streets of the West End at this hour! Covering our white aprons that we may be less observed; with damp clothes, bare hands, muddy, wet feet, and a general sensation of hopeless dilapidation, we tramp, umbrellaless, through the rain—for our investigations are not yet complete.

Nobody seems to think of going to bed yet awhile. The theatres have just shut up, turning their occupants on to the streets—or, rather, into the public-houses. For at the close of the entertainments both actors and audience seek the nearest gin-palace, to discuss the play and the drink. Here, coming along round a dark corner, we meet a well-dressed woman. She is middle-aged, and decent in appearance, but staggering from side to side—quite drunk. A little further on we come upon another who has evidently fallen a stage lower. Her clothes are shabby and torn; her face, bloated and red, tells its own tale. She is dancing about with a drunken man, to the music of a nigger minstrel band. Little children and young folks are looking on, laughing rudely at the pitiful spectacle of degraded womanhood. Then the music stops, and the minstrels themselves turn into the public-house, followed by the crowd.

How easily the well-used doors swing to and fro, giving us glimpses of the scene inside! Never more attractive than on such a night as this, the gin-palaces are very full just now. Hardly daring to enter their rowdy precincts ourselves, we pass from one to another, glancing in, unnoticed, in quest of factory girls. One rough working lad, thinking we were in quest of a friend, put his head out of the doorway and said in a kindly voice, "'E ain't 'ere, old gal! 'E's gorn 'ome, 'e is." And seeing we still hesitated, he added, "Never you mind 'im, 'e ain't a-comin' back 'ere agen to-night. You jest come into the warm, ole gal, you an' yer mate!" We went "into the warm," and had not to look far to discover the objects of our search. Numbers of these young factory girls were there, some of them with quite pretty faces, half stupid with drink, and wholly unable to take care of themselves, hearing the vilest language and surrounded by degrading and shameful sights. We have often wondered at the language and uncontrollable wildness of factory girls. After to-night's experience, we shall never wonder again, but rather marvel that, seeing their lives are such, and that such places are open to them nightly, they should ever be content to come to our evening classes and sit and sew and spell!

Out in the darkness again, in the same mud, and cold, and rain, and midnight, we follow a couple of girls (who look pretty much like ourselves) some distance down the street. Presently they fall in with a group of lads who are fencing and "larking" about in a low archway. The girls join in the affray, and then they all pass down the street together, shouting boisterous music-hall choruses as they go. The fitful gleam of the street lamps falls on the wretched and tumble-down tenements where these lads and lasses live. Is it any wonder, remembering the small, unwholesome, crowded rooms where they sleep at night, herded together in squalor and poverty, that these young people prefer the rainy, midnight darkness to their "homes"? None of them seem to entertain any idea of going to bed at present.

We turn from the main roadway into the network of narrow side streets. Most of the doors are shut here, but the inhabitants are not yet asleep. House after house we pass, from which come sounds of shouting and swearing and loud altercation. We stand and listen on a door step. The man is evidently drunk inside, and a woman in much the same condition is scolding him at the top of her piercing voice. Over the way, at an open door, another quarrel is going on. Half a dozen girls are standing about the steps watching a woman who, bareheaded and half clad, is crying in the rain.

What shall we say? How shall we draw the picture? How can we bring home to your hearts the sense of dumb pity and almost hopelessness that fills one in such a scene?

A public-house license was obtained for the refreshment-room of the Assembly of the Established Church of Scotland, during its recent session, though the practice had been discontinued for many years past. Naturally many members were very indignant.

ROMANISM in COUNTRY DISTRICTS.

"Striking testimony" (says The Nonconformist and Independent) "is given in Longman's Magazine as to the growth of Popery in country districts. In 'The Country Sunday,' Mr. Richard Jefferies gives another of his beautiful sketches of English rural life; but we cannot accept his picture of 'chapel folk' as altogether accurate.....We are more concerned, however, to point out how striking is the testimony borne by Mr. Jefferies to the growth of Romanism. 'Consider,' he says, 'the thousands of broad English acres that now support great monasteries and convents in quiet country places where one could scarce expect to find a barn. The buildings are there—that is a solid fact, take what view you like of them, or take none at all. There are men about country roads with shaven crown and cassock, whose dark Continental faces have an unmistakable stamp of priesthood—faces that might be pictured with those of the monks of old Spain. Women in long black cloaks, black hoods, and white coif—women with long black rosaries hanging from the girdle—go to and fro among the wheat and the clover.' This, from a writer like Mr. Jefferies, is significant indeed, and should cause Nonconformists to re-double their exertions in the rural districts."

We hope this will tend to awaken our Nonconformist friends from the false liberalism which is doing as much as anything to throw down the barriers which our fathers raised against the Romish Apostasy.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

For eighty years this excellent Society has been cheering and brightening the lives of aged Christian poor, by giving life pensions and providing comfortable and pleasant resting-places. During the period of its existence the Society has granted pensions amounting in the aggregate to more than £186,000 among about 4860 recipients. At the present time the total number of pensioners is 1154, of whom over 800 are upwards of seventy years of age, 250 over eighty, and 15 over ninety. The four homes possessed by the Society, which are situated at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Brighton, and Stamford Hill, contain in all 178 pensioners. The Society also provides supplies of coals, groceries, nurses, medical attendance, and other comforts for the sick and infirm.

At the recent anniversary meeting the chairman, Lord Gilbert Kennedy, who takes a very lively interest in the affairs of the Society, appealed for increased support, and mentioned that the Society annually expended upwards of £7000 in pensions alone. During the past year there was a deficiency in the income of £2500. £600 are required for the sustenance of Hornsey Rise Asylum, which he had visited recently and found a model of cleanliness and comfort.

Mr. F. A. Bevan said there could be no more Christlike work than that of soothing the declining years of aged believers. Rev. D. B. Hankin pointed out that the Society was quite unsectarian, extending its benefits to members of every Protestant evangelical denomination. Rev. J. T. Briscoe reminded the meeting that what is done for the Lord's sake is done to the Lord Himself, and on this ground he commended the Society to the public. The meeting was also addressed by Revs. S. K. Bland, Burman Cassin, E. W. Moore, W. Sinden, and several other gentlemen. Mr. J. E. Hazelton, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., is the secretary.

JUBILEE DRINKING.—In order to counteract, to some extent, the probably heavy drinking, for which "the Jubilee" will be made an excuse, the Gospel Temperance Workers' Union has arranged to hold in conjunction with an influential local committee, of which Mr. A. F. Hills, of the Thames Iron Works, is chairman, a monster Marquee Mission on a plot of ground off the Barking-road, Canning Town, E. Mr. William Noble will conduct the mission from June 25 until July 16.

Notes and Comments.

IN our next issue we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. It will be a Double Number, price 2d., and will contain a full report of the leading addressss at the Mildmay Conference.

"A Day in the Country" is now an annual institution with most missions in London, and ardently longed for by the little ones. We trust that our friends will liberally contribute to our Day in the Country Fund, which will be divided amongst a number of deserving missions. The applications which reach us are so numerous that without a substantial sum in our hands it is impossible to render effective help to each.

The Church Reformer for June records the fact that Rev. J. J. Gurney, of Norwich, hearing that a body of Socialists were about to assemble for a meeting in an open space adjoining St. John's Church, announced that on the Sunday in question he would preach on "Socialism." A number of the Socialists who attended were so satisfied with the sermon, that they "came again and yet again." Surely, however, The Church Reformer errs in stating that the Socialists "went to church and heard Mass," for St. John's is a Protestant church.

This clergyman certainly seems to have learned to love the brethren, for it is stated that he has promised to the Primitive Methodists, who are building schools in the parish, a percentage on all the money they collect during the period of the erection, and has accompanied the promise by a kindly statement that he "wishes all Christians success in their common work."

Our esteemed contemporary, The Bombay Guardian, a journal faithful above many, has the following :—"This is the way in which Herr Stoecker, the distinguished Chaplain at Berlin, writes about the present religious state of Germany :—

> For years back, says the Protestant champion, we have witnessed the marvellous progress of Catholicity in Germany. While our own Church threatens to disappear beneath the indifference of the upper classes, and the hatred of the lower, Rome has gained the sympathy and goodwill of princes, nobles, citizens, peasants, and labourers. The Catholics have fought a battle with the Government, and won it. For ten years the Centre has held the balance of power in the Reichstag. The social influence of Catholics is as great as that which they have won in the political arena. By means of literary and social activity they have checked the progress of Socialism. It is incontestable that the Catholic Church is far ahead of Protestantism in general esteem, that it is honoured at Court, respected in Parliament, and loved by the people. She is a power with which even the most powerful ministers have to reckon, and which they dare not long oppose.

"Our contemporary, The Bombay Catholic Examiner, naturally quotes this with much satisfaction. If the facts are as stated, it is important that we should note them. Can we really wonder at such a report when we call to mind that for some time past a ban has been put upon all attempts to show the falsity of the claims of Rome? It has come to be regarded as a breach of Christian charity to apply to Rome the teachings of the Bible concerning Antichrist, and while Rome boldly excommunicates all who refuse to believe in the infallible Papacy, the Protestant who speaks of Rome's teachings as unscriptural is regarded as uncharitable, fanatical, narrow-minded. An enormous advantage has thus been given to the Church of Rome, and she is making the most of it. In this too, prophecy is being fulfilled. Things are ripening for judgment."

Thou wilt stand up and have compassion on Zion.
For 'tis time to have pity on her; for the set time is come.
For thy servants yearn over her stones.
They feel pity for her dust. (Ps. cii. 13, 14.)

Dr. Kay's note on these verses is, "Thy servants yearn over her ruins :—and their love is but a drop from thy own fulness, O Lord!" Calvin says: "Though the stones be lying all about, broken and split and in confusion...the faithful do not throw away their reverence for the Temple. And so the more melancholy the desolation of the Church is, the less should we allow our affection to stray away from it."

The Bishop of Derry's sermon on "Socialism," which is printed in the current number of The Contemporary Pulpit, contains, like everything which Dr. Alexander either speaks or writes, much food for serious thought; yet taken altogether, we doubt if it can be considered as an entirely satisfactory contribution to the literature of the subject. It appears to us that the preacher failed to press home upon his hearers in the Chapel Royal the full Christian meaning of that rule of richesse oblige, to the existence of which he made a passing reference. To say that the first motto of Socialism is "I squeeze all things flat," and to draw satirical pictures of "glorified workhouses," and "perfect blocks of model lodging-houses," surely cannot be the proper way to approach a great question which, whatever may be the errors and follies of many who profess to have mastered its intricacies, must ever to the Christian man resolve itself into the sad problem of miserably requited toil, of starving women forced to a shameful life for want of bread, and of children dying before their time, slain by economic conditions which cannot be defended as being in accordance with either the teachings of Christ or the ideals of Christianity.

In a previous lecture at Dublin on the same subject (in which we find portions of the sermon), Dr. Alexander said that the ideal of Socialism was "the ideal of the stomach" and "a sublimated workhouse." He went on to add that "the infinite complexity and variety which formed so much of the enjoyment of our present life would be destroyed by it." Doubtless this latter statement is very true, but we doubt if it will commend itself to the starved needlewomen and others, whose enjoyment of life is bounded by toil and hunger.

On Hospital Sunday, last year, the Bishop of Salisbury preached in the Cathedral on "Christian Morality and Social Order," his text being Gal. ii. 10: "Only they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do." We commend that sermon to the careful study of Dr. Alexander, and of all who are tempted to selfishness in religion, and who fail to see under the froth and foam of the Socialistic movement of to-day the deep waters of anxiety with regard to the next meal and the next day's work, which surround so many of those who are fortunate enough not to be entirely out of employment and starving. Dr. Wordsworth did not hesitate to face the difficult problem of wealth versus poverty, and his words are worth remembering and following :—

> Even what might be called the innocent luxury of the wealthy is a sore and terrible trial to the starving and often uncomplaining masses of the poor. Why should there be that measureless contrast? That is a question which they ask again and again, and if no special reply is given we shall be gradually gathering up such a flood of bitter resentment as will sweep away in a revolution not only the signs, but also the homes, of religion itself. There is only one answer that can be made with any approach to reason, and that is that God has made the lots of men unequal, in order that those who have much should help those who have little—in order that the rich may help the poor.

We give the following paragraph from The Catholic Times, a Romish organ :—

> Our readers will probably be surprised to hear that in no less than ninety-five churches and chapels of the Anglican Communion devotions are regularly offered every month for the souls in Purgatory. The worshippers on these occasions erroneously suppose that they are offering the sacrifice of the Mass for the repose of the holy souls; but it would be wrong to doubt the efficacy of prayers offered by those whose charity has overcome the heresy of their creed, and has moved them to remember their departed friends before God.

The result of this is from time to time shown in certain of these worshippers going over to Rome, as recently Sir Charles Young and Mary Howitt have done, the latter having stated that she has "found peace" in Romanism. After passing from Quakerism to Unitarianism, and from Unitarianism to Romanism, to find peace only in the last, it must surely be very painful to Mrs. Howitt to remember her husband's death, while he was in communion with the Friends, and perhaps no less painful to remember chapters ten to fourteen of his "History of Priestcraft."

A remarkable story comes from Hampshire. The Vicar and Churchwardens of Netley Parish Church wish to prevent the inmates of an adjoining Reformatory school from attending the church, for no other reason, as it would appear, than that they are Reformatory boys. The Committee of the school, after exhausting every method of conciliation, have been compelled to enter an action at law in vindication of their rights. We cannot but hope they will be successful, though it does not seem to us that God's blessing can rest on a ministry where such action is allowed to prevail. What can be more contrary to the mind of Christ than an attempt to turn the house of God into a preserve for the exclusive enjoyment of the wealthy?

In America Christians are splitting hairs and boycotting those who differ with them in matters of opinion, while the masses are sinking into infidelity, atheism, and perdition unhindered. There are about thirty German infidel clubs in the East of London, and whole streets filled with secularists and unbelievers, whose wives dare not even go to a mothers' meeting, except by stealth.

rith four millions of atheistic, infidel, and itterly demoralising publications issuing weekly from the London Press, and going o every quarter of the world, in the heapest form for wide circulation, and vith next to nothing at hand to meet and ieutralise them.

Mr. H. L. Hastings, who has recently eturned to America, and others, have been abouring to withstand this horrible evil, nd have, within the last year and a half, irculated some 400,000 anti-infidel publications in Great Britain, and have had the atisfaction of being informed that secuarists themselves confess that there have een fewer accessions to their ranks the ast year than ever before.

There is no absolution without confession. The mere lapse of time, though it be ten or twenty years, does not re-qualify for the work of the Gospel one who has disqualified himself by flagrant inconsistency. We regret that at one of the largest evangelistic halls in London this principle is not being recognised. An evangelist whose character had been seriously compromised, and who went to America, is now advertised as Rev. —— ——, and is preaching there. It is not wise as regards the hall itself, and it obliges those who know the circumstances to stand aloof, if not positively to express disapproval. No one ought to be put forward as a preacher of Christ's Gospel who is not well reported of by them that are without.

Dr. Arnold, of Rugby (vide "Life," vol. i. 225), held that the great hindrance to the triumph of Christianity lay, not so much in the corruption of the religion of Christ, as of the Church of Christ. One great mark of that corruption has been the hireling officialism of ministers of Christianity. When this is not the case, nothing would carry such sway as an obvious disinterestedness of Christian teachers. This carries weight, even with error. Rev. J. A. Lambert said recently, at a prayer-meeting of the London Missionary Society, that in Benares, where he had laboured, there were 40,000 intelligent, stalwart men, who went from place to place in the service of idolatry, and who gave up for their gods lands, wives, children, and homes. This self-denial made them successful. An abstract of this pungent address will be found on page 18. We rejoice in such a faithful utterance, which has, however, a much wider application than to the Congregational body.

Mr. Lecky, in his last volumes on "England in the Eighteenth Century," says (v. 308), "The evils of a decline of the religious life are the decline of morals, a relaxation of energy, a material, selfish, epicurean cast both of thought and character." Whence comes in many quarters just now that relaxing of moral fibre which looks scornfully upon protests against great wrongs, but from the weakening of religious convictions. Lukewarmness may be more hurtful to a cause than open hostility.

Some notable things were said at the Diocesan Conference held on the 10th and 11th inst. at Lambeth. Archbishop Benson enforced the fact that the word rendered "with one soul," or "with one spiritual impulse," occurred twelve times in the Acts in the short memoirs of the Church. He believed that in parishes temperance was becoming more general, and that religion was gaining ground in education. Canon Hoare, in pleading for lively services, contended that music, which could not be followed by the people, killed intelligence; that emotion was of the very essence of worship; that Mr. Sankey's hymns might be used with advantage in churches; and that if feeling were not thrown into the liturgy it would be a dead shell.

A paper was read at the Conference on "Retreats," one of which is to be held at Canterbury at the beginning of July. The paper contended that these were nothing but quiet days; that there need be nothing ascetic or Romish about them:—

> A time of retreat has this great advantage that it at once leads the soul into a more quiet, more serene, higher atmosphere, apart from the din of earthly voices, freed from the pressure of daily work, and the ceaseless calls of "this hurrying life." The one object is that for a few days the soul may have more calm and sustained communion with God, and that the claims of the eternal world and the silent yet powerful voices of eternal truth may be heard in the depth of the soul, free from the interruption of the busy world without.

"A Public Servant" makes the following statement in a recent communication to The Pall Mall Gazette:—

> In the voluntary churches there are now but few of the younger and more active ministers who are not at one with the Unitarian creed in its essential particulars.
> It is about twelve years since I ceased to be au courant with what was passing in the religious world; but I have recently been inquiring into the state of religious opinion, especially in the voluntary churches, and I have been positively startled to perceive the strides which have been made in what would have been formerly called downright unbelief. The old hard-shell doctrines of predestination, election, miracles, incarnation, atonement by blood, everlasting punishment, and the resurrection of the body, are seldom now to be heard in all their vigour save from the elder men.
> The younger men are full of doubt, and, moreover, stand greatly in dread of Mr. Matthew Arnold's irony. He has told them that they are inferior and unlovely persons, and that their orthodoxy is something beneath contempt. They have a nervous anxiety to live up to his standard, and to prove that in spite of their Nonconformity they have as much of sweetness and light as Establishmentarians. As one means of proving this they eschew dogma, and are popular with their congregations on that account, for the congregations are more deeply honeycombed with anti-dogmatism than are the ministers · and even middle-aged men, whose own faith is still unshaken, are under the most dire pecuniary temptations to steer clear of dogma lest they should offend important sections of their hearers.
> Hence there is a general and growing tendency to substitute purity alone, or purity with temperance, for theological religion. It offends no one. It is a creed secure from the attacks of any organised class of existing scientists. It is common ground, uniting not only the advanced and the conservative sections of the same church, but members of different Christian churches as widely sundered as the Baptist and the Catholic.

We ask special attention to the last paragraph of the above. The tendency to substitute Purity and Temperance, together or separately, or some other social subject, for the New Testament Gospel of Jesus Christ, must have been noticed by all observant Christian men. It is one of the subtle dangers of the time, to which we do well that we take heed. For God will not give the glory due to his crucified Son to another—not even to such virtues as purity and temperance.

A correspondent states that it is not uncommon for secretaries of religious institutions, and also large business houses, to post circulars on Saturday, thus involving additional labour for the Sunday postmen. We trust the custom is not so extensive as he supposes. At any rate, it is thoughtless, selfish, cruel, and should be discontinued.

The new terra-cotta panel by Mr. G. Tinworth—"Christ before Herod"—on view at Messrs. Doulton's Lambeth show rooms, ought to be seen by all who value sanctified genius as an ally to Christian thought and aspiration. Perhaps none of Mr. Tinworth's works better show the extent to which he has drunk in the spirit of the sacred record. The figure of the Saviour, silent and dignified, despite the eager questionings of the heathen king and the accusations of scribes, seems to us a masterpiece of design and execution, and worthy to be ranked with Doré's figure of "Christ leaving the Pretorium." The artist represents Herod as having brought diseased persons to the Saviour, in order that he might witness some miracle of healing.

A smaller panel, representing the return of the Prodigal Son, is scarcely less remarkable as a work of Christian art. A reverent study, with Bible in hand, of these—indeed, of all Mr. Tinworth's Scripture scenes in terra-cotta—ought to be a distinct means of grace, in helping to a more vivid understanding of the sacred story.

METHODISTS IN IRELAND.

At the Conference just held in Belfast an interesting and profitable conversation took place on the state of the work of God in Ireland; many cheering testimonies were borne to the power of Divine grace. Rev. Thomas Greer, of Rathkeale, co. Limerick, told a touching story about the conversion of an orphan boy, and the way in which he testified for Christ on his deathbed in the hospital, a few months afterwards, surrounded by Roman Catholics. Rev. J. S. McDade mentioned some instances of the good that has been done, and the numbers that have been reached, by the evangelistic services in a tent under his care. Rev. Caleb S. Laird spoke of the work in Sligo, and told of the conversion of a serjeant-major in the army, who now preaches the Gospel as a local preacher, and also among his companions in the barrack-room. Rev. Dr. Vance referred to the work in the south of Ireland, which he believed was in a very hopeful condition.

Rev. Charles Inwood, Conference evangelist, gave a very cheering account of his year's labours. He had received many interesting letters from persons of various denominations throughout Ireland, and held most blessed and glorious meetings in Ballinamallard, Athy, Skibbereen, and other places where the power of the Lord was wonderfully made manifest. He believed a silent, secret, unobtrusive work was going on among their Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen. Rev. James Wilson, Ballymena, mentioned several interesting cases of conversion arising out of evangelistic services, in his church in Ballymena, conducted during the year by Mr. Trench, of Dublin. Rev. James Harpur, of Crumlin-road, Belfast, said that during the year his congregation was in a state of continual revival. He had seen scores of conversions; in fact, conversions took place at nearly every service.

OBITUARY.

MR. CHARLES GAUSSEN, OF GREYSTONES.

By a very tragic accident, this gentleman, who for over half a century has been active in all religious and charitable movements in Dublin, and elsewhere in Ireland, was called to his rest on June 11, his ninety-second birthday. He had but recently recovered from a severe illness, and on this day, when proceeding in company with his grandson to a mission service in the schoolroom at Greystones, he was knocked down and killed by a runaway horse.

FOOLS FOR CHRIST'S SAKE.

A MISSIONARY'S ADDRESS.

At the last monthly prayer-meeting of the London Missionary Society, held at the Mission House, Blomfield-street, Rev. J. A. Lambert, of Benares, read part of 1 Cor. iv., and in the course of a brief address (the following report of which is from The Nonconformist and Independent), he remarked that the paramount thought in the churches at present was, How to bring about a more thorough consecration to God. If they could get their people and churches to consecrate themselves to God, it would shut off one thing which struck the minds of persons outside the Congregational Church—that peculiar thing which existed among them—hero-worship, or man-worship, or party-worship. In the Corinthian church they had divided themselves into parties, with various names; and how much that prevailed among Congregational churches! Churches close by each other never came into personal contact with one another, though they belonged to the same body. Ministers were working separately, and there was a want of sympathy between them. Entire consecration on the part of the people would shut that off. They wanted more consecration to God, and to God only—the feeling that it was for God and God only that they had to live; to the glory of God in the highest, and nothing but that. They wanted consecration on the part of their ministers.

They had a strange thing in connection with their Congregational churches. They were full and rich—full of material wealth, and many prided themselves on the great amount of spiritual wealth and vigour they had; but did they realise that they must be poor, and in reality weak, and that it was impossible for them to reign as kings for the kingdom of God as long as there were those among them who were not sharers in that spiritual wealth? The wide world lay all about them, and yet how little sympathetic touch they seemed to have even with the churches around them. The Apostle said: "We are fools." Were Congregational ministers fools for Christ's sake? Were they weak? Were they despised? Did they hunger and thirst and suffer nakedness as the Apostle said that he did? Did his description apply to ministers and churches now:—"We are made as the filth of the world, and are the offscouring of all things"? One day, when he was preaching in an Indian bazaar, one of the Mahommedans stood forth and said: "I have so much hatred and contempt for you that I would not allow you to come near to sweep my door." That was a kind of thing which did occasionally occur to the missionary. But were Christians quite willing for Christ's sake to be held as fools, to be regarded as weak, filthy, contemptible? Were they ready to take just simply that position which Christ Himself took for them?

It would not do to pray unless they were ready to back the prayer with instant action, or to preach unless they were prepared to follow it up by doing what they preached. To have money, and not to use it liberally for Christ; to have influence, and knowledge, and power, and authority, and to use it for any other purpose than for his glory, was to rob God. The abundance that England had at the present time was simply overwhelming, and the only safety valve for them was to spend and throw it out as fast as it came in, and let it be used for Christ and his glory.

He had not been long in this country, but he had discovered that people in their churches were panting for something more solid, more substantial than they had. Might God put the spirit of consecration into their ministers, and enable them to live a life of entire self-denial! In Benares there were 40,000 men (Bāenhath-wallah) consecrated to the service of their gods, and they were influential because they had given up home, wives, children, lands, houses, and everything. They looked bright, earnest, intelligent, stalwart men, and they went from place to place, and their influence told because they had given up all worldly enjoyment and consecrated themselves to that service. If ministers and missionaries were to make their work tell, it must be in that way of self-denial and consecration.

MR. MOODY AT HOME AGAIN.

"Come out upon the piazza," were the first words spoken to us by Mr. Moody, as we sat chatting in his parlour with friends. I had not met him since his great Chicago campaign the last winter. As I complied with his invitation, and took possession of one of the ample arm-chairs, I did not wonder that the evangelist sought the outer world, for the restful peace afforded by the Western view. I will not repeat the story of the scenery of Northfield, now familiar to your readers, but can assure them that "the half has never been told." Each year sees changes, telling of growth and progress on this fair hillside, where once was seen a procession of men, blear-eyed and ragged, carrying jugs to be filled at the distillery. On these very grounds now are seen bright, modest maidens, making the place radiant with their pure lives.

The latest building, to add to the wealth of this Seminary Home, is the new library which is to be speedily erected. Its corner-stone was laid on June 4, with the usual ceremony, speeches, and addresses. It is to cost about 25,000 dollars, and will hold 40,000 volumes. The presence of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse was a delight, it being his first appearance at this place. The need of funds with which to secure new books for the library is more apparent than ever.

The College Conference to be held the first two weeks in July is anticipated by young men from all over our land; and especially the privilege of meeting Professor Drummond, who is expected soon.

The best work, looking at ultimate results, of Mr. Moody's life, is found in the impetus thus given to missions, setting in motion influences as far-reaching as eternity. At Mount Hermon the same zeal and enthusiasm of its 225 boys continue. A company of some eighty cadets, uniformed and disciplined by Major Butler, of Virginia, gives quite a martial bearing to the young men, and a band of twenty-five pieces renders music in fine style, their services being called into requisition on all important occasions.

The Convocation will be held the first two weeks in August, distinguished scholars coming from various quarters of our land, and some from England. Mr. Moody has had a winter which has tested his physical powers as perhaps never before. He returns very tired, and yet such is his marvellous recuperative power that a few weeks of rest are enough, and he is at unrest unless about his Master's business.

Northampton, Mass., U.S.A., June 7.

THE GENERAL WELFARE OF THE BLIND.—The Association, which seeks to promote this commendable object, states in its report that ninety-one men and women are now employed in its workshops, and at their own homes, while twenty-seven others are receiving small pensions. Several industrial arts are carried on, and it is hoped to introduce others. One fact which calls forth much thankfulness is that the committee have throughout the year been able to keep all their blind workers employed. Colonel H. Lewis (28, Berners-street, W.) is the secretary of the Association.

ISLE OF WIGHT.—The annual gathering of all the Young Women's Christian Associations in the Isle of Wight, seven in number, at the invitation of the Ryde Branch, took place on Thursday, the 16th inst. They were kindly received by General and Mrs. Carr Tate in their grounds of St. John's House, which were thrown open for the occasion. About three hundred young women and many friends partook of a plentiful tea under the shade of the trees. Rev. W. Haslam gave a very impressive and suitable address, especially pertaining to Christian Associations. A very happy day was spent.

A BALLAD.

"O God, what shall I do?"
Was her wild, despairing cry;
All the livelong night she had watched by her
But only to see him die. [child,

By the side of the little cot
She sank on her bended knee,
And ever faster flowed her tears,
But never a prayer said she.

She could only think of God
As cruel and unjust,
And if she must bend to his stronger will
It should be because she must.

He had blighted her fondest hope,
He had taken her chiefest joy;
Nor would she care if now He would take
The mother with the boy.

With firm but loving hand
They led her from the room,
While fond friends decked in snowy shroud
Her darling for the tomb.

At last kind Nature brought
Calm sleep to her relief;
And thus awhile her burdened heart
Forgot its heavy grief.

And, in a dream, she saw
Her little one again,
Though not as when she saw him last,
On that cruel bed of pain.

By the Saviour's side he stood,
In beauty strange to see;
While round them countless children sang
A heavenly melody.

And when their voices ceased,
She heard the Saviour say:
"Children, another brother dear
Has come to heaven to-day."

"I thought my boy was dead,"
'Twas in her sleep she spoke;
But that her boy was living still
She knew when she awoke.

STRANGERS' REST, HAMBURG.

A few days ago I had the pleasure of attending the second anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association in connection with the Strangers' Rest in Hamburg. As some of your readers know, this Rest was founded by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe in 1880. Since the beginning of 1881, it has been managed by a committee, of which Pastor Roosen, Hamburg, is president. During this time it has been visited by about 40,000 strangers, mostly seamen, of whom fifty have professed to be converted at the Rest.

Two years ago a few young men formed a union for the purpose of spreading the blessing they had received. They invite strangers, and on Sunday evening give them a plain tea in the Rest. A few days ago this Young Men's Christian Association held its second anniversary. Among the speakers were some young men who had come to the Rest a few years ago almost in rags, and demoralised, and who are now well dressed, connected with a church, and holding respectable positions. Some of your readers were kind enough to contribute to this good work last year, and these will no doubt be interested in the progress of the work.

JOHN WOOLDRIDGE'S TENT is now pitched in the parish of Wing, near Leighton Buzzard, Bucks, by invitation of Messrs. Hely, whose evangelistic work in connection with village missions is so well known. Mr. Wooldridge was at Wing in the winter, and the blessing vouchsafed on his preaching then led to this second visit. Those who have gone from a distance to take part, include Mr. B. Burton, of Buckhurst-hill, Mr. G. Kirkham secretary of the Open-Air Mission, and others.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JUNE 26.—PSALM CXLI.

This Psalm, along with the previous and the two following ones, form a group of four of much the same character. "They all set forth the patience of faith under persecution from a malignant enemy."—Kay.

1.—Lord, I cry unto Thee: make haste unto me.—A wonderful exhibition of grace which allows a saved sinner to use such language in addressing God.

2.—Let my prayer be set forth before Thee as incense.—"The rising of the smoke of the incense seems to have been symbolical of the ascent to heaven of the prayers of the worshipper (Luke i. 20; Rev. v. 8, viii. 3, 4). The lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice.—The word for "sacrifice" is minchah, the offering of fine flour, or "meal offering" (R.V.) which accompanied the morning and evening sacrifice (see Exod. xxix. 41). The Psalmist does not compare the lifting up of his hands to the sacrifice which typified Christ alone, but to the offering of fine flour which accompanied it, which typified God's people consecrated to Him in their lives, as the drink-offering typified their consecration to Him in death. See as to the latter, Phil. ii. 17, margin, and 2 Tim. iv. 6, margin, R.V.

5.—An excellent oil, which shall not break my head.—Almost all critics render this (as R.V.) "As oil upon the head; let not my head refuse it." "He asks that he may both resist the tempting offers of prosperous wickedness, and may welcome reproof from a righteous man, as fragrant, cheering oil, which would strengthen him to continue in patient prayer for his enemies."—Kay.

6.—When their judges are overthrown in stony places.—A difficult passage. "The judges are the possessors of this world's power who rebel against the kingdom of David. Comp. Ps. ii. 2, 10, where, as here, a dashing in pieces is threatened to David's (Christ's) enemies."—Hengstenberg.

MONDAY, JUNE 27.—PSALM CXLII.

"This Psalm is expressive of the deepest sense of danger and of desertion, amounting almost to despair. But a conviction of the utter hopelessness of his condition seemed to excite in him to trust more implicitly and more exclusively in God. This resolution, as in other Psalms of a similar character, converts his valley of Achor into a door of hope, and the Psalm ends with a bright description of a morning of gladness succeeding to a night of sorrow."—Sp. Com.

A prayer when he was in the cave.—"David sees in his desperate position, 'when he was in the cave,' a type of the future condition of his race and of the Church. When it might come with them to an extremity, they should still not despair, but pour out their complaint before the Lord."—Hengstenberg.

4.—I looked on my right hand.—"The allusion here, it is supposed, is to the observance of the ancient Jewish courts of judicature, in which the advocate, as well as the accuser, stood on the right hand of the accused."—J. Anderson.

4, 5.—Refuge failed me...Thou art my refuge.—A common experience with God's children. The refuge they naturally look to, whatever it be, personal or ecclesiastical, must first fail them before they will come to Christ and say, "Thou art my Refuge." It is the conviction, wrought by the Spirit of God, that "the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies" that leads souls to build on the foundation that God has laid (Isa. xxviii. 16, 17).

7.—Bring my soul out of prison.—This, combined with the words in the last verse, "I am brought very low," reminds us of Him who could say, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death," and who was brought out of prison on the resurrection morning.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28.—PSALM CXLIII.

1.—In thy righteousness.—There is a difficulty here which nothing but the knowledge of the Gospel can explain. The Psalmist prays to be answered in God's "faithfulness and righteousness," and yet in the next verse prays that God would not enter into judgment with him, as in his sight "no man living should be justified." The Gospel key is: "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 9).

3.—For the enemy hath persecuted my soul.—Scripture recognises the enmity of the wicked one in the persecution of God's servants much more than they themselves are inclined to do. They see their enemies in the flesh, whether their own, or that of others, and are inclined to see no further; but Scripture says: "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places" (Eph. vi. 12). The early Christians saw the Roman empire as their enemy and persecutor, but the Lord showed the Apostle John the Roman empire energised by Satan (Rev. xii. 3). Christians later on would have traced their persecution to the revived professing Christian empire but John is shown that to this Roman Christendom, the dragon gives "his power, and his throne, and great authority" (Rev. xiii. 2).

6.—I stretch forth my hands unto Thee.—"As a poor beggar for an alms."—Trapp. Comp. Matt. v. 3, which may be rendered, "Blessed are the beggars in spirit: for their's is the kingdom of heaven."

9.—I flee unto Thee to hide me.—So the soul flies for refuge to Christ. "The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe" (Prov. xviii. 10).

10.—Teach me to do thy will.—The soul hid in Christ seeks conformity with God's will through the teaching and leading of the Spirit. Rom. viii. 14.

11.—Quicken me, O Lord.—There is a further quickening which is still future, and which will indeed bring the soul out of trouble. See Rom. viii. 11.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29.—PSALM CXLIV.

This Psalm recalls the 18th, and as that is a Psalm of Christ's resurrection, so in an extended sense is this. It differs from it, however, in this, that the magnificent description of God's descent from above for the deliverance of his servant is here not a description, but a prayer. This suggests that, viewed spiritually, this Psalm may represent the believer's hopeful anticipation of his own or of the Church's resurrection, yet future, and many things in the Psalm confirm this: see for example vers. 3, 4, as expressing dissatisfaction with "the present evil age."

1.—Blessed be the Lord my strength, which teacheth my hands to war.—Taken from Psalm xviii. 34, 46; the mercy shown to "David and his seed" (xviii. 50) is here, as it were, claimed by one of the seed.

2.—Who subdueth my people under me.—If true of the Head, this is also true of the members who are to reign with Him. Rev. iii. 21, xx. 4. See 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3.

11.—Rid me.—This is the same verb as "delivereth" in the last verse, and confirms the thought that the former deliverer of David is asked now to deliver the speaker as one of his seed. The New Testament parallels are Rom. viii. 11, and 2 Cor. iv. 14. Strange children, whose mouth, &c.—The true Church longs for deliverance from her false surroundings, "Children in whom is no faith" (Deut. xxxii. 20), who have always been her worst persecutors.

12.—That our sons may be, &c.—Delitzsch denies that it can be so translated, and renders it, "Because our sons are," &c., and so through the two next verses, "Because our daughters are," &c.; "Because our garners are," &c. Thus it is a contrast between the true seed and the false, and an anticipation of the manifestation of the sons of God Rom. viii. 19).

THURSDAY, JUNE 30.—PSALM CXLV.

This is an alphabetical Psalm, with the exception of one letter (nun) omitted, but the reason of this evidently is to preserve a division of the whole into three parts, of seven verses each, which made it necessary to omit one letter to reduce the whole to twenty-one verses. Each of these three parts of seven verses each has a character of its own. The first (1—7) celebrates the greatness and glory of the Godhead. The second (8—14) displays the grace, mercy, and goodness of the Lord with special reference to the glories of his kingdom. The third (15—21), sets forth the administrative power of God as seen in nature, and his presence with, and preserving grace towards, "all that call upon Him in truth." It is a sort of foreshadowing of the revelation of the three persons in one God, which is more clearly unfolded in the New Testament.

8.—The Lord is gracious, and full of compassion.—"This memorable utterance of Jehovah concerning Himself (Exod. xxxiv. 9) the Psalmist interweaves into his celebration of the revelation of Divine love."—Delitzsch. Here commences what may be more specially called the revelation of "the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

15.—The eyes of all wait on Thee, and Thou givest them their meat in due season.—The administrative power of God in nature is a pledge of his administrative skill in the sphere of grace. "All these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as He will" (1 Cor. xii. 11).

FRIDAY, JULY I.—PSALM CXLVI.

"The Psalter now draws to a close with five Hallelujah Psalms."—Delitzsch.

3.—In the son of man, in whom there is no help.—Kay renders this "In son of man that has no saving power," and points out the striking fact that after the Apostles in Acts iv. 12 had said of Jesus, "Neither is there salvation (the very word used here for 'help' by the LXX.) in any other," &c., they go on in ver. 24 to quote almost verbatim ver. 6 of this Psalm, showing how much it was in their thoughts at the time. Thus, by this Psalm, "was the way prepared, by despair of human help, for faith in Him who was 'Son of Man,' yet Lord from heaven."—Kay.

7.—Which giveth food to the hungry.—"The signs of Divine power mentioned in the later part of this Psalm were literally fulfilled in Jesus. This one, Matt. xiv. 15; looseth the prisoners, John xi. 43; openeth the eyes of the blind, John ix. 32; raiseth them that are bowed down, Luke xiii. 11. If the ancient Jews expected help and salvation from their Messiah; if they taught their posterity to put trust in this promised seed of Abraham, then their expected Messiah must be that God of Israel whom Psalm cxlvi. describeth."—Jackson.

SATURDAY, JULY 2.—PSALM CXLVII.

"Very generally assigned to the time of the dedication of the city wall, B.C. 445 (Neh. xii. 27), when 'the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off.'"—Kay. Whilst it admits, no doubt of a partial and preliminary application to the rebuilding of the walls in Nehemiah's time, it points on to a future more glorious event of the same kind, spoken of in Psalm cii. 16, "When the Lord shall build up Zion, He shall appear in his glory." It may also be taken spiritually in its present application to the building that is going on even now (Eph. ii. 22).

2.—The Lord doth build up Jerusalem, He gathereth together the outcasts of Israel.—The word "gathereth together" is render in the LXX. (Greek translation), by a word which our Lord uses in Mark xiii. 27, of his gathering together his elect at his coming. As to the "Outcasts of Israel" including Gentile believers, see Isa. lvi. 8.

4.—He telleth the number of the stars.—See Dan. xii. 3, and 1 Cor. xv. 41, 42.

20.—As for his judgments they have not known them.—"O righteous Father the world hath not known Thee, but I have known Thee" (John xvii. 25).

MR. FRANK WHITE'S TABERNACLE.

The foundation stone of Mr. Frank White's New Tabernacle was laid on the afternoon of the 14th inst., in the presence of a large number of friends. The proceedings were opened by prayer and praise, and the reading of Scriptures. After making a brief financial statement, Mr. White handed the trowel to Mr. George Williams, and heartily thanking him for the help he had already rendered, said: "It would be idle to assume that in a day like the present one could possibly enter on such a work as that in which we are now engaged without fear and trembling; but God is our refuge and strength. It is no small comfort to myself that all my fellow-workers are one with me in the determination to know nothing else in the neighbourhood but 'Jesus Christ, and Him crucified,' and are resolved at any cost to maintain a life-long testimony to the divinity and sufficiency of those doctrines commonly called 'Evangelical.' For my part I could take no pleasure in any of its stones if I did not believe the new house would remain associated with a pure Gospel, a Gospel which approaches men by way of the Cross, and addresses itself to them as to those who by nature and practice are lost, ruined sinners, and offers them without money and without price a full, present, and everlasting salvation through faith in the blood and righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Mr. Williams, in reply, said as it had been his privilege to be connected with the work carried on in Talbot Tabernacle for some time, perhaps there was a little appropriateness in his taking so prominent a part amongst them. It was in his counting-house in the City that their first pastor (Mr. Gordon Forlong) was brought to a knowledge of saving truth, and it was in connection with the Y.M.C.A. that their second pastor was brought to Christ; therefore, as he had been identified with both their pastors, he felt it a great honour and privilege in being present that day. A church commenced so thoroughly evangelical, and carried on so thoroughly after the mind of Christ, could not but prosper, could not but be a blessing in any neighbourhood.

At this stage of the proceedings Mr. Williams, we regret to say, was attacked with a severe bleeding of the nose, and fearing the effects of further exposure to the sun (the heat was intense), Mr. T. A. Denny very kindly consented to lay the stone on his behalf.

Earnest and faithful addresses followed from Dr. Paterson, Rev. H. E. Brooke, and Mr. Varley. Mr. H. Bowker, to whom Mr. White referred in terms of much affection as his oldest friend in the Gospel, and through whose instrumentality he had been led to the Saviour, was to have spoken, but was also prostrated by the great heat. Telegrams of sympathy were received from Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, Mr. J. A. Spurgeon, Dr. Popham, and the venerable George Rogers, of the Pastors' College.

The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. Frank Bevan, supported by Revs. W. Fuller Gooch, J. Fordyce, Dr. Morison, J. Tuckwell, Dr. Anderson, Mr. Russell Hurditch, and Mr. R. C. Morgan.

Mr. Bevan carried with him the hearty sympathy of all present in his commendation of the principles upon which Mr. White and his friends were proceeding in this effort, and in the strength of which they had signed a contract only to the amount of their present ability—viz., £3134. Nearly £2000 more will be required to complete the building. We hope the many friends who are at one with our brother in his earnest and much needed effort, but who were unable to be present, will send him an offering, and not allow the work to stop for lack of silver and gold. The amount contributed during the day, including 100 guineas from Mr. Williams and fifty from Mr. Denny, was £350.

BALLYMENA.—A meeting for the formation of a Y.W.C.A. was recently held in this town. There are up to the present two hundred enrolled as members and associates. During the past month twenty-five members have joined the Y.M.C.A.

LIVINGSTONE INLAND MISSION.

MR. STANLEY'S ATTACK ON THE MISSIONARIES.

By Mrs. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

Many readers of The Christian will have observed a letter from Mr. Stanley to Mr. Mackinnon, published by Sir Francis de Winton in The Times of Friday last, which will have shocked and pained them. In justice to the absent we feel bound to make a few comments on that letter, and to give the other side of the story which we received by the same mail from one of the missionaries concerned.

As the leader of a large expedition for the relief of Emin Bay—an expedition of which Mr. Mackinnon, I believe, bears the main expense—Mr. Stanley was naturally anxious to be detained as little as possible at Leopoldville, and the more so, as food was scarce there at the time. He got possession of all the boats he could, and wished to get the mission steamer Henry Reed as well as the rest. Now this steamer had just returned from an eight months' trip on the Upper Congo and Mobangi, and was in need of repairs and painting. Moreover, Mr. Billington, in whose charge it was, had no authority from his Board in Boston, and, consequently, no right either to lend or charter it. He was expected to have it ready to take up to the Equator station some missionaries who were to arrive shortly by the Afrikaan, and the interval would have been employed in preparing the vessel. He did not feel free consequently to accede to Mr. Stanley's wish. He is a cautious, conscientious man, and one who is peculiarly careful to do what he deems his duty, however difficult and distasteful, and he took the ground that he was not at liberty to give the little steamer.

Setting aside all law and justice, Mr. Stanley—who had no government authority whatever, but was simply a private individual legally, claimed the property of the Mission for the use of his expedition, and said he would enforce the claim "at all costs to all concerned." He posted Soudanese soldiers with fixed bayonets around the mission house, under the command of Major Barthelet, drove the mission servants off the steamer, and put twenty black soldiers on board, and demanded instant concession. This was clearly unjustifiable conduct, and no wonder Mr. Stanley is anxious in his letter to Mr. Mackinnon to excuse it!

The Governor of Leopoldville under the Congo Free State interfered, obliged the Soudanese soldiers to leave the Henry Reed, and obliged Stanley to withdraw the guard round the house. He then relieved Mr. Billington of all responsibility in the matter by requisitioning the steamer on behalf of the Government for Stanley's expedition, and it was chartered accordingly, as the missionaries would not, of course, resist the constituted authority. The same sense of duty which bound them to refuse an unauthorised demand bound them equally to obey the Government. This was bad enough; but, adding insult to injury, Mr. Stanley sends home for publication a letter imputing the basest motives to Mr. Billington and Dr. Sims, and containing besides the grossest falsehoods. Some of these I have answered in a letter to The Times, which will I hope be published.

The missionaries may have been mistaken in their course; personally I think they were, and that they should and might have stretched a point and lent the vessel, trusting to the sympathy of the Board in Boston with the object of the expedition. But, right or wrong, Stanley ought to have acted differently in the first place, and to have given the missionaries credit for right motives, in the second. His conduct was imperious and tyrannical, and his letter is a contemptible endeavour to justify by inuendos and falsehoods what is unjustifiable. I feel that this explanation is due to the friends of the Mission, though most of them would be perfectly able to read between the lines.

CENTRAL VIGILANCE SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of this Society recently took place in Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe. The energetic secretary, Mr. Stephen Bourne, presented an encouraging report. At the instance of the Society vendors of evil literature had been prosecuted, and a number of houses of ill-fame closed, and the keepers punished. It is to be regretted that the Society should receive so little support from the public, for whose benefit it was pointed out by the various speakers, it exists. The income during the past year amounted to only £272.

Rev. Canon Leigh deplored the lack of interest among the upper classes in the work of the Society. Events show that in many things we are utterly wanting in all Christian feeling. He emphasised the importance of establishing Vigilance Committees to watch over the interests of the young, and he urged Christian people to do all in their power to encourage temperance, sobriety, and purity. Rev. Canon Barker enlarged on the necessity of educating our youth on this grave subject, and touched on the close connection between immorality and strong drink. Lord Radstock adverted to the great responsibility which rests on Christians with regard to the masses of the population. As followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, they were called upon to do all they could in stemming the tide of iniquity and in sheltering those exposed to adverse currents. He suggested as a means of creating more interest in this important subject in the West-end that the clergy should convene meetings of their parishioners.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., stated that his Bill for the repression of corrupt literature had been well received by the Government, and he was not without hope that by the end of the Session it would be an Act of Parliament. Rev. J. F. Kitto, Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., Lord Kinnaird, Mr. W. F. Craies, and Lieut.-Colonel Everett also spoke. Several of these gentlemen referred to the great need there is for the passing of a short Bill dealing with the terrible crime of incest, which is at present unpunishable in this country.

The office of the Society is at 15, York-buildings, Adelphi, W.C.

MR. HENRY THORNE visited Nottingham on Sunday and Monday, June 12 and 13, at the invitation of the Y.M.C.A. The power of the Spirit was manifestly present at each service, many souls finding their way into the inquiry room.

DR. MUNHALL'S Revival Mission at Toledo has been remarkable in result, the full number of conversions reaching nearly a thousand. The closing service at First Congregational Church was thronged, and for nearly four hours the attention of all was fixed. After a praise service Dr. Munhall preached from the words, "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith; quit you like men, be strong." The four essentials of the rules laid down for those who then were commencing the Christian life were: Prayer, study of the Bible, have some definite work, perform every duty, not from a sense of duty, but from love to Christ. Afterwards there was an hour's testimony, during which upwards of 400 persons witnessed of the blessing they had received.

VEGETARIANISM.—The Executive Committee of the Vegetarian Society (London Auxiliary, 62, Ludgate-hill, E.C.) will send to any interested in learning more of the aims and principles of the Society a packet of literature, a dietary pointing out the best method of commencing the vegetarian system, together with recipes of vegetarian dishes, with full instructions for making them successfully. Such information will be sent free of charge on the receipt of a stamped and directed envelope. The work of the Society may be summed up in the words, humanity, health, purity, temperance, and economy. It claims the highest sanctions of religion and science; it contains a gradual, yet certain, solution of the difficult social problems of the day—e.g., overcrowding in towns, the land question, housing and feeding of the poor. Last week the Society gave a vegetarian banquet to about ninety Congregational ministers in London, when addresses were given on the subject.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY.

hose who contrast the prison-like aspect of is Penitentiary as it frowningly looked upon e passers by in Pentonville-road, with its present cheerful and home-like features in Stoke ewington, will rejoice greatly at the change. he one was intensely forbidding, the other is viting ; and in passing through the airy apart- ents and into the rooms, it is impossible not to el admiration for the great changes that have ken place and which must tell enormously with e inmates. The value of the work done in the undry last year was no less than £1800. Some ears ago the inmates were largely engaged in eedlework which now is represented only to a nall amount, the laundry work having been ound much more beneficial.

The report states that seventy young women ere received into the Institution during the ast year; about the same number left, of hom twenty-eight were placed in domestic ervice, and nine were restored to their friends; xty-five still remaining under the care of the nstitution. With a view to encouragement to ell-doing, the committee have recently decided award to the inmates premiums on good ehaviour, tidiness, and industry.

Lord Kinnaird, who presided at the annual eeting on Tuesday last week, said the thought f two hundred similar Institutions in London as enough to send all to their knees, and should ead those who raised their voices against the vils that abound, to speak with no uncertain ound. He expressed the hope that the repre- entatives of the people in Parliament will take p the many social questions which are now ressing for a solution, and said, speaking for any whom he knew, they were determined that many respects the future shall be far different what the past has been. This Institution, he dded, has been a pioneer in a grand work, and e congratulated all on the great advance which as been made in the treatment of the inmates ince its formation.

Rev. W. Spensley gave an earnest address on he general subject of purity, and expressed his hankfulness for the noble work being done in his direction. Mr. Christien, as the organiser f the Midnight Meeting movement, said that in ooking back over fifty years, the progress of eligion, which is the foundation of morality, is ery manifest. The whole face of England has een altered by the spirit of religion which has een infused throughout her people. He bore estimony also to the devotedness with which adies came forward to help in such good work. Ir. J. D. Allcroft, Revs. J. De Kewer Williams, nd H. J. Berguer also bore testimony to the alue of the work done at this institution.

"THE CHRISTIAN" ABROAD.

iss Cooke, of the Female Education Society's hinese Girls' School, Singapore, thanks the friends ho send her The Christian, which is most agerly read by the English-speaking Chinese, and nglish soldiers, sailors, and policemen.

Rev. Joseph A. Elliott, of Fyzabad, Oudh, India, riting to thank the friend who sends him a copy f this paper weekly, says:—"I give The Chris- ian to the soldiers who attend my class, and they ass it round among themselves, and finally it nds its way into the hospital. Thus it reaches any, and does some, I know, good. The soldiers re as grateful, and look out for its weekly coming s much as my wife and I do."

A great temperance meeting was held lately in the ethel Wesleyan chapel, Barbados.

The open-air Gospel temperance meetings, on Glasgow reen, have been resumed for the summer. In past ears they have been the means of much good.

Rev. J. M. Hewson, Baptist Temperance Agent, has een conducting missions in Wales, and more recently, as had successful meetings in several London Baptist hurches.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION.

The Mission in Collingwood-street, which originated entirely with working men, recently held its tenth anniversary. The report read by the secretary, Mr. Joseph Ashton, states that it has continued essentially a Gospel work of working men to their own class, and as it has extended and developed different branches of labour, men have been raised up from among its own converts to occupy the various positions of responsibility.

Of the many converts during the year, fifty-six were admitted to Christian fellowship. A senior boys' class with an average attendance of forty, and a sewing-class for elder girls. have both been productive of good fruit. Rescue work, Gospel temperance, and other societies have also been successfully carried on. Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, said such a working men's mission was eminently a cause for joy. Mr. Curtiss (Ragged School Union) and Mrs. Bevan also addressed the meeting. Special tent services are about to be held, and the committee would welcome the loan of a tent for this purpose for about six weeks. The superintendents are Messrs. T. and J. Young, 32, Nelson-street, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

SOLDIERS AND MISSIONS.

Every year thousands of soldiers come from foreign lands to Great Britain to swell the ranks of the unemployed. At the same time, various schemes are being formed to assist emigration, whilst the difficulty remains of obtaining the means to send out into the world men who can spread the Gospel. Why not assist our Christian soldiers to remain in the countries where they have been serving, where they have become acclimatised, and are interested in the condition of the people?

Two years ago, at our Soldiers' Home, Cape Town, we said good-bye to a young soldier, with the words, "You must stay in China, and be a missionary, and work for Jesus." His latest letter has made us glad. He writes:—"I am pleased to let you know that, following the directions of your last letter, I asked the Lord what I could do. I am sure you will rejoice and thank Him that I have been led to stay in China. I can thank Him now that I was led through the difficulties I had at first, and also that I was made willing to be not only here, but anywhere He should choose; for I must confess I was not willing, because I wanted to go to England.

"I have joined the American Bible Society as a colporteur, and have had some three months' experience in this work which is expressly to visit all steamers with native passengers leaving this port. In this way the Word is scattered, bringing to mind the verse, 'Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days.' To do this work I have to learn the language. I picked up a few phrases to help me to sell books, and I have a teacher, and study both the written and spoken language. Pray for me that God will help me in the study of the language, and to be 'a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.' I should be very glad if you could get me some Chinese text-cards. I should like some in Shanghai and some in Mandarin, and also in English for the sailors."

IRISH COTTAGE INDUSTRIES.—Mrs. Hart writes:—There is a permanent depôt for the sale of the products of these industries, at Donegal House, 43, Wigmore-street, London, W., where the "kells" embroideries, hand-knit and hand-woven hosiery and gloves, homespun embroideries, cloths and tweeds, hand-sewn under-linen, lace, crochet, embroidered handkerchiefs, Irish linens, &c., may be purchased, or orders given by post. By obtaining a steady outlet for the work of the Irish peasants, we look forward to being the means of rescuing thousands from destitution, and planting in large districts hope and industry in the place of despair and idleness.

THE HAVEN.

"South of the river, between London Bridge and Westminster, there cannot be fewer than 9000 lost girls and women, some, alas! not yet past the years of childhood." Such is the appalling statement which appears at the commencement of a delightfully written account of a quiet rescue work that has been going on for some time in the district indicated. Well may the writer add, "And this in Christian London!"

The Haven, as its name implies, is a place of refuge for any amongst these thousands who "wish to begin a new life," and such it has already been to many. Two large warehouse floors, over a stable, by careful arrangement have supplied the accommodation required, or rather all that was possible of attainment at the beginning of this work. There is a tiny room for the two Mildmay deaconesses, whose headquarters are in the South London House at Brixton. These, with a missionary employed by no society, receiving no pay, who from five o'clock in the evening till early morning passes to and fro in the streets, giving tracts and papers to any poor girl he meets, constitute the working staff. Such is the devotion which this man brings to his life-work, that he says, "I feel I ought never to go to bed."

Some remarkable cases are given of the blessing which has attended this work, but such work, we well know, is sure of its reward. Of those in the Home during the first eighteen months of its existence three have married and eighty were placed in suitable situations, while others were sent home to their parents or passed on to more permanent Homes, and many proofs of heartfelt gratitude for the love which has lifted them out of the mire have been given by these girls who are now living holy and happy lives. It should be added that the Haven has also been of signal use in preventive work. Clothing, provisions, furniture, or flowers, may be sent to Miss Heath or Miss Conry, The Haven, 6a, Trinity-street, Borough, S.E.

A CARD FOR THE ANXIOUS.

The following, printed on two sides of a tinted card, should be widely circulated; it seeks to point the anxious to Christ, the true foundation:—

THE LORD SAVES.

He is all our Salvation: those only who have Christ have everlasting life.—John iii. 16; 1 John v. 12.

The Father, the Son, and the Spirit are one God, one Lord, united in saving all believers.

Satan is real, sin is real, hell is real; and, precious truth! the Saviour is real, his righteousness is real, and heaven is real.

No Theory, Church, Minister, "Priest," "Pope," "Sacraments," or "Good Works," or all together, can ever save any one soul—Jesus only can save.—Ps. lxii. 2—6; Matt. i. 21.

Salvation is all of Grace, the gift of God, as free as the air we breathe! it is all in Christ; clearly made known throughout the Bible; is revealed by the Spirit to all who seek, and it is enjoyed in believing.—Rom. xv. 13.

Those who have the Lord and trust alone in Him are saved. All who have Christ have the Father, and are in his bosom.—John i. 18.

HAVE YOU CHRIST?

Do you believe that He is present with you? And do you trust Him and obey Him, and none other? Can you say, "Christ is all, and He is mine?" If so, you have eternal life.—John v. 24.

Having Christ Himself is being in the Way.
Having Christ Himself is having the Truth.
Having Christ Himself is having the Life. — John xiv. 6.

He saves by his precious blood all who truly trust Him.

His death is our life, and his life is our strength.

He is our perfection to delight in for ever.—Col. ii. 10.

Behold His Beauty.—Ps. xxvii. 4.

Be satisfied with Himself, and grow like Him.—2 Cor. iii. 18.

Those are most unwise who allow anything to come between their soul and the Lord Himself.—1 Thess. i. 9—10; and iv. 16—17.

Read his word with prayer for grace to know and do his will.

Having the Lord a blessed reality yourself, seek to make Him known to others by calm, meek, loving conduct;
And always mention his Name with becoming reverence.

MOHAMEDANISM in N. AFRICA.—2.

THIS singularly diversified country, Algeria, has its three zones strongly contrasting one with another. The Tell, with great variety of mountain scenery and highly cultivated valleys, extends from the shores of the Mediterranean to various distances up to 100 miles inland. Here are many important French towns and villages, as well as a large sedentary population of Kabyles and others.

The high plateau, extending from the lower to the higher Atlas Mountains, is subject to great alternations of intense cold and extreme heat, inhabited chiefly by nomads, who tend their vast flocks of sheep. In the centre and west are many chotts or lakes, but on the eastern side is the mountainous district of the Aures. The Sahara has, at the foot of the great Atlas Mountains, a vast depression of sand and clay, and then a rocky plateau in some parts exceedingly high, rising up to the country of the Touareg.

The various races inhabiting these regions are greatly influenced, not only by origin, but by their surroundings of soil, climate, water, &c., and manifest a great variety of character. Some, like the Kabyles, of correct manners, brave, lovers of justice, impressionable, paying honour to woman, with others, like the Chaouia, with great looseness of manners and addicted to theft; with some, religious fervour, others with a complete absence of religiousness; here customs purely democratic, and little influenced by Marabouts, there a feudal organisation as the Touaregs, or with the rule of the Tolbas or Clerks, as with the Mzabs, the chief ruler being the elected cheikh of the Mosquèe.

These wide regions, containing some 8,000,000 of accessible population, have within the last seven years elicited the lively zeal and sympathy of a band of Christian men, and the Kabyle and Berber Mission has sent out forty brethren and sisters for their evangelisation; but, hitherto, they have only occupied the fringe of the mission field. It would be difficult to occupy a post either in the high plateau or in the central parts of the Sahara, but as this latter depends for its supplies, dates, corn, &c., on the North, and caravans are continually passing between North and South, thousands and thousands can thus be encountered at many towns on their passage which form the gates of the Atlas; many of these traffickers speak French, and all know Arabic.

I would indicate several towns which they pass on their routes northwards—Biskra, El Aghouat, through which much traffic passes, Djelfa in the Sahara; and further north on the sides of the Atlas, Jiaret, one of the most important points in the Sahara of Oran, Boghar Teniet el Ahd, Saida, Daya. In these places an important work could be undertaken for the nomads. But there is an interesting group of villages of the Ksourians, a mild race in subjection to the Haggar Touaregs, who treat them as their slaves, and although, with those in Morocco, they number 1,600,000, they allow the 40,000 Touaregs to domineer over them in Algeria. These villages, which are claimed by the French, are El Abiod, Chellala, Asla, Bou Semghoun, Thiout, Ain Seffra, Ain Sfissifa, Iche, the latter not far from the oasis of Figuig. It is to be hoped that ere long they will be enfranchised by the French and delivered from the yoke of their present masters. The military post of Geryville would be the point from whence to reach them. They speak Berber. The Chaouia constitute the transition between the sedentary and nomad tribes.

In Junisie, Kairoan is a most important place to aim at, and in Morocco, Tetuan and Mogador. One cannot overlook the vast needs of the three hundred villagers of French colonists along the Tell, neither the Spaniards, who outnumber them. Ghadames would be a very desirable spot to encounter the caravans going northwards, but it would be necessary to be under the protection of the Azgar Touaregs; but for access to and labour in all these places one needs special openings and guidance from the Lord, as well as labourers adapted and specially raised up for the work; crusaders with a Divine enthusiasm to lift the Cross above the crescent, men embued with he Holy Ghost, and caparisoned with the whole armour of God.

For such a mission one must be able to say intelligently, "Dieu le veut"—we go, constrained by the love of Christ, to seek alone the glory of God, whatever may be the results. Obedience to the command of our Lord is above all else, and surely his word, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation" (Mark xvi. 15) takes in these poor neglected followers of the false prophet. May it please Him to put into the hearts of many the inquiry, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" "Is it thy will that I should go to them?"

FIELD-LANE REFUGES.

THE forty-ninth annual meeting of this admirable Institution was held at Holborn Town Hall on Thursday, last week, under the presidency of Sir Robert Carden, Bart., M.P. The report, read by Mr. Peregrine Platt, the secretary, states that the Institution continues to be the resort of large numbers of the poverty-stricken destitute, the gross attendances at the various departments during the past year amounting to upwards of 139,500. In the Bible Ragged School about 660 children of the poorest type receive instruction every week, and the Ragged Church has also an attendance of upwards of 200 of the poorest men and women every Sunday morning. The other branches of the work are highly valued. In the Industrial Homes at Hampstead 106 boys and 80 girls have been maintained, clothed, and industrially trained, while thirteen girls have been sent to service from the Servants' Training Home.

Mr. B. W. Chandler said that this institution seeks through its various agencies to act the part of the Good Samaritan, and to send forth those who come to it broken down and ready to despair, with new hope and new ideas in life Many against whom the doors of other institutions have been closed have here found a shelter. The Chairman said there was as much need as ever for the devoted labours of those who, in ragged schools and such refuges as this, seek to raise the fallen and to pour in the wine and oil of divine consolation to the broken and wounded in spirit. Rev. H. J. Berguer pointed to the two hundred children on the platform, neatly clothed, and looking well and happy, as the best possible proof of how great a work is being done by this Institution on behalf of those who were once utterly homeless and destitute. Rev. David Davies, Rev. Colmer Symes, Rev. Ossian Davies, and Rev. Dr. Clifford also addressed the meeting on various aspects of this beneficent and truly Christ-like work. During the evening the children sang several hymns and songs in a way that spoke well for the higher class of training given them.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing upon the work of the Y.M.C.A., in Owen Sound, Canada.——For Jews in Canada; that the interest amongst the Christian Churches in their conversion may be deepened, and efforts put forth to win them to Christ.——For blessing on tent services at Upper Tooting, S.W.——For a week's special Gospel services at Aigle, commencing on Thursday, June 23.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—We have again put up our wooden-sided Gospel Tent on the most central site adjoining the Esplanade, commencing at Whitsuntide. On Whit Monday we were, as usual, on the sands, morning, afternoon, and evening, holding forth the Word of Life to the thousands of excursionists and others who attentively listened to the different spekers. We have been greatly encouraged in every meeting since. There are noon-day seasons for prayer, and two afternoons devoted to Bible addresses to Christians, besides the nightly testimony to the Gospel. A good work is going on in another of my tents at Shirehampton, and soon we expect to have six or seven tents in full swing for the remainder of the season.

The Book World.

CHRIST'S COMING KINGDOM.*

OF this remarkable book this is the second edition, the first having been speedily exhausted. In it Mr. Varley deals with the moral government of God, as it is revealed in Holy Scripture, and in the history of men. In the great theme of the book there are few Christians who do not feel, at the present hour, a deep interest; and here the devout reader will find all the great principles enunciated, sustained by the testimonies of the Divine Word. Except to known matter of fact, beyond the Word, there is in the book no appeal; but in handling "the sword of the Spirit" the writer shows himself at home. On the great outlines of prophetic truth the reader will here find much instruction; and we venture to think, no unprejudiced reader can weigh the writer's arguments on the subject without being convinced of the personal pre-Millennial advent of the Lord. On this point we quote as a sample the comment on the words of James in the Council of Jerusalem (p. 125): "After this I will return, and I will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up, that the residue of men might seek unto the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things" (Amos ix. 11, 12). Mr. Varley remarks:—

"In the light of these words, may I not ask my readers to observe the immense importance of an intelligent regard for dispensational truth. Did James ignore the aid of the prophetic Scriptures? But for the light of prophecy, shining clearly for the Church's guidance and instruction, the Assembly at Jerusalem might have broken up disheartened and divided. Instead of this, the assuring words concerning the Divine purpose showed that the return of the Lord must precede the conversion of the world; that the taking out of a people for his name must precede his coming to reign; that the house of David awaited his re-building; that its ruins would continue until the King Himself should set it up (Acts xv. 13—18). A Millennium without Christ never entered the mind of the Council at Jerusalem; a kingdom without the King, the glory of his people Israel in the absence of the King of glory—nay, verily."

If we contemplate, at the present hour, the internal, restless condition of the nations, and their unprecedented warlike preparations, how dark is the outlook? Men's hearts may well fail them for fear while they look for those things which are coming on the earth. This book shows that the darkest hour is before the dawn; that, however inscrutable to us it may be, in the moral government of God there is no imperfection; that through all the dispensations God has been manifesting man's incompetency to govern the world; that his rule, universally considered, has ever been one of cruelty, oppression, bloodshed, and wrong. Therefore, of rulers, there must be a change; in other words, there must be a King who shall reign in righteousness; all the wicked and the corrupters of the earth must be put away as dross. These positions are sustained by Scriptural evidence which we judge irrefragable. Of this blessed and only Potentate, whom, in his times, the Father shall show (1 Tim. vi. 14, 15), Mr. Varley remarks (p. 19)—"The words 'blessed' and 'only' are designed for comparison, and are both striking and appropriate. We recall that which history furnishes, and remind our readers of what has happened during the past twenty years to the Czars of Russia, the Emperors Napoleon and Maximilian, the Presidents of the United States, the Sultan of Turkey, the Khedive, and other crowned heads. The term 'blessed' cannot be said to belong to the experience of these earthly monarchs, but it shall attach to the coming King. Besides this, no peer or riva shall interfere with his universal sovereignty. The contrast is between the many petty earthly kings and the One Great Divine Potentate, between the corrupt and unblessed crowned heads of earth, and the One supreme and blessed Monarch of heaven."

* CHRIST'S COMING KINGDOM; or, The Lord's Reign o the Earth. By HENRY VARLEY. Whiting & Co.

Mr. Varley's book is orthodox, evangelical, and sound in doctrine; clear and forcible in style; and, on the great questions handled, logical and conclusive in its reasoning. In exposition it reveals familiarity with both the letter and spirit of the Word. For the present time its great theme is one of the most important. And we think few, even though familiar with the prophetic Scriptures, will read it without receiving spiritual profit, and much instructive suggestion.

BISHOP ELLICOTT ON 1 CORINTHIANS.*

All who value critical scholarship in reverent hands as applied to the elucidation of Holy Scripture will rejoice in the appearance of another volume of Bishop Ellicott's well-known commentaries, and none the less because the subject is the, till lately, somewhat neglected one of the First Epistle to the Corinthians. We say "till lately," for now, as a subject for exposition, it has suddenly risen into favour. Witness the recently published commentaries of Beet, Edwards, Godet, and Dr. Kay, as well as that of Canon Evans in "The Speaker's Commentary." If to this we add the present work, it cannot be said that there is not abundant help available to the English reader who may wish to study this most interesting portion of the Word of God in the light of modern scholarship.

Those who are acquainted with Dr. Ellicott's former commentaries will find here the same patient examination of the exact value of the smallest Greek particles, the same accurate apprehension of grammatical details, and the same careful weighing of conflicting claims of interpretation, which characterised those useful works. We cannot speak so highly of the theological value of this book, as the notes reveal too clearly a bias in favour of Anglican High Church theology of the old type, which shows itself especially in such passages as have to do with the Lord's Supper. It is, however, but fair to say that on the much-contested verse, 1 Cor. xi. 29, "not discerning the Lord's body," the testimony of the Bishop is clear and emphatic against the thought of "the wicked and such as be void of a lively faith" receiving more than "the sign or sacrament of so great a thing."

It is, however, as a collection of materials for forming a judgment on points of interpretation that this commentary is to be valued, rather than as exhibiting a critical judgment to be always trusted. It seems strange at times how the clearest guidance of the context can be ignored, as for example, in the exposition of 1 Cor. iii. 12—15, where the Bishop in rejecting the thought of the "gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble," referring to persons, omits all reference to a verse close by "ye are God's building," which seems to decide the question; as Bengel saw when he wrote "the former denote men that are true believers; the latter hypocrites." However, in concluding his comments, the Bishop rightly says, "The whole passage should be compared with Mal. iii. 1, &c., and iv. 1, &c.," and any one who does so may see that "jewels" and "stubble," there spoken of, evidently represent persons.

The commentary is a most valuable addition to the growing light of modern hermeneutical criticism on this interesting Epistle. It occupies a position of its own for grammatical exposition, which none of the other valuable commentaries, which have of late appeared, at all reach; in this department Bishop Ellicott still remains facile princeps.

Among the Churches.

* We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.*

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Church Emigration Society will send out a fifth party of emigrants from Liverpool at the end of July.

The Church Army are about to commence a six months' mission in South London. The Conference Hall in the Clapham-road will serve as head-quarters.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, in an interesting retrospect of Church work in England, states, two thousand new churches have been built in the last fifty years. There have been also eight thousand restorations; the total cost of these works being more than thirty millions sterling.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The congregation of Finsbury Chapel has been nearly doubled, forty-five new members have been added to the church, and every department of work revived, since Rev. T. Kench accepted the pastorate twelve months ago.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A series of special services was commenced on the 12th inst. at St. Andrew's Church, Upper Norwood, by Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson.

Sixty new members sat down to the communion at Rev. Z. B. Woffendale's church at Somers Town on Sunday evening last week.

Rev. William Fraser, of Brighton, brother of Dr. Donald Fraser, is rather seriously indisposed, and will be absent from his pulpit for several weeks.

BAPTIST.

Rev. R. Turner Sole, late of Harrow-on-the-Hill, has resigned the honorary secretaryship of the "Missionary Training Home," Drayton Park.

The Committee of the Missionary Society have arranged to send to the Congo Mission Mr. Harrison, of Bristol College, and Mr. P. Brown, of the Pastors' College, and two female teachers, to carry on the work of the girls' school.

At the annual meeting of the Shropshire Association, the chairman, Rev. E. Stanton, gave an address on "Power from on high, the great need of the Church." A petition to the House of Commons was also adopted for the suppression of Sunday trading in intoxicating liquors.

SALVATION ARMY.

Five of the cadets in the Ceylon Training Home at one time were Buddhists.

In the course of a wonderful three days' work at St. Helen's over one hundred persons came out to the penitent form.

Since the Rescue Home at Belfast was opened in February last, eighty-three young women have passed through it—some to good situations and some to their friends.

Since the new barracks were opened at Hendon, the officers and soldiers have provided lunch and tea, and held special meetings with much success on all bank holidays.

Mrs. Webb, who has spent eight months in slum work, says that of thirty-seven penitents, twenty-three were good cases, and the other fourteen are under deep conviction. There are now twenty-five slum officers fully employed.

A new Home for the Prison Gate Brigade at Melbourne, Australia, has been opened. Since the Brigade was first formed more than three thousand ex-prisoners have been received, of whom 60 per cent. are now leading moral and useful lives. There is a branch brigade formed at Ballarat.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

New York yearly meeting began on May 25, at Glens Falls. On the 27th, at a devotional meeting, there were about one hundred "testimonies" delivered.

The twenty-first annual gathering of the "Bible School Conference" met on May 24, at Mooresville, Indiana, 600 to 800 attending its three days' sittings. Among the resolutions unanimously passed were, one in favour of Social Purity, avowing the moral law to be as binding on men as on women, and one supporting total abstinence for the individual, and Prohibition for the State.

METHODIST.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse will extend his American visit to Chatauqua.

The Sunday scholars at Kirkdale, Liverpool, raise about £100 yearly for missionary purposes.

Very successful services have been held at Penmaenmawr, in connection with the inauguration of an English cause.

Rev. T. Cook, Connexional evangelist, and Mr. Joshua Dawson, of Weardale, have recently conducted an eight days' mission at Lerwick, Shetland. Great blessing has resulted.

Sir Lionel Pilkington, Bart., an Episcopalian, has given a site on his estate near Wakefield for the erection of a village chapel, to take the place of one opened sixty-five years ago.

The missionary committee has unanimously adopted a petition to Parliament against the continued maintenance of legalised vice in India and elsewhere, and its recent introduction into Burmah.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Philip Fowler, Methodist minister of Bristol.—Mr. Wm. Henry Councell, who was greatly instrumental in the rebuilding of the Wesleyan Chapel at Thornbury, in which John Wesley preached.—Mr. John Rowe, of Smethwick, near Birmingham.—Rev. W. Panckridge, Rector of St. Bartholomew-the-Great, West Smithfield. —Dr. Fleming, the Secretary of the Church Association. Rev. John Addyman, Methodist minister, of Dewsbury. —Rev. John P. Lockwood, a Wesleyan minister, well known throughout Yorkshire and the North generally.—Mr. Joseph Wilson, of Glossop-road Church, Sheffield. —Rev. John Fleming, prison chaplain of Edinburgh.—Ex-provost Ferguson.—Dr. Richard Newton, Rector of the Episcopal Church of the Covenant at Philadelphia, and the well-known author of books for the young.—Mr. George Davidson, for fifty years an elder in St. Andrew's Church, Kingston.—Rev. Dr. Cornish, Principal of New Inn Hall, Oxford.—Rev. T. Lee, Methodist minister, of Bradford.—Rev. Marshall Hall Vine, for many years Rector of St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside.—Mrs. W. G. Thomas, of Carnarvon, a prominent temperance worker.

INDIGENT BLIND.

The annual meeting of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society was held on Wednesday afternoon, last week, at 35, Park-street, Grosvenor-square, the residence of Lord Ebury, its president. His lordship remarked on the disinterested labours of Dr. Armitage on behalf of the blind; to him it was due that at the present moment there is scarcely a poor blind person in London but is partaking of the benefits offered by this association.

The report states that more than nine hundred blind persons are regularly visited by the eleven blind agents of the Society, who act as missionaries; from their special knowledge they are also able to advise those whom they visit as to the best means of partially or wholly supporting themselves. Classes for instruction in reading and writing are held weekly. Fifty-two have become sufficiently good writers to be em- employed by the British and Foreign Blind Association in embossing books by hand in the Braill system. The Society pays guides for taking blind people to places of worship and elsewhere. About sixty women taught in the Society's classes are employed by Mrs. Armitage in knitting, crochet, and netting.

Dr. Donald Fraser pleaded for a Society which does so much for the helpless blind. Mr. W. J. Tennant spoke of what he has himself seen of the comfort and help given by the Society. He especially mentioned one case which showed the great intellectual delight it was the means of bestowing. Visiting a blind girl, he found her occupied in writing, and in reply to a question she said she was writing "In Memoriam," the prelude to which she then recited with an emphasis and impressiveness that would have given to the noble author, had he been present, far more delight than a dozen reviews. Rev. Styleman Herring and Rev. H. Bromley also spoke of what they had witnessed of the beneficial results of the visitation of the agents of the Society. Dr. Tyndal Robertson, M.P. for Brighton, who is himself blind, expressed his warm sympathy with its objects and work, and referred to some kindred work in his own town.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.

Dear Sir,—As you have introduced my name in connection with Canon Fausset's paper in The British Weekly, in which he professes to meet my argument taken from Ps. cx. 1, allow me a few lines in reply.

In the first place, although he quotes the title of my book it is evident that he has not read it. If he had, he would have observed that it is the Father and not the Son that is to make his enemies his footstool. If it were the Son it would be by outward judgments; but as it is to be by the Father it must be by converting grace. I have shown that the Father's work is purely evangelistic. No man can come to Christ unless the Father draw him; and it is He alone who gives the souls to Christ as his inheritance. When the Father, therefore, makes Christ's enemies his footstool, Paul shows that it is by making them subject to Christ, as Christ will at last be subject to the Father (1 Cor. xv. 28).

In the second place, Canon Fausset, in trying to escape one difficulty, falls into a much greater, which lands him in the post-Millennianism which he seeks to avoid. He says that the time when the Son sits at the Father's right hand includes the Millennium. If so the heavens must retain Him till after the Millennium. I cannot allow the Canon to escape this conclusion by saying that "Christ as the Son of God never gives up his session on the Father's throne." I could scarcely believe my eyes when I read this sentence. When the Father says, "Sit Thou on my right hand till I make thine enemies thy footstool;" does not that imply that the Son was not always to sit there? and does not Paul expressly say that He must reign until the Father has put all things under his feet; and when He has done so then shall the Son also be subject to Him that put all things under Him. If it is true that Christ is never to rise from the Father's right hand, then the promise to make his enemies his footstool would not be due until the Greek Calends. Canon Fausset has not even touched my argument.

I make no pretensions to be an interpreter of unfulfilled prophecy, neither do I deny the pre-Millennial coming, but I hold tenaciously that the Father is pledged to make Christ's enemies his footstool before He rises from the Father's right hand to return to earth again.—I am, &c.,

Edinburgh, June 16. James Gall.

P.S.—I reserve my defence on the subject of the leaven till next week.—J. G.

NIGHT-TIME SERVICE.

Dear Sir,—In compiling the "Notes on Daily Readings," which appeared in last week's number, I was much struck by a thought suggested by Psalm cxxxiv. 1, and, as there was not room in the space at disposal to do justice to it in the "Notes," I would ask you to allow me to lay it before your readers.

The present dispensation is one of "night" time service in "the house of the Lord." "The night is far spent" (Rom. xiii. 12); still it is "the night" during which "the rulers of the darkness of this world" are yet in possession. The attitude of God's servants is thus described: "Ye servants of the Lord, which by night stand in the house of the Lord;" and, as was remarked, "standing is the proper attitude of servants, as service in his house calls for a reverential recognition of Him whose house it is. Now, in contrast to this, mark the attitude of "the man of sin," in 2 Thess. ii. 4. "He sitteth in the temple of God" (the words "as God" are now omitted, as having but little authority), "setting himself forth as God" (R.V.), or, as the Greek word would almost suggest, "showing himself off as God."

If standing in the house of the Lord be the right attitude for his true servants, their rest (Rev. xvi. 13), being still future, and their reigning with Christ not having yet begun, what are we to think of the assumption of judicial authority in the house of God, such as the priest assumes sitting in the Confessional, and requiring penitents to kneel to him and confess to him as to God, and daring to pronounce absolution as God?

And what are we to think of the head of this priesthood, who claims infallibility for his ex cathedrâ definitions regarding faith or morals?—ominous expression, denoting the sitting one! The thought is suggestive, and as such I commend it to your readers, merely remarking that I have long had the conviction that the old Protestant interpretation of 2 Thess. ii. 4 should not be limited to the Pope personally, as being the power of evil there referred to, but should comprehend the whole priesthood, of which he is the head, and which is proclaimed to the world in those gigantic letters which surround the inside of the dome of St Peter's at Rome—Inde exoritur unitas Sacerdotii: "From hence does the unity of the priesthood take its rise."

Dear Sir,—Our attention having been called to a letter under the heading of "The Doré Gallery and the Jubilee," signed by Maurice Gregory (Hon. Sec. Gospel Purity Association—department for the Suppression of Immoral Publications), in The Christian, of June 10, we must request you, in vindication of our position and in refutation of the unwarranted statements made therein to our detriment, to publish the following correspondence, which we think you must have overlooked, as it should otherwise have been sufficient to cause you to refuse insertion to the letter in question:—

The Editor of "The Christian" to Messrs. Fairless & Beeforth—Doré Gallery.

12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., May 20.

Gentlemen,—Complaints reach us concerning the "nude female paintings in the small room of the Doré Gallery." One correspondent writes:—"These reclining figures, though exquisitely painted, are sadly out of place in the sacred presence of the Lord in 'The Ascension' and 'Ecce Homo.' Cannot they be moved at least during the time in June when the free admission will be granted to Sunday-school teachers and others? They used not to be there, and the Gallery used to be a safe place to take the young to." We, therefore, beg to lay the matter before you for your thoughtful consideration. If people do not want to see such pictures there is no object gained in forcing them upon their gaze. Still we of course leave the matter in your hands.

Doré Gallery, 35, New Bond-street, W., May 24.

Dear Sir,—It is quite a matter of opinion whether such pictures in the Doré Gallery (Francesca, Andromeda, and La Vigne), as you refer to, are objectionable or otherwise. From our point of view we see nothing demoralising, but something distinctly elevating, in the representation of the nude form, provided the motive or sentiment of the work be of a pure and innocent character; all depends upon that. The pictures in question have always been in the Gallery, and they are placed in such a position that they would be unnoticed entirely unless visitors prefer to see them, when they are visible by persons penetrating round the corner of the small room where they are placed.

If there is any objection to their exhibition, the feelings of those who have a dislike to such works can easily be respected by having a curtain placed over them during the evenings which are set aside for their enjoyment. We are, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

Fairless & Beeforth.

The Editor of The Christian.

From the Editor of "The Christian" to Messrs. Fairless & Beeforth.

12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., May 28.

Gentlemen,—We are much obliged for your kind reply, and knowing as we do the feelings of the majority of Sunday-school teachers, we are sure they would appreciate your courteous consideration in covering the pictures in question during the hours you have kindly invited their visits.

In deference to the opinions of the class of persons on whose behalf you wrote to us, and in accordance with the promise made to you in the letter quoted above, we gave orders that the paintings to which objection had been taken should be concealed from view on the evenings of the month during which free admission had been offered to Sunday-school teachers and others, and you may satisfy yourself by inquiring among such visitors that the regulation has been in force since the commencement of that period.

Although this simple statement of fact sufficiently disposes of the general objection made to the three paintings of classical type in the Doré Gallery in connection with the occasion in question, the letter of this censor of public morality contains, under the head of "The Doré Gallery," so many false statements, innuendos, and conclusions, which leave on the minds of careless readers the general impression that the gallery is a centre for the exhibition and diffusion of pictorial impropriety, that it becomes necessary for us to refer to some of these statements in detail.

We, therefore, resent the impertinent patronage of the writer of this letter in bestowing his condescendingly qualified approbation that "on the face of it this offer of the proprietors of the Doré Gallery looks like an act of disinterested benevolence, but it must be noted that engravings of these 'nude,' and other paintings, are on sale." So far from that statement being true, our orders have been that no business whatever should be transacted with persons availing themselves of our invitation to visit the gallery during the appointed period.

Another misleading paragraph in this letter is that "Small photographs of these works are being sold and circulated by thousands among the boys and youths of London." Although this statement has reference to works of "nude art" exhibited in various galleries, the Doré Gallery will necessarily be supposed to be included in this category. We are, therefore, driven by this subtle and insidious form of attack to state that no photographs—large or small—of any painting whatever has been published or sold at the Doré Gallery since its establishment nearly twenty years ago.

Although it is not our province to defend another artist than M. Doré, whose work has been singled out for attack, we cannot let the statement pass (probably unknown to the gentleman so held up to scorn, who is a distinguished member of the Royal Academy), that he "is now exhibiting a 'nude' production of his at a shilling a head, which is so gross that it was either refused by the authorities of the Royal Academy, or was not offered for exhibition." We have personal knowledge that this beautiful work, so shamefully described, was sold, and in the possession of its present owner, before the time appointed by the R. A. for the reception of pictures for the current exhibition, to which it would otherwise have been sent.—We are, Sir, your obedient servants,

Fairless & Beeforth.

Doré Gallery, 35, New Bond-street, June 13.

[A word of explanation is called for from us in reference to the above correspondence. The writer of the notes from the Editor had been called away from town and Mr. Gregory's letter coming in his absence was inserted without his knowledge, in ignorance on the part of those left in charge that this correspondence had taken place.—Ed.]

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Dear Sir,—Pray correct a mistake in your last number. In a paragraph headed "Church Missionary Society" you say:—"Of eighty-two University graduates who offered for missionary work, eighteen have, during the last twelve months, been accepted by the Church Missionary Society," &c. Now the "eighty-two" were not all University men. That figure represents the whole number of definite offers from all kinds of candidates in the twelve months (in addition to numerous other inquiries, &c.). Out of the eighty-two, thirty-four were accepted; and of the thirty-four, eighteen were University men. No University man was refused. All this is quite clearly stated in our report.

It will be a grand day when eighty-two University graduates offer for missionary work in one year!—Faithfully yours,

Eugene Stock, Edit. Sec., C.M.S.

OUR SOLDIERS.—Miss Herdman, of Melrose, N.B., addressed, on Thursday last week, a very large number of the soldiers at Canterbury. There was a deep devotional spirit in the meeting, and there is reason to believe many were led to repentance.

TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.—The fourteenth annual report of this excellent institution is of a character to encourage the non-alcoholic treatment of patients suffering from any kind of disease. One fact is clearly brought out, that this is a general hospital, and that the cases are of the same kind as those admitted elsewhere. Nearly half of the more than four thousand in-patients treated since its opening have been non-abstainers, and the rate of mortality during the whole period has been very low. Last year over 25,000 out-patients were treated, the total number of attendances being, of course, many times larger. The hospital is in the Hampstead-road.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE HOLIDAY

Many of the little Girls — Members of the Theatrical Mission—are looking forward to this Summer Outing. TEN DAYS at the SEASIDE works wonders for those whose nightly toil renders them susceptible of Consumption, Rheumatism, and St. Vitus Dance. Much Spiritual Blessing rested on the visit to Lowestoft last year. Littlehampton is proposed as the place of sojourn this Summer. Contributions are earnestly solicited, however small, by

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS

FARNINGHAM AND SWANLEY (Commenced 1863).

President:—THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

THE COTTAGE HOMES AT FARNINGHAM

Are for 300 Little Boys, homeless or in danger of falling into crime. They are clothed, fed, educated, and taught a trade, and then provided with outfit and placed in situations, while they are looked after as "Old Boys."

THE ORPHAN HOMES AT SWANLEY

Are for 200 Orphan or Fatherless Boys, who are wholly maintained and educated, and receive technical instruction in lithography, telegraphy, photography, chemistry, and other subjects, to fit them for a working life.

BASIS:—"The Institution is Scriptural, but Unsectarian; and the boys are educated in the fear of God and in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures."

FUNDS are URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 500 Boys now in the Homes. Over 1000 have already been sent out into the world.

Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Congregational Collections, and Bequests are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, Office of The Christian; or the Secretary,

"There are few biographies that contain so many lessons, and withal so many warnings, as that of Jacob. In re-telling the story of Jacob's life, Mr. Meyer has done a good service; especially to young men, to whom we heartily commend the book."—Primitive Methodist World.

"The author has contrived to adapt the incidents of Jacob's life to modern times in a very entertaining manner. Mr. Meyer's style is calculated to make the Bible and its characters live in the hearts of his hearers."—Literary World.

"No one can read these pages without being edified. The author's style is clear, vigorous, and interesting; and a thoroughly evangelical tone pervades the book. He gives one piece of practical advice to ministers of the Gospel, which many of our readers will be glad to see reproduced here: 'To recruit a dwindling congregation; to sustain interest in a crowded one; to awaken new devotion to the Bible; and to touch the many chords of human life—there is nothing to be compared with a reverent re-telling of the Stories of Bible Heroes and Saints.'"
English Churchman.

"The Addresses are pithy and pointed; fervid and faithful; searching and striking; and will profitably reward repeated perusals. The volume is beautifully got up; is richly illustrated; and it costs but two shillings and sixpence. No Sunday-school library ought to be without it. It would prove a very acceptable prize or present to young people."—Oldham Chronicle.

THE WORKER'S CALL.

"Let him that heareth say, Come."—REV. xxii. 17.

Oh sister, hast thou heard
The music of that word
Which speaks sweet pardon to the burdened soul?
Know'st thou the balm that makes the wounded whole?
The precious blood that cleanseth from all sin,
The voice of Jesus speaking peace within?

Oh brother, hast thou known
That Saviour as thine own?
Go then, his praise, his truth, his love proclaim,
Tell of redemption through his blessed name;
Tell of salvation perfect, full, and free,
The grace that sought, the love that died for thee!

Dost thou not hear Him say,
"Go, work for Me to-day;
The fields lie white, but labourers are few:
Is there no work of love that thou canst do?
No heart that waits to hear thee whisper, 'Come?'
No weary soul that longs for rest and home?"

Oh friend, if thou hast heard
His life-inspiring Word,
Go, tell the love that thy deep yearnings filled,
The wondrous peace that all thy strivings stilled.
The fields lie white,—shall not thine answer be,
"Behold thy servant, Lord: send me, send me!"

What though thy Lord shall call
Thee to relinquish all
Thy heart holds dear; to follow Him afar
'Neath Southern Cross or distant Polar star?
Fear not, nor shrink, if thus his cause thou plead;
Shall not his grace suffice for all thy need?

Or, if his word shall be
"Child, I have need of thee
Within the precincts of thy home; for there
Souls are athirst, and heads bowed down with care."
Thus in the common walks of every day
Thy lips, thy life, shall show the Truth, the Way.

Oh, canst thou idle rest,
Nor heed his last behest?
Shall myriads perish while thou sittest dumb?
Hast heard his voice?—go, then, bid others come—
The vile, the sin-stained, whosoever will;
The cleansing fountain floweth freely still.

Dear friends whom He hath loved,
Shall not our hearts be moved
To bear his message to the lost, the dying?
Beside our path poor souls for light are crying,
And hearts are cold, and sad, and Hope lies numb—
Oh tell them Jesus lives, and bid them "Come!"

Appeals.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN.—This Home, at College Avenue, Hackney, having become too small for the work, Miss RYE appeals for help with the object of purchasing a larger house, so that more blind children may enjoy its advantages.

SUMMER EXCURSIONS.—Mrs. FISHER (30, Oakley-road, N.) would be thankful to any who could grant her the use of fields or gardens in the neighbourhood of the Forest, to which she might take a few parties of Christian girls. She will find the tea and take all responsibility.

THE LITTLE ACTRESSES' SEASIDE HOLIDAY.—Earnest appeal is made for funds to carry out the arrangement of the Theatrical Mission, by which some of the most delicate of the juvenile members of Macready House will have a ten days' change at the seaside. Communications should be addressed, "Seaside Fund," Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

HELP FOR THE FALLEN.—Rev. C. P. BAXTER, Chaplain of the Central London Sick Asylum, Cleveland-street, W., appeals for subscriptions that he may help fallen and penitent women, who from time to time are admitted to the Asylum to lead virtuous lives, by finding suitable homes for them when discharged, and as far as possible protecting them from the vicious.

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.—Several children of dock labourers and needy widows are now staying at Brigadier, the holiday home of this Institution. Last week a number of factory girls were provided with tea at the Mission Hall, Bow. Earnest appeal is made for funds to carry on this work. Contributions to the director, Mr. WM. CHORLEY, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury.

REV. JOSEPH A. ELLIOTT, Wesleyan Mission House, Fyzabad, Oudh, India, writes:—"If some of your readers would send a few illustrated Christian tracts, and some children's papers, it would confer a great benefit on us here—the soldiers and their children, the hospitals, and also the native Christians and the English-speaking natives. It will not matter if they are old; they will be welcomed when they come. If donors would put their names on the packets I could write and thank them."

THE KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—Miss C. MASON, of the House of Rest, Kilburn, writes to say that her work attains its majority this year. She desires to mark the event in some special manner, and suggests that £2000 should be raised as a birthday present to the Institution. This would enable her to purchase the freehold of the seaside house at Eastbourne, and also put all the houses into thorough repair, which they are much needing; and a balance would be left in hand to relieve the many pressing necessities of invalided and aged Christian workers, for whom she has never yet been enabled to make adequate provision.

Forthcoming Meetings.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT Y.M.C.A.—A conference of delegates from the various associations in this district was held last week at Southport, the principal subject for discussion being the extension of Y.M.C.A. work to the villages. Mr. T. W. Gladstone (Southport) read an admirable and well-thought-out paper on "Village Lads, and what can we do for them?" Two suggestions may be especially referred to—the one that a band of young men from the town Association should from time to time visit the villages, and hold an open-air meeting or service, at the close inviting the young men to visit the Association whenever possible. The other was that two or more Christian men in a village should act as auxiliaries for the nearest Association, holding monthly meetings, and in various ways seeking to influence the young people around, and, when these leave the village, giving them letters of introduction to the secretary of the place to which they are going. An interesting discussion ensued.
